Mr. CARR. I move to reconsider the vote by which the yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER. It is the constitutional right of one-fifth of the members present to have the yeas and nays.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 170, nays 57, not voting 64; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Ainsworth, Ashe, Bagby, George A. Bagley, John H. Baker, William H. Baker, Ballou, Banks, Belford, Blair, Bradley, Bright, John Young Brown, William R. Brown, Horatio C. So the motion to reconsider was laid upon the table.

During the roll-call,

Mr. PHELPS said: I am paired upon this question with Mr. ODELL. If he were here he would vote "no" and I should vote "ay."

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded; and the question recurred on the resolution offered by Mr. POPPLETON, as amended by the substitute of Mr. WOOD, of New York.

Mr. WALLING. Upon this question I ask to be excused from voting.

Mr. VANCE, of Ohio. I move that the request of my colleague be granted.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not entertain the motion.

Mr. WALLING. Then I appeal most respectfully from that decision of the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not entertain the appeal, and the question, the Chair repeats, is upon the adoption of the original proposition as amended by the substitute of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. WOOD.]

Mr. WELLS, of Mississippi. Upon that question I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 207, nays 26, not voting 57; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ainsworth, Ashe, Atkins, Bagby, George A. Bagley, John H. Bagley, jr., John H. Baker, Ballou, Banks, Banning, Belford, Bliss, Blount, Boone, Bradley, Bright, John Young Brown, William R. Williams, and Jere N. Williams—57.

So the resolution, as amended, was adopted.

During the roll-call the following proceedings took place:

Mr. WAIT. I am paired upon this question with Mr. CALDWELL, of Alabama; if he were here he would vote "ay," and I should vote "no."

Mr. PHELPS. I am paired upon this question with Mr. ODELL; if he were here I suppose he would vote "no," and I should vote "ay."

Mr. MONEY. I move that the reading of the names be dispensed with. [Loud cries of "Object!"]

Mr. WALLING. I rise to a question of order. The reporting of this vote is a very important matter, as it is upon a very important question.

Mr. EDEN. I call the gentleman from Ohio to order; no debate is in order while the House is dividing.

Mr. WALLING. I insist that order be restored before the roll-call proceeds.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. COCHRANE.) The Chair sustains the point of order and respectfully suggests to gentlemen in the Hall, and especially to those in the rear of the seats, that they preserve order. The officers of the House will see that gentlemen are seated.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

So the resolution, as amended, was adopted.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. I move to reconsider the vote by which the resolution, as amended, has been adopted.

Mr. HALE. And I move to lay that motion on the table.

Mr. WELLS, of Mississippi. On that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 174, nays 59, not voting 57; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Ainsworth, Bagby, George A. Bagley, John H. Baker, William H. Baker, Ballou, Banks, Belford, Bell, Blair, Bland, Blount, Bradley, Bright, John Young Brown, William R. Brown, Horatio C. Burchard, Samuel D. Walker, Gilbert C. Walker, Alexander S. Wallace, John W. Wallace, Warren, Watterson, Erastus Wells, G. Wiley Wells, White, Whitehouse, Whiting, Wike, Willard, Andrew Williams, Alpheus S. Williams, Charles G. Williams, James Williams, William B. Williams, Willis, Benjamin Wilson, James Wilson, Alan Wood, jr., Fernando Wood, Woodburn, Woodworth, Yeates, and Young—174.

NAYS—Messrs. Atkins, John H. Bagley, jr., Banning, Blackburn, Bliss, Boone, William P. Caldwell, Carr, Cate, John B. Clarke of Kentucky, John B. Clark, jr., of Missouri, Clymer, Cochrane, Collins, Cowan, Culberson, Dibrell, Douglas, Finley, Forney, Franklin, Glover, Andrew H. Hamilton, John T. Harris, Hartzell, Henkle, Hooker, Humphreys, Thomas L. Jones, Lane, Luttrell, Lynde, McMahon, Meade, Mills, Money, Mutchler, John F. Philips, Poppleton, Rice, Riddle, Roberts, Miles Ross, Sheakley, Southard, Sparks, Springer, Stanton, Terry, Thompson, Turney, John L. Vance, Robert B. Vance, Waddell, Walling, Walsh, Whitthorne, Wigginton, and Jere N. Williams—59.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Abbott, Anderson, Ashe, Bass, Beebe, Bradford, Buckner, Cabell, John H. Caldwell, Chapin, Cook, Cox, Darrall, Durand, Durham, Ellis, Field, Fuller, Gibson, Goode, Robert Hamilton, Henry R. Harris, Hartridge, Hays, Abram S. Hewitt, Goldsmith W. Hewitt, Holman, Hopkins, Hunton, Hurd, Knott, Franklin Landers, Lewis, Lord, Maish, Metcalfe, Milliken, Morrison, Odell, Phelps, Piper, Reagan, Robinson, Schleicher, Schumaker, Singleton, Slemons, Stephens, Stone, Tucker, Wait, Ward, Warner, Wheeler, and Wilshire—57.

So the motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

During the call of the roll the following announcements were made:

Mr. WAIT. I am paired with Mr. CALDWELL, of Alabama; if he was here I should vote "ay;" I cannot say how he would vote.

Mr. PHELPS. I am paired with Mr. ODELL, of New York; if he was here he would vote "ay," and I would vote "no."

Mr. STONE. I desire to state that Mr. DURHAM, of Kentucky, and Mr. HARRIS, of Georgia, are absent on account of indisposition.

Mr. LANE. I ask that the reading of the names be dispensed with.

Mr. LUTTRELL. I object.

The Clerk read the names, after which the result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. I suggest that the Senate be now notified that the House is ready to receive them; I make no motion to that effect.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I desire to submit an order notifying the Senate——

Mr. PAGE. I object to any resolution or order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the House that he has allowed a vote to be taken on every legitimate legislative motion. He has allowed the motion to reconsider to be voted upon whenever it has been made, so that the House might have an opportunity to correct any error it might have committed. The House has had an opportunity to vote on the motion to lay on the table the propositions themselves, and on the motions to reconsider the vote upon those propositions. Now, when the House has advanced to a declaration of its judgment on the objection to counting the vote from the State of Vermont, it is brought to the following paragraph of the law, as its guide and its mandatory instructions:

When the two Houses have voted they shall immediately again meet, and the Presiding Officer shall then announce the decision of the question submitted.

The Senate has notified the House of its action upon the objection to counting the vote from Vermont. The House has now reached its judgment upon the objection, and as far as the Chair is concerned it is his duty, by the terms of the act, mandatory and ministerial, to notify the Senate to that effect.

Mr. O'BRIEN. Therefore I have offered this order to carry out the law.

Cries of "Regular order!" and "Object!"

Mr. LANE. I insist upon the enforcement of the rule.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is going to enforce the rule.

Mr. LANE. I insist that it shall be strictly enforced. [Laughter.]

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire, before the Clerk notifies the Senate, to ask unanimous consent that the following be added to the notice to the Senate:

That the President of the Senate bring with him and lay before the Senate and House of Representatives the double return from the State of Vermont which was offered in joint convention yesterday.

Many MEMBERS. "I object." "I object."

The SPEAKER. Gentlemen need not object; the Chair, under the law, has no right to recognize any such motion.

Mr. SPRINGER. We have a right, before we are again called into joint convention, to pass upon all the objections; we have not yet done so.

The SPEAKER. Nothing is in order but to carry out the mandatory provision of the law.

Mr. WALLING. I think I can make a suggestion that will be satisfactory to all sides, that will be agreed to by the House unanimously.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would be very happy, when he is allowed to recognize the gentleman, to have him make a proposition that will satisfy all sides; but the Chair is not now able to recognize the gentleman for that purpose.

Mr. WALLING. Would not the Chair recognize a proposition——

Mr. COX. By which the Speaker might count in Mr. Hayes without any further procrastination.

Mr. WALLING. For unanimous consent that at a particular time this evening, when a certain stage of the proceedings is reached, and when objections are made to the counting of the vote of any State, that a recess shall be taken as was agreed to last night?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of opinion that he cannot entertain any such motion.

At ten o'clock and fifty-five minutes p. m. the Doorkeeper announced the Senate of the United States, who then entered the Hall, headed by their President pro tempore and accompanied by their Sergeant-at-Arms and Doorkeeper.

The President of the Senate took the chair as presiding officer of the joint convention.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint meeting of Congress resumes its session. The two Houses separately having determined the objection to the certificate from the State of Vermont, the Secretary of the Senate will now read the resolution of the Senate.

The Secretary of the Senate read as follows:

Resolved, That the vote of Henry N. Sollace, as an elector for the State of Vermont, be counted, together with the other four electoral votes of that State, the objections to the contrary notwithstanding.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Clerk of the House will now read the resolution of the House.

The Clerk of the House read as follows:

Ordered, That the vote of Henry N. Sollace, claiming to be an elector from the State of Vermont, be not counted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The two Houses not having concurred in an affirmative vote to reject one of the votes from the State of Vermont, the whole vote of that State will be counted. The tellers will announce the vote.

Senator INGALLS, (one of the tellers.) The State of Vermont casts

5 votes for Rutherford B. Hayes, of Ohio, as President, and 5 votes for William A. Wheeler, of New York, as Vice-President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Having opened the certificate received by messenger from the State of Virginia, the Chair hands the same to the tellers to be read in the presence and hearing of the two Houses. The corresponding one received by mail is also handed to the tellers.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. Mr. President, I suggest that the result be announced without the full reading of the papers.

Mr. LANE and others objected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made, and the certificate will be read in full.

The certificate having been read by Mr. COOK (one of the tellers) and there being no objection thereto, the vote of Virginia was counted—11 votes for Samuel J. Tilden, of New York, as President, and 11 votes for Thomas A. Hendricks, of Indiana, as Vice-President.

The certificate from the State of West Virginia was next opened; and having been read by Mr. STONE, (one of the tellers,) and there being no objections thereto, the vote of West Virginia was counted—5 votes for Samuel J. Tilden, of New York, as President, and 5 votes for Thomas A. Hendricks, of Indiana, as Vice-President.

The certificate from the State of Wisconsin was next opened; and, it having been read by Mr. ALLISON, (one of the tellers,)

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there any objections to the certificate from the State of Wisconsin?

Mr. LYNDE. I send to the Chair an objection.

The objection was read; as follows, by Mr. ADAMS, Clerk of the House:

The undersigned, Senators and Representatives, object to the counting of the vote of Daniel L. Downs as an elector for the State of Wisconsin, upon the following grounds, namely:

That the said Daniel L. Downs held the office of pension surgeon and of examining surgeon for the Pension Office, by valid appointment under the laws of the United States, prior to the 7th day of November, 1876, the day of the presidential election, and upon said day and upon the 6th day of December, 1876, at the time of his assuming to cast a vote as elector for the State of Wisconsin, and that he has continually held said office from a long period prior to the said 7th day of November, 1876, until the present time; and the undersigned therefore state that said Downs, as pension surgeon and as examining surgeon for the Pension Office as aforesaid, held an office of trust and profit under the United States on the day of the presidential election and on the day that he voted as an elector for the State of Wisconsin, and therefore could not be constitutionally appointed an elector for the State of Wisconsin or vote as such under the Constitution of the United States.

Wherefore the undersigned aver that the said Downs was not duly appoined an elector for the said State, and that his vote cannot be constitutionally counted. And the undersigned hereto annex the evidence of the facts above stated and to be taken as a part of their objections.

W. H. BARNUM, Connecticut;
J. E. McDONALD, Indiana;
JAS. K. KELLY, Oregon;
HENRY COOPER, Tennessee;
JOHN W. JOHNSTON, Virginia;
Senators.

WM. P. LYNDE, Wisconsin;
J. F. PHILIPS, Missouri;
SAML. D. BURCHARD,
J. R. TUCKER, Virginia;
WM. M. SPRINGER,
A. V. RICE, Ohio;
JOHN L. VANCE, Ohio;
CASEY YOUNG, Tennessee;
H. D. MONEY,
Representatives.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there further objections to the certificate from the State of Wisconsin? If there be none the Senate will now withdraw to its Chamber, that the Houses separately may consider and determine the objection.

The Senate retired at eleven o'clock and twenty-five minutes p. m.

The House was again called to order.

Mr. MILLS. I rise to a question of privilege. I submit the following resolution——

Mr. HOGE and others. I object.

Mr. O'BRIEN. Wait till you hear it read.

The SPEAKER. The Chair suggests that it may be read for information.

Mr. RUSK. It is too long.

Mr. CONGER. I submit that the first regular business is the reading of the objections. I ask that they may be read.

Mr. LUTTRELL. Would it be in order to move that the House take a recess until ten o'clock to-morrow morning. If so, I make that motion.

The SPEAKER. That is in order.

Mr. MILLS. I had the floor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California [Mr. LUTTRELL] moves to take a recess till ten o'clock to-morrow morning.

Mr. MILLS. I will yield for that purpose with the understanding that I have the floor.

Mr. WOOD, of New York, and others. No understanding!

Mr. GARFIELD. I rise to a privileged motion touching the business before us. I move to suspend the rules and adopt the following resolution——

Mr. COX. Regular order!

Mr. GARFIELD. A motion to suspend the rules is in order.

Mr. ATKINS. I understood the Chair recognized the gentleman from Texas and it was understood by the enunciation of the Chair that the paper was to be read for information. Now I want to know if the gentleman from Texas is to be pushed off the floor by the gentleman from Ohio by a superior motion?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas has not been pushed off the floor. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from California, [Mr. LUTTRELL,] however, to make the motion that the House take a recess until to-morrow morning at ten o'clock.

Mr. MILLS. Will that interfere with my question of privilege?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Texas afterward. The Chair does not know yet what the motion of the gentleman from Texas is.

Mr. LUTTRELL. I make the motion in good faith that the House take a recess until ten o'clock to-morrow morning. We have been working hard all this day.

Mr. PAGE. I object.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. We have had twelve hours and a half of good faith. [Laughter.]

Mr. GARFIELD. I rise to a question of order. I make the point that the motion to suspend the rules takes precedence.

Mr. O'BRIEN. The motion to take a recess is of the highest order, and not debatable.

Mr. GARFIELD. The motion to suspend the rules is of the highest privilege.

The SPEAKER. The Chair entertains the motion of the gentleman from California to take a recess until to-morrow morning at ten o'clock.

Mr. MILLS. Do I understand the Chair that I have the floor in the morning in preference to others?

The SPEAKER. That depends upon what proposition the gentleman from Texas makes.

Mr. MILLS. I ask my privileged motion be read now.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is really bound to recognize the gentleman who has presented the objections, the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. LYNDE.] But the Chair desires to accommodate himself, as far as he is permitted to do so under the rules, to the wishes of each and every member of the House. The gentleman from California moves the House take a recess until to-morrow morning at ten o'clock.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Should the Chair put the question on the motion made by the gentleman from California, that the House take a recess until to-morrow morning at ten o'clock, and the House should agree to take a recess until to-morrow morning at ten o'clock, where will the gentleman from Texas stand on his proposition?

The SPEAKER. When ten o'clock comes to-morrow morning the Chair will have to decide that point.

Mr. BLACKBURN. One more inquiry. Does the Chair rule that a motion to take a recess sweeps from the floor the gentleman from Texas who has been recognized on a privileged question?

The SPEAKER. The Chair rules that a motion to take a recess under the existing law under which we are acting is equivalent on ordinary occasions to a motion to adjourn.

Mr. MILLS. Can one gentleman take another off the floor to make a motion to adjourn?

The SPEAKER. Not now; for a motion to adjourn could not be made, as the law under which we are acting does not allow anything more than the taking of a recess.

Mr. MILLS. I have the floor and the gentleman from California cannot take it from me.

Mr. LUTTRELL. If the gentleman thinks I have taken the floor from him, I will withdraw my motion for a recess. I wish to take no unfair advantage.

Mr. COX. I ask for the reading of the paper.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to have the paper read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas, on the 7th day of November, 1876, an election was held in the several States of the Union for electors of President and Vice-President for the term of four years from the 4th day of March, 1877, at which election the majority of said electors favorable to the election of Samuel J. Tilden for President and Thomas A. Hendricks for Vice-President were duly and constitutionally elected by the qualified voters of the several States;

And whereas the returns of said election in the States of Louisiana and Florida were duly made to the officers in said States whose duty it was under the laws of the same to aggregate the votes of the States aforesaid and certify the names of electors so chosen by the qualified electors in accordance with law;

And whereas said return officers willfully, corruptly, and fraudulently suppressed the votes of those electors who were duly and legally elected, and falsely and fraudulently certified the election of persons who were defeated at the ballot-box;

And whereas the governors of said States falsely and fraudulently gave certificates of election of said persons who were defeated and refused them to those persons who were elected;

And whereas said false and fraudulent certificates were referred to a commission to investigate and report to Congress the true constitutional electoral votes in said States;

And whereas said commission refused to investigate the question as to who were the true constitutional electors chosen by the qualified voters of said States;

And whereas it appears in the count of the electoral votes in the presence of the Senate and House of Representatives, on account of said frauds in suppressing the true votes and certifying the false ones, that Samuel J. Tilden, though having received a majority of the electoral votes cast at the ballot-box in the several States, has not a majority in said joint count of all electors appointed in accordance with the terms of the Constitution.

And whereas Rutherford B. Hayes has not received a majority of the constitutional electors duly and legally appointed and the contingency provided for by the Constitution having happened when it becomes the duty of the House of Representatives to proceed immediately to the election of a President of the United States for the ensuing four years: Therefore,

Resolved by the House of Representatives, That said House will proceed immediately, in obedience to the Constitution, to choose a President from the persons having the highest number not exceeding three on the list of those voted for as President.

Mr. LYNDE rose.

Mr. GARFIELD. I make a point of order on that resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LYNDE] is recognized.

Mr. LYNDE. I move that the House now take a recess until ten o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. MILLS. The gentleman cannot by that motion take me from the floor.

Mr. GARFIELD. I make the point of order that the resolution of the gentleman from Texas is not pertinent to the objection to the vote of the State of Wisconsin.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LYNDE] is entitled to be recognized by the Chair as the objector in the joint convention.

Mr. MILLS. Not while I am on the floor. Having obtained the floor on a question of privilege I am entitled to retain it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires first to hear from the gentleman from Wisconsin what he proposes in reference to the objection which he made in joint convention. And the Chair would suggest that the only way in which the resolution of the gentleman from Texas can be introduced is in the form of an amendment in the nature of an objection.

Mr. GARFIELD. That is the point I was trying to make. The resolution is out of order except in that way.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin moves that the House take a recess till to-morrow at ten o'clock.

Mr. MILLS. I offer my resolution as an amendment to the objection, and I desire a vote of the House upon it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is desirous of showing the gentleman from Texas the exact manner in which he can have a vote on his proposition.

Mr. COX. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. If the gentleman from Wisconsin who makes a motion for a recess succeeds in that motion, will not the proposition of my friend from Texas be pending when the House re-assembles in the morning?

The SPEAKER. The Chair would then be bound in good faith to recognize the gentleman from Wisconsin to make a proposition in regard to the action of the House in one way or another touching the electoral vote, and he will then recognize the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. MILLS. To offer my resolution as an amendment.

The SPEAKER. Yes; if it be in the form of an objection. It is not now in that form.

Mr. COX. Then I hope we will take a recess.

Mr. CONGER. I hope the Chair will not decide in advance to receive or not to receive the proposition of the gentleman from Texas.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would recognize the gentleman from Texas to offer an amendment. The Chair desires to travel the exact path he has pursued heretofore in respect to all these questions. In the first place, he recognizes the gentleman who presented the objection in the joint convention to make the usual motion in reference to that; and then the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Texas to offer his proposition in the form of an amendment. When it is submitted in that form, of course the Chair would then be prepared to rule upon it.

Mr. McCRARY. I wish to reserve the question of order upon it.

The SPEAKER. The question of order is reserved by the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. SPRINGER. I call for the yeas and nays on the motion that the House take a recess.

Several MEMBERS. Have a division first.

The question having been put, there was a division by sound. Before the result was declared,

Mr. WELLS, of Mississippi, said: I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. WALLING. I rise to a question of order. One-half of the "noes" come from the lobby around the seats of members, and not from the members of this House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will direct the Sergeant-at-Arms to clear the lobby.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The Secretary of the Senate, Mr. GORHAM, appeared at the bar and said: Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Senate to inform the House that the Senate has adopted a resolution that the vote of Daniel L. Downs, as an elector for the State of Wisconsin, be counted together with the other nine electoral votes of that State, the objections made thereto to the contrary notwithstanding. [Loud applause.]

Mr. GORHAM further announced that he was directed to notify the House of Representatives that the Senate was now ready to proceed with the count of the electoral vote for President and Vice-President.

COUNTING THE ELECTORAL VOTE.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I ask that the galleries be cleared.

Mr. CAULFIELD. I hope the galleries will be cleared.

The SPEAKER. The Sergeant-at-Arms will clear the lobby.

Mr. CAULFIELD. I insist that the galleries be cleared.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not know that the galleries were guilty of any misbehavior; certainly not the ladies in the gallery.

Mr. SAVAGE. I insist that the gallery be cleared. That gallery, Mr. Speaker, [pointing to the gentlemen's gallery,] has three times today insulted the House by demonstrations of this kind.

Mr. CAULFIELD. I saw it with my own eyes.

Mr. LANE. The galleries are quite as honest in making a show for Hayes as we have been.

After an interval, during which the Sergeant-at-Arms cleared the space outside the members' seats of persons not entitled to the privileges of the floor,

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri, said: I desire to know, Mr. Speaker, what question is before the House.

Mr. CAULFIELD. I insist on my motion that that gallery be cleared before we proceed to any other business. If it be necessary, I ask that we take a vote upon that proposition.

Mr. LANE. O, do not make any invidious distinction as to the gallery.

Mr. LUTTRELL. I hope the order will not be made to clear the galleries. There would, no doubt, have been some jollification if we had succeeded.

Mr. MILLS. The people in the galleries have the same right as we have to stand up and see the death of the Republic.

The SPEAKER. The rule of the House is as follows:

In case of any disturbance or disorderly conduct in the galleries or lobby, the Speaker (or Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House) shall have power to order the same to be cleared; or the House may order it cleared.

The Chair, in obedience to a part of that rule, directed the lobbies to be cleared, and will submit the question to the House whether the galleries shall also be cleared.

Mr. GOODE. I hope, Mr. Speaker, that the motion to clear the galleries will not prevail. There was more disorder on the floor than there was in the galleries. [Loud cries of "That's right!"]

The SPEAKER. The Chair so stated, and is not willing, arbitrarily, to order the galleries to be cleared, as he might do. The Chair submits the question to the House, "Shall the galleries be cleared?"

Mr. SPRINGER. I hope not. I desire that some of the American people shall witness this scene.

The question was taken upon clearing the galleries; and it was decided in the negative.

Mr. CLYMER. I call for the regular order of business.

Mr. LYNDE. I submit the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk and ask that it be read.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the vote of Daniel L. Downs, as an elector of the State of Wisconsin, should not be counted, because he held an office of trust and profit under the United States, and therefore was not constitutionally appointed an elector by the said State of Wisconsin.

Mr. SPRINGER. I rise to a question of order; and it is that a motion for a recess was made previous to the introduction of this resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California [Mr. LUTTRELL] made the motion and afterward withdrew it.

Mr. LYNDE. I move that the House take a recess until to-morrow at ten o'clock a. m.

Mr. WELLS, of Mississippi, and Mr. SPRINGER called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 99, nays 148, not voting 43; as follows:

So the motion to take a recess was not agreed to.

During the roll-call the following announcements were made.

Mr. SCALES. My colleague, Mr. DAVIS, has been compelled to leave the House on account of sickness.

Mr. ELLIS. Upon this question I am paired with Mr. WADDELL; were he present he would vote "ay" and I should vote "no."

Mr. JOHN REILLY. My colleague, Mr. HOPKINS, is absent on account of sickness.

Mr. WELLS, of Missouri. I desire to say that the gentleman from Texas, Mr. REAGAN, is absent on account of indisposition.

Mr. WAIT. Upon this question I am paired with Mr. CALDWELL, of Alabama; if he were here he would vote "ay" and I should vote "no."

Mr. STONE. I desire to announce that Mr. DURHAM and Mr. HARRIS, of Georgia, are absent on account of indisposition.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. KNOTT. I move to reconsider the vote by which the House refused to take a recess.

The SPEAKER. It is not in order to move to reconsider the vote on a motion to take a recess which is in the nature of adjournment, and it is not in order to move to reconsider a motion to adjourn.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. I desire to submit to the House a proposition, and to ask its unanimous adoption. The object of it is to enable the House to take a recess at this time and to conclude the discussion and all action upon the main question to-morrow at ten o'clock.

Several MEMBERS objected.

Mr. HALE. If objection is made to that proposition then I call the previous question upon the proposition of the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. LYNDE.]

Mr. WOOD, of New York. I was induced to believe that this proposition would meet the unanimous consent of our friends upon my left.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from New York state his poposition again?

Mr. WOOD, of New York. I have it in writing and I will read it. If objection is made to it, then I will move to suspend the rules and adopt it. This is the proposition:

A motion for the previous question to be entertained on the order offered by Mr. LYNDE and the amendment of Mr. MILLS, if offered in a shape to be in order. The House then to take a recess until Friday, March 2, until ten o'clock a. m., and the vote upon the main question to be taken at one o'clock p. m. to-morrow.

Mr. MILLS. I desire to state to the gentleman from New York [Mr. WOOD] and to this House that I have the assurance of the Speaker that my proposition shall be voted upon, and I do not want any such left-handed proposition from the gentleman who has been leading the republican party on this floor. I want a square vote on my proposition.

Mr. BEEBE. I rise to a point of order. I desire to inquire of the Chair if a motion for a recess is now in order, one motion for that purpose having just been voted down?

Mr. O'BRIEN. I desire to reject the proposition of the gentleman from New York, because if this fraud is to be consummated let it be consummated in the darkness of the night.

Mr. BEEBE. I would like a ruling of the Chair upon the point of order I have submitted.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I desire to say in regard to the proposition submitted by the gentleman from New York [Mr. WOOD] that as one of the members on this side of the House——

The SPEAKER. The Chair would remind the gentleman that a motion to suspend the rules is not debatable.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I do not desire to discuss it, but to call the attention of the House to the fact that Friday has been ushered in, Friday, "hangman's day," a fit day to witness the consummation of the villainy of this procedure. I have no objection to its consummation now.

Mr. HALE. I call the previous question upon the proposition of the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. LYNDE.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York moves to suspend the rules.

Mr. BEEBE. Is it in order to suspend the rules for the purpose of taking a recess now, one motion for a recess having just been voted down?

Mr. SPRINGER. I rise to a question of order. It is that the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. WOOD] is not in order except by unanimous consent.

Mr. HOOKER. I will make the point that a motion to take a recess has been voted down and another motion of the same kind is not now in order.

Mr. SPRINGER. If gentlemen will consent that a recess shall be taken until to-morrow morning at ten o'clock I have no objection; then we will take a recess reserving all our rights.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. If my proposition is not agreed to, then I will insist that we shall proceed with the regular order.

Mr. O'BRIEN. Let the gentleman from New York [Mr. WOOD] be the high priest of the republican party.

Mr. HARRISON. And let the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. O'BRIEN] be the small priest of the filibusters. [Laughter.]

Mr. BEEBE. I desire the ruling of the Chair on the question of order that I raised upon the proposition of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. WOOD.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York has withdrawn his proposition, and the gentleman from Maine calls the previous question on the proposition of the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. LYNDE.]

Mr. SAVAGE. The law under which we are acting contains this provision:

That when the two Houses separate to decide upon an objection that may have been made to the counting of any electoral vote or votes from any State, or upon objection to a report of said commission, or other question arising under this act, each Senator and Representative may speak to such objection or question ten minutes, and not oftener than once; but after such debate shall have lasted two hours, it shall be the duty of each House to put the main question without further debate.

Now, I want to say that if the previous question is seconded it will cut off any debate, any discussion of this matter at all. As each Senator and Representative by the terms of this law is entitled to speak for ten minutes, provided that two hours and no longer is occupied in debate, it is not in order to prevent anybody from exercising his right under the law.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would not rule, if the previous question was ordered, that it could cut off anybody who had any right under the law.

Mr. SPRINGER. Is it in order to put the main question until the two hours for debate have elapsed?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state the question to the House. The gentleman from Wisconsin, Mr. LYNDE, submits a proposition, to which the gentleman from Texas, Mr. MILLS, submits an amendment in the nature of a substitute, and the gentleman from Wisconsin, Mr. CASWELL, submits a further proposition. That is, an original proposition and two amendments are before the House, which is all that is allowed under what is known as the parliamentary "main question."

The Clerk will now read the proposition of the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. CASWELL.]

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. Has the proposition of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS] been ruled in order?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas submits a proposition in the nature of a substitute.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. What disposition has been made of my motion to suspend the rules?

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood the gentleman to withdraw it.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. No, sir; I withdraw nothing.

Mr. HOOKER. I raise the point of order, that the proposition of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. WOOD,] involving as it does a motion for a recess until to-morrow morning at ten o'clock, is not now in order, such a motion having just been voted down by the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think that the proposition is in order.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. Then I ask that we shall proceed with the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. CASWELL.]

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the vote of D. L. Downs be counted with the other votes of the electors of the State of Wisconsin, the objections thereto notwithstanding.

Mr. RICE. I call for the reading of the substitute of the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. MILLS.]

The SPEAKER. That has been read.

Mr. RICE. I wish to have it read again.

Mr. GARFIELD. I object to its being read again.

Mr. HALE. Has the main question been ordered?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is not necessary to have the main question ordered. The only object would be to cut off amendments; and the Chair will not entertain any further amendment.

Mr. HALE. That assurance is of course sufficient; but after one of these amendments has been voted down I do not desire that there shall be an opportunity for another amendment.

The SPEAKER. The first question will be on the the proposition of the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. CASWELL.]

Mr. LYNDE. I call for the reading of the objections together with the testimony upon which they are founded.

The Clerk read as follows:

The undersigned Senators and Representatives object to the counting of the vote of Daniel L. Downs as one elector for the State of Wisconsin upon the following grounds, namely:

That the said Daniel L. Downs held the office of pension surgeon and of examining surgeon for the Pension Office by valid appointment under the laws of the United States prior to the 7th day of November, 1876, the day of the presidential election, and upon said day and upon the 6th day of December, 1876, at the time of his assuming to cast a vote as elector for the State of Wisconsin, and that he has continually held said office from a long period prior to the said 7th day of November, 1876, until the present time; and the undersigned therefore state that said Downs, as pension surgeon and as examining surgeon for the Pension Office as aforesaid, held an office of trust and profit under the United States on the day of the presidential election and on the day that he voted as an elector for the State of Wisconsin, and therefore could not be constitutionally appointed an elector for the State of Wisconsin or vote as such under the Constitution of the United States.

Wherefore the undersigned aver that the said Downs was not duly appointed an elector for the said State and that his vote cannot be constitutionally counted. And the undersigned hereto annex the evidence of the facts above stated, and to be taken as a part of their objection.

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 3, 1875.

DANIEL W. DOWNS sworn and examined.

By Mr. SPARKS:

Question. Were you appointed elector in the State of Wisconsin in the last presidential election?

Answer. I was.

Q. In what district?

A. In the third congressional district.

Q. Did you sit as a member of the electoral college?

A. I did.

Q. And voted?

A. And voted.

Q. For whom were the electoral votes of Wisconsin cast?

A. For Hayes and Wheeler.

Q. You were on the ticket and were elected?

A. Yes.

Q. Did you hold any office under the Government of the United States at the time you were appointed elector?

A. I can only give my opinion on that point. I never understood myself as holding an office. I held the position of examining surgeon for the Pension Office.

Q. Did you hold that position at the time you were elected?

A. I did.

Q. Did you hold it at the time you acted and voted?

A. I did.

Q. And hold it now?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long have you held it?

A. My recollection is that I received the appointment in 1863.

Q. And that has continued up to the present time?

A. It has continued up to the present time.

Q. Have you your appointment with you?

A. I have not.

Q. It was in writing?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. By whom were you appointed?

A. By the Commissioner of Pensions.

Q. Did you derive any profit from the position?

A. I did. The compensation is fixed by law. In the first instance, when I was first appointed, I received nothing from the United States Government. The law was then changed so that I received $1.50 for each examination, which was paid by the applicant and was refunded to him on the first payment of his pension. The law has been since changed, so that now I have a fee which is paid by the Government of the United States.

Q. How much from each applicant?

A. Two dollars from each person referred to me for examination and examined.

Q. How many applicants do you examine a year?

A. The biennial examination would probably amount to sixty persons. In the other odd year, there would be some fifteen or twenty examinations in the course of a year.

Q. How many examinations would that make annually?

A. Probably an average of forty.

By Mr. BURCHARD:

Q. There is no salary connected with your position?

A. No, sir.

Q. Nothing but a fee?

A. A fee in each case.

Q. At first it was paid by the applicant?

A. Yes.

Q. When was the law changed?

A. I cannot tell you.

Q. Are you now paid on a statement of account?

A. Yes, I render a monthly account and return the notice of reference with my accounts to the Pension Office.

Q. Was there any question raised as to your eligibility as a presidential elector?

A. Not before the election; there was after the election.

By Mr. LAWRENCE:

Q. It never was mentioned before the election?

A. Not that I know of?

Q. How many examining surgeons are there in your county?

A. None, besides myself.

Q. How many in the congressional district?

A. I cannot answer; I know three or four.

By Mr. SPARKS:

Q. You say that at first the applicant paid the fee of $1.50?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that was refunded to the applicant by the Government?

A. That was my understanding of it.

Q. So that the Government paid it?

A. Yes.

Q. When was the law changed that you got $2 for each examination?

A. I cannot tell you the time; my recollection is that it was about 1868 or 1870.

Q. Since then the fee has been $2 for each examination, and has been paid by the Government?

A. Yes.

Q. At what period is that paid?

A. Monthly. I make out a monthly statement of the business done by me and send it to the Pension Office, together with the orders of reference. The Pension Office approves of the account and returns it, and it goes to the pension agent of the district, and he pays it.

By Mr. BURCHARD:

Q. You did not suppose that you were ineligible as a presidential elector, and do not suppose it now?

A. No, sir; that was not my understanding.

Q. And no one else supposed so, to your knowledge?

A. No, sir; I understand that I was simply an employé of the Pension Office.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. When did you receive your appointment?

A. My recollection is that I received it in 1868. I cannot state positively.

By Mr. BURCHARD:

Q. The examination biennally is of the same or nearly the same persons, is it not?

A. Of the same persons exactly; all persons except those who are termed permanently disabled have to be examined biennially, simply to ascertain whether a continuation of the disabilities exists.

By Mr. SPARKS:

Q. There is a list of persons whom you examine biennially?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And then there are original applicants constantly coming in for examination?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you receive $2 per capita for each examination?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where is your appointment?

A. I am not positive whether I have it in my possession at home or not. I think I have.

Q. What other duties do you perform besides mere examination?

A. Not any, except that I make a report after I make the examination. I send the certificate of each examination directly to the Pension Office, excepting the certificates of biennial examination. These go to the pension agent and duplicates to the Pension Office.

Q. Do you make any other report except those certificates?

A. No; except that I make out an account monthly of the names of the persons examined, and return them with the orders of examination in order to get my pay.

Q. You draw your pay monthly on those vouchers?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. By whom were you sworn in as examining surgeon?

A. I think I was not sworn in at all, but I would not state positively as it is a good many years since.

Q. If it is the rule to swear in examining surgeons, you doubtless were sworn in?

A. Yes, sir. I suppose so. I have no recollection at all on the subject. I know that I never received any commission beyond simply the appointment in writing.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, PENSION OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., February 8, 1877.

DEAR SIR: Yours of the 6th instant, requesting a certificate of the appointment of Dr. Daniel W. Downs as pension surgeon at Richland Center, Richland County, Wisconsin, the time of his appointment, the amount of fees received by him in the years 1875 and 1876, and whether he has ever resigned, and whether he now holds and has held such position since his first appointment, was received on yesterday, but owing to the illness of the medical referee, who has charge of the papers relating to the surgeons employed by the office, I could not sooner get at the information which you desire.

Doctor Daniel D. Downs, of Richland Center, Richland County, Wisconsin, was first employed by the Commissioner of Pensions to make examinations to be used in pension cases as early as May, 1863, and, excepting for the period of his service in the Army during the late rebellion, cases have been occasionally sent to him for examination all along down from that date. In 1875 he made twenty-three examinations, and in 1876 he made thirty-five examinations, receiving for his services $2 for each examination. So far as I am informed he has never declined to make examinations which have been requested; and he is still employed to make examinations in pension cases in his neighborhood. The last order for a claimant to appear before him to be examined was made as late as the 3d instant.

The above statement does not include biennial examinations which he may have made in 1875, the number of which I cannot readily ascertain, as the certificates of such examinations are sent by the examining surgeon to the pension agent who pays the pension.

I suppose you must be in error as to the name being Daniel W., as no other surgeon at that place named Downs has been employed as herein stated than the Daniel L. above referred to.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. A. BENTLEY,
Commissioner of Pensions.

Hon. J. R. TUCKER,
House of Representatives.

Mr. MAGOON. Mr. Speaker, the constitutional provisions applicable to the question before the House are these: "Each State shall appoint, in such manner as the Legislature thereof may direct," its number of electors. The electors shall meet in their respective States, ballot for President and Vice-President, sign and certify a list of persons by them voted for, and transmit said list, sealed, to the President of the Senate, who "shall, in the presence of the Senate and House of Representatives, open all the certificates, and the votes shall then be counted."

Now this power and duty to count the votes is either on the one hand ministerial or on the other hand judicial to a degree possessed by a court in quo warranto. If it be simply ministerial, then, there being but one return from Wisconsin and that return being regular and authenticated according to law, and embodying ten electoral votes for Hayes and Wheeler, must be counted.

But if this power to count be that of a court in quo warranto, then, this day being March 2, that is to say only two days before the hour for inaugurating a new President, the power cannot be exercised because the official term and duty of the electors have expired, and no court will try title to an office where the term has expired and judgment of ouster cannot be pronounced. (Morris vs. Underwood, 19 Georgia, 559.) Thus, in either case, the answer to the objection is in law complete; and the objected vote must be counted.

But suppose it were otherwise, and not only that we could examine de novo this objection that Downs was United States examining surgeon, but that we could decide on the very right and even exclude the vote, then, and on the merits, the objection has no legal foundation.

The constitutional provision is that—

No person holding an office of trust or profit under the United States shall be appointed an elector.

Elector Downs, it is alleged, was United States examining surgeon, located at Richland Center, Wisconsin; but where is the evidence? It is not before this House; there is no report of any committee here; no deposition or certified evidence known to the common law, or even to the rules of this House, showing such fact. Hence, as there is no legal evidence submitted, no legal evidence before the House to sustain the objection, the count must go on in conformity to the Constitution.

But even if there were before us competent evidence to prove that Downs was examining surgeon, then that is no office of trust or profit under the United States, and Downs is not within the prohibition.

On this subject it was decided by the supreme court of Pennsylvania in Commonwealth vs. Binns, 17 Serg. and Rawle, 226—a case powerfully argued and considered—that the strictest possible construction must be given to a law declaring ineligibility and incompatibility of offices; that nothing is within the prohibition unless expressly named, and nothing whatever is to be included by construction. This decision, I believe, states the elementary and universal law in this country. Applying, therefore, this rule to the question whether an examining surgeon appointed by the Commissioner of Pensions is a United States officer, holding an office of trust or profit, the answer is plainly a negative.

The Constitution provides that the President shall, with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint all officers of the United States whose appointments are not in the Constitution otherwise provided for, and which shall be established by law; but that—

Congress may by law vest the appointment of such inferior officers, as they think proper, in the President alone, in the courts of law, or in the heads of Department.

It is not claimed that the Commissioner of Pensions is the head of a Department; for, on the contrary, he is himself a subordinate officer to the Secretary of the Interior, who alone is the head of his Department. And, inasmuch as United States examining surgeons are appointed by the Commissioner of Pensions, who is not the head of a Department, nor an appointing authority constitutionally authorized to appoint either officers or inferior officers under the United States, it is plain that the intendment of the law is to appoint neither an officer nor an inferior officer in designating the appointment of such surgeons; and that such surgeon is not regarded as holding any office of trust or profit under the United States. Accordingly, in 1 Curtis, United States Circuit Court Reports, page 15, a decision by Judge B. R. Curtis holds that the continued payment of pensions under the orders of the Secretary of the Navy does not constitute the person paying them an officer of the United States. And in Baker's case, (4 Court of Claims Reports, 27,) held, that persons in the employ of the Government who receive for their services not a salary but whatever they may be worth, are not officers. And so, in 17 Serg. and Rawle, 559, it was decided that the designating of a person to publish the laws and treaties of the United States did not thereby create an office of trust or profit under the Constitution. So that an examining surgeon, not being either an officer or inferior officer of the United States and not holding an office of trust or profit, as these terms have been judicially construed, the prohibition does not apply and the electoral vote of Mr. Downs must be counted.

This is alone a complete and conclusive answer to the objection, besides that other equally conclusive answer to the objection, namely, that Downs, in any consideration, was an elector de facto; that he was elected by the people of Wisconsin to his great trust; that he was determined and certified to have been so elected by the board of State canvassers of Wisconsin, all of whom are democrats; that in good faith, believing he was an elector, Mr. Downs met and voted with the electoral college, unquestioned and unopposed, and that his vote as at worst an elector de facto stands valid; and, therefore, that, in accordance with the Constitution which we have sworn to support, that vote of elector Downs should now be counted by the President of the Senate in the presence of the Senate and House of Representatives.

Mr. CATE. Mr. Speaker, any words at my command are impotent to express the profound regret I experience for the position in which we find the country to-day. With the broadest and most liberal privileges of the elective franchise guaranteed to all its citizens without distinction of race or color, after an election participated in by more than eight millions of men, involving issues of the gravest moment, and well calculated to produce excitement and irritate the public mind, to the honor and glory of the people be it said that throughout this broad land on the day of election not one circumstance occurred to disturb its peace and order; not one circumstance calculated to prevent an expression of the free and unbiased judgment of the voter. Not one. And yet, sir, by some means the will of the people thus freely and fairly expressed has been defeated, and it is made to appear that a person actually in a minority of more than a quarter of a million of votes has been elected and is about to be installed as President of the United States.

Mr. Speaker, I did not give the so-called electoral bill my support, and I regretted that so many of my friends about me differed with me in opinion, but I know they acted from the purest of motives, and no man deplores more than I do the gross betrayal of their confidence; but I was firm in the belief that the sole power of counting the electoral vote is in the two Houses of Congress, and being there, it was not in the power of Congress to place it elsewhere, but that if Congress possessed the power claimed, it was inexpedient for democrats to consent to deprive the House of the unquestioned power it possessed under existing law to prevent the inauguration of any man not in its judgment elected.

More than a quarter of a century of public life amid the jars of contending parties had made me distrustful of partisan leaders, and therefore I could not trust such vital issues to a tribunal organized as I believed in the interest of my opponents. However high in public estimation the republican members might be, however great their legal lore and their personal integrity, I dreaded the force of their party allegiance, but more than all I feared the influence and power of a great party that was willing to accept as a means of its retention of power the most stupendous and gorgeous frauds the world has ever seen, the perpetrators of which had been complimented for their ingenuity in villainy and pronounced by an honorable Senator the peers of the members of the United States Senate, and by another that the republican party owed them a debt of gratitude, and who have been toasted and feasted by prominent republicans and their crimes excused as though the whole country and General Sheridan have not long since pronounced them villains.

I preferred keeping the power of this House where it could be exercised by the democratic majority in the interest of justice.

Sir, when the history of this period shall be written by some impartial Bancroft, it will appear that this commission was conceived by the astute and unrivaled leaders of the republican party as a means of wresting from a democratic House all its power and privilege that was any value to the country in the present contest in counting and deciding the electoral vote, and lodge it in a tribunal created for the purpose of perpetuating the power of the republican party by counting all the disputed States to Hayes and Wheeler, to put that question beyond doubt or peradventure; and therefore these worthies set about preaching and proclaiming the absolute fairness of the great men, bright and shining lights in their party, who would go on the commission, until democrats, I say it in sorrow and astonishment, were captivated, made to believe that the day of jubilee was at hand in which it would be demonstrated that three republicans would be found in the whole party who by reason of being members of the Supreme Court could be trusted to decide between the people and the thieves who were trying to steal the vote of a State in a case where the theft was not denied.

Hear what the patriarch EDMUNDS said in his efforts to commend his scheme to democratic Senators: "No more partisan; no more friend; no more enemy; no more opponent, but the solemn judgment of the judge." Of course he had reference to the judicial element only, for I will not do him the injustice to suppose he had reference to the republicans who were afterward to be chosen from that party, first, because he could not have known who they would be, and, secondly, if he had known who they were he certainly knew that some of them could not rise above party.

And poor, pain-racked THURMAN, in the honesty and simplicity of his heart, was so overcome by EDMUNDS'S declamation and apparent sincerity that he declared he was so impressed with their fairness that he would joyfully submit the whole question to the committee reporting the bill. But how sadly has the poor, dear old man and thousands of other people all over the country, who were led to believe that when the time for action came the members would rise above party, been duped and deceived.

While EDMUNDS was cramming his blindfold justice down the gaping mouths of his hearers here, he was quieting the fears of his expectant friends in Vermont with assurances that his bill would place the republican party on its feet again, take from the democratic House its power in counting and determining the electoral vote, and lodge it in the republican party. Here is his letter, dated January 27, in which he says:

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 27, 1877.

DEAR SIR: I have yours. Some misapprehension seems to exist as to the history and present state of the law and practice, the opening and disposing of the electoral votes. In order correctly to judge of the propriety of the bill now pending on the subject, it is necessary to know what has taken place hitherto. It is this:

First. Down to 1817 no objection to or dispute concerning the vote of a State arose. During that time the President of the Senate opened the certificates of votes, and they were tabulated by tellers appointed by each House and handed up to the President of the Senate, who declared the result of the tabulation, and then, under the order of the Senate, sometimes he certified that he had opened the certificates and counted the votes, and the result was that so and so had been elected, or that there had been no election.

Second. When the first doubt or dispute arose, in 1817, in respect to the vote of Indiana, the two Houses, as of right, determined what should be done, without a hint even from any one that the President of the Senate had any deciding power.

Third. When the next doubt or dispute arose, in 1821, as to the vote of Missouri, the two Houses did the same thing, without any suggestion of power in the President of the Senate.

Fourth. When the next matter of dispute arose, in 1837, as to the vote of Michigan, the same course was pursued.

Fifth. When the question arose, in 1837, as to the vote of the ineligible electors, the committees on the subject reported that the substantial question was whether the electoral colleges in the several States should decide, or whether Congress should, and that this should be provided for by a permanent provision; there was not the suggestion from any source that the President of the Senate could determine anything.

Sixth. When, in 1857, a question arose as to the vote of Wisconsin, the same thing happened. The two Houses discussed it, and almost every speaker, if not every one, and the President of the Senate himself, declared that he had no deciding power. On that subject Mr. Collamer, of Vermont, said that, a question arising, "the Chair should have immediately stated the condition of things and the two Houses should have separated to make provision in relation to the manner of settling it," and that it "should have been provided for by law long ago." And there was scarcely an exception to the opinion that the two Houses must decide.

Seventh. 1865 the two Houses passed a joint resolution determining in advance the questions touching the electoral votes of some of the States, and President Lincoln in a message on the subject declared that he had no power over it, even as a part of the law-making power, and that the two Houses had the sole power.

Eighth. On the same occasion in 1865 the two Houses of Congress, being almost entirely republican, adopted the twenty-second joint rule, providing that votes objected to should not be counted without the consent of both Houses.

Ninth. In 1869, under the same joint rule, the two Houses decided all disputes.

Tenth. In 1873, under the same joint rule, the two Houses again decided every question raised.

Eleventh. So far there never was a question of dispute or doubt that the President of the Senate decided or claimed the right to decide, and in every case the count proceeded upon the idea that no vote could be counted without the consent of both Houses.

Twelfth. In 1876, when the House of Representatives had become democratic, through the action of some republicans now supposed to be misleading their party, the twenty-second joint rule fell. Had it stood, the election of the democratic candidate would be morally certain.

Thirteenth. In the same year, and in March last, the republican Senate passed a bill (afterward suspended on a motion to reconsider, made by a democrat), with only three republican votes against it—CONKLING, EDMUNDS, and HOWE—giving each House the power to reject any vote when there should be double returns, the effect of which would be to place the absolute decision of the present dispute in the power of the House of Representatives, and to make the democratic case certain of success.

Fourteenth. The present bill, then, saves the republican cause from the predetermined destruction of its hopes and fortunes being left solely in the hands of its opponents.

Fifteenth. Is there much ground, then, to condemn the action of the Senators who have striven to get the republican cause, as well as the cause of free government under law, out of the valley of the shadow of death, and put them on ground where they can have a fair and equal contest, in whatever way it may terminate?

Very truly yours,

GEO. F. EDMUNDS.

Hon. DANIEL ROBERTS, Burlington, Vermont.

Expressing in all the thirteen propositions advanced in the letter that the sole and only object he had in view was to save the republican party from its opponents, with not one word of its justice.

Read the honeyed words of Mr. Commissioner HOAR, breathing the purest and most exalted patriotism:

But it is charged that this commission is in the end to be made up of seven men who of course will decide for one party and seven men who of course will decide for the other, and who must call in an umpire by lot, and that therefore you are in substance and effect putting the decision of this whole matter on chance. If this be true, never was a fact so humiliating to the Republic expressed since it was inaugurated. Of the members of our National Assembly, wisest and best selected for the gravest judicial duty ever imposed upon man, under the constraint of this solemn oath can there be found in all this Sodom not ten, not one, to obey any other mandate but that of party?

But I especially repudiate this imputation when it rests upon those members of the commission who are to come from the Supreme Court. It is true there is a possibility of bias arising from old political opinions even there, and this, however minute, the bill seeks to place in exact equilibrium. But this small inclination, if any, will in my judgment be overweighted a hundred-fold by the bias pressing them to preserve the dignity, honor, and weight of their judicial office before their countrymen and before posterity. They will not consent by a party division to have themselves or their court go down in history as incapable of the judicial function in the presence of the disturbing elements of partisan desire for power in regard to the greatest cause ever brought into judgment.

Never, sir, was a scheme so skillfully and successfully managed. It will constitute an epoch in political strategy. While cursing the moral turpitude that could conceive such a wrong, we can but admire the consummate skill and judgment that was able to carry it forward to a successful termination.

Acting under an oath or obligation which EDMUNDS thinks so important and with these words still ringing in our ears, this man [Mr. HOAR] has contributed his mite in every instance by a strict party vote to enable himself and the grand commission to go down in history as "incapable of rising above party in the greatest cause ever brought into judgment."

So I repeat the law was conceived for the express purpose of placing the power of deciding the electoral vote of the disputed States in the republican party, and all this gushing about the absolute fairness of the commission and the inclination of its members to rise above the truculent, subservient partisans was but hollow mockery, intended to deceive men too honorable to believe their opponent capable of dishonorable action.

Sir, the law has been executed in bad faith by the republicans from the beginning; instead of selecting men noted for intelligence and moderation and love of justice, and in whose judgments in a political controversy the people would have confidence, confidence that the judgment, whatever it might be, reflected their free and unbiased opinions at least as approximating the truth, men were selected in whose ability to decide impartially nobody in either party has a particle of confidence; men whose blind subserviency to party would permit them to resort to any means or measures that promised success and whose extreme views are distasteful and disgusting to the better class of their own party.

While proclaiming with well-assumed sincerity the desire to make this a fair and just commission, as free as possible from partisan bias, in the secret caucus men are selected for the high position solely because of their intense partisanship and uncompromising hostility and hatred of the democratic party, and who in their political lives have demonstrated their belief that anything was justifiable that should perpetuate republican power. And these men did go upon the commission in mockery of justice as the midnight assassin goes to his work of blood, to compass the election of Hayes at all events. I speak of no mere private or social relations, but of their public acts and reputations.

These men did not go to their seats in the high commission to deliver judgment as law and justice might demand, but as the paid attorney to remember that the republican party was in danger, and to avert which they did, as it was expected they would do if necessary, trample under their feet the best established principles of law and set at defiance the plainest principles of justice, ignoring the settled usages of the two Houses and establishing in their stead the supremacy of falsehood.

Truth forever on the scaffold,
And wrong forever on the throne, was never more clearly shown than in the decisions of this tribunal. By its unfailing majority vote it subordinates every consideration to that of party and rudely thrusts aside the well-considered precedents of years. Mr. Speaker, the people expected some sort of justice at the hands of this tribunal, some examination of the great questions that have agitated the country so long; whether fraud exists, and if so, whether it will override the expressed will of the people; but in its decisions the commission has abandoned the broad gauge of justice and right and decided every case upon a narrow, miserable technicality. The utmost technical construction has been utilized to sustain the party, such as would be hooted from a court of law.

The mandate of the Constitution, that persons holding an office of trust or profit under the United States shall be ineligible to the office of elector is mainly pronounced directory, of no force if people choose to disregard it. To make the absurdity appear the more prominent, suppose a member of Congress not within the required age or a President who would not be at the time of his inauguration thirty-five years of age to be elected, is the country obliged to take him, and what provisions of the Constitution are mandatory if these are merely directory?

But to show the untamed partisanship that controls the action of the republican officials in this matter, it is only necessary to refer to the action of the presiding officer of the two Houses refusing to receive the certificate of an electoral vote because it did not reach him by mail and by the day fixed by law. The object and substance of the law is that the vote shall be in the hands of the proper officer in time to be presented at the counting of the votes, but the mode and the manner are not so important that the grand object of the law be accomplished.

Sir, does any man in his senses believe that if the republican vote had been thus detained it would have been rejected? Like the provisions of the Constitution these gentlemen would pronounce it directory only. Is the election of a President to be made dependent upon anything as to the mode and manner of transmitting the vote? And is anybody's right to be jeopardized because of a mistake as to the time or manner in which the votes reach the proper officer? If so, it will be a valuable acquisition to the present ability of J. Madison Wells to control the election of President.

Sir, I am one of those who believe that Government must rest upon the consent of the governed or it must exist by the strong hand of power, and just in proportion as the former is interrupted or circumscribed, just in that proportion will the government of force usurp power and place. There can be no compromise between force and law. The fraud and infamy of which we now complain are the result of such a compromise. Its consequences to the future of our country are not difficult to foresee. It offers to crime emolument and power instead of prison bars. It offers to the thief of the suffrages of the people the friendly recognition and companionship of men high in social and political life.

Democrats about me have indulged in the most withering invectives against the action of the commission, and yet feel it to be their duty to sustain and by their votes indorse its action. I asked Mr. HEWITT, of New York, if he believed it to be the duty of democrats to assist in the speedy consummation of what he had pronounced an outrage. Let me remind gentlemen that that same question is being asked by hundreds and thousands of people throughout the country. If the counting in of Hayes by the methods adopted be a fraud and an infamy, it must appear to the average mind that all who assist in the count are a party to the infamy. That is the common sense, practical view of it.

The superlatively eloquent gentleman who sits near me [Mr. JOHN YOUNG BROWN, of Kentucky] exceeds all others in his fierce denunciation of the action of the commission, as he did all others in commending the bill to the favorable consideration of the House, and says: "These incorruptible sages on the commission had acted the part of 'banded jockeys,' and have done in the face of the world that which hungry mountebanks would scorn." Yet he sustains the findings and judgments of this band of jockeys and sees a "moral grandeur" in giving his action and efficient co-operation to the early consummation of acts which "hungry mountebanks would scorn."

Strange consistency, it seems to me. If it is what they claim for it, clearly there is no moral or legal obligation to sustain it. If it has acted within the scope and object of its organization you should not denounce it. Cease denouncing it and its judgments as infamous or cease yielding it your cordial support.

The democrats of this House should present a solid front, a wall of fire, in opposition to any indorsement of the judgments of this commission, upon the principle that it were far better to remand this issue to the people than that any man should be inducted into the sacred seat of Washington by fraud.

A MEMBER. Mr. Speaker, is it in order to allow the Louisiana returning board to print some remarks on this subject? [Laughter.]

Mr. MILLS. They are boarding at present in this Capitol at the public expense. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas is entitled to the floor and will proceed.

Mr. MILLS Mr. Speaker, I desire to address to the House some reasons in support of the proposition which I have submitted. I hold it to be the duty of this House to proceed to the election of a President in obedience to the twelfth amendment of the Constitution. We all have taken a solemn obligation to support that Constitution, and to support it without purpose of evasion and without retaining one jot or tittle of mental reservation. This sacred charter of our fathers requires the votes of the electors chosen by them to be opened in the presence of the embassadors of all the States and the representatives of all the commons and counted and declared by the highest titled officer of the Government in that solemn and august presence. It enjoins upon us, if in that joint convention of the two Houses, upon the count being had, no candidate shall have a majority of all the electors appointed, to proceed immediately to choose a President from among those voted for by the electors.

There are three hundred and sixty-nine electors appointed by the people of the thirty-eight States. Upon the count in the joint assembly it requires one hundred and eighty-five to elect. Has either Mr. Tilden or Mr. Hayes received that number of votes? I do not mean frauds, I mean what the Constitution means, votes of electors chosen by the qualified voters in the several States. I do not mean counterfeits, I mean the real money of the mint. I mean real votes, not shams. I mean the votes of the sovereign people, not the votes of sovereign returning boards, either State or national. I am speaking to democrats now and not republicans. Has Mr. Hayes received a majority of the votes of the constitutional electors of the States? If he has, you have done him gross injustice and stultified yourselves by your action throughout the whole session. You asserted at the beginning of this session, and have maintained to this present hour, that he has not. You have appointed committees and sent them over the country to take testimony to sustain that assertion before the tribunal of the American conscience. Your committees have reported to the House that the electors chosen by the people of Louisiana and Florida were refused certificates of election and fraudulent certificates were given to persons who were not elected. You appealed from the State returning boards to a national returning board, who, you have charged repeatedly upon this floor, perpetrated the same frauds, and denied the right of the people's electors in those two States, and affirmed the frauds certified by the State returning boards. Am I right? If I am, you can choose upon which horn of the dilemma you will hang. For upon one or the other you are certainly impaled.

If Mr. Hayes has not a majority of the votes of the real electors, it is your duty, your sworn duty to proceed immediately to elect a President. If Mr. Hayes has a majority of the votes of the real electors, you have been guilty of the effort to usurp the Government yourselves by claiming for Louisiana and Florida false and fraudulent votes. This you know every democrat in this House will indignantly deny. What, then, is the result? Mr. Hayes has 173 votes. Mr. Tilden has 184 votes. The twelve votes of Louisiana and Florida have been stolen by dishonest returning boards. Falsehoods and not votes have been sent by their governors to Washington. The real electoral votes of those States have been suppressed and do not appear in the joint count, though they were duly and constitutionally appointed in terms of the Constitution. Then do you not see that in the joint count there were present only 357 of the 369 electoral votes appointed by the States?

Do you not see that Mr. Tilden lacks 1 vote of having a majority and Mr. Hayes lacks 12? Do you not know that your adversaries yonder recognized that fact immediately after the election, and have been resorting to everything, fair and foul, to steal, either by open robbery or by the meaner and baser methods of frauds, falsehoods, and bribery, 12 sham votes to make the majority required by law? Do you not know that in this consummation so dear to their hearts they have had the aid of the bayonet in the hands of a Chief Magistrate who has trodden with his heel upon the Constitution of your country? Ay, sir, who has, through the organ of his administration published in this city, threatened to come with his janizaries and tear from his seat the presiding officer of this House and incarcerate in Fortress Monroe its refractory members? They have been striving with all their might to obtain a majority by adding the false to the true.

These are the grounds we have maintained throughout and still maintain. We have held and still hold that Mr. Tilden received 196 true constitutional electoral votes, but that 12 of them were stolen by the corrupt minions of a corrupt Administration. These charges we have thrown in the faces of the representatives of the Administration throughout this session. Who denies it? No one.

These facts being established, what is your duty? The Constitution which you have sworn to support prescribes it. It leaves you no discretion save only the choice between a faithful discharge of the obligations of a high public trust and their abandonment altogether. Will you have the manliness, in the presence of threats, whether of personal violence or of civil war, to stand unmoved by the Constitution of your fathers and declare him whom the people of the United States have said shall be their President and leave to them to say whether they will be cowed and awed into submission by Executive frowns; whether they will crouch like slaves in the presence of his minions and yield their Government to a willful, wanton, and wicked usurpation. Have you got the Saxon manhood to do it? Have you the blood of the English Commons in your veins? Do you remember the history of your ancestors, how they resisted every encroachment upon their liberties, how they confronted the usurper in council and on the field, and is it not humiliating now to see the representatives of the American people cowering in the dust in the presence of a usurper?

Will the representatives of four and a half millions of able-bodied men—men who know their rights and knowing dare maintain—refuse them an opportunity to decide for themselves whether they will surrender their right to govern this country into the hands of infamous returning boards, the natural offspring of an infamous administration, or whether they have the courage to keep and maintain them. The people dare maintain them, but their representatives will not give them an opportunity to do it. Do not underestimate the strength of the people and yield their castle to the summons of the invader. Do your own duty and cast the responsibility from your shoulders to the shoulders of him whom the people have charged with the duty of guarding and supporting their constitutional liberties. When you shall have done this then your responsibility ceases and his begins. Take the advice of the lion-hearted old Roman, Jerre. Black, and try to do your own duty and cease to vex your souls about the unwillingness of the people to do theirs.

Elect Mr. Tilden, or rather re-elect him, when more than a quarter of a million majority of voters have elected, and more than a million in whose veins runs Saxon blood; and let him call upon the people of the United States, yet free, thank God, as I believe he will do, and they will very soon decide whether or not they dare to be free; and if necessary to maintain that right they will "clothe their beauteous limbs in steel"—the panoply of freemen—and make usurpers know that they are the sovereigns in this land, and sovereigns who have no subjects. Can you do it? Some one near me says, "Dare you do it?" Is it possible that we witness the spectacle of a usurper placed in the chair of Washington, governing a country given to us by the brave men who won it, who plucked it from the hand of the oppressor, who dared to look a tyrant in the face, who defied arbitrary power, whose valor won, whose blood watered, and whose patriotism consecrated it to freedom? Do they now look down from heaven and behold their sons standing about the graves where heroic ashes sleep and cowering before the frowns of a petty despot who commands at his bidding 25,000 vassals?

This, sir, is the pitiful condition of the American people to-day. We are here to-day in "bated breath and whispering humbleness," in the hall of our sires, witnessing the most gigantic crime ever committed in this country. We are standing by the rack upon which the Republic is stretched and witnessing the stabs of the parricide, and dare not stretch our arms to save or deal one manly blow in vindication of our liberties.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CASWELL. I have no wish to discuss the general question involved in this controversy. I desire to confine myself strictly to the question that is now before the House and point out to such gentlemen as will do me the honor to listen the exact situation of this man Downs. They object to the counting of his vote because he is a pension surgeon. He is designated by the Commissioner of Pensions to make such examination as may be referred to him in special cases. He has no tenure of office. He has no salary. He is responsible to no power, but he has simply to discharge those special duties when referred to him by the Commissioner of Pensions.

There are two reasons, then, why his vote should be counted. One is that he is not an officer within the prohibition of the Constitution; and the other is that, although he be disqualified, his acts as an elector de facto, he having been elected and commissioned, and having entered upon the duties of his office and cast his vote without objection, are binding upon the people; and there is no way by which you can test his eligibility except by a writ of quo warranto.

Now, Mr. Speaker, we turn to the Constitution of the United States. In paragraph 2, section 2 of article 2, speaking of the powers of the President, it says he—

> Shall appoint embassadors, other public ministers and consuls, judges of the Supreme Court, and all other officers of the United States, whose appointments are not herein otherwise provided for, and which shall be established by law; but the Congress may by law vest the appointment of such inferior officers, as they think proper, in the President alone, in the courts of law, or in the heads of Departments.

The Commissioner of Pensions appoints this surgeon. He is not the President, nor a court, nor the head of a Department; he is simply the Commissioner of Pensions, and it is not within his power to create an office, it is not within his power to appoint an officer, because all officers are appointed either by the President, by the courts, or by the heads of Departments. And the Commissioner of Pensions is not the head of a Department. And this pension surgeon is no more than a clerk, no more than an employé of the Pension Bureau. And he is no more an officer than the clerks that sit at the desk in the Pension Bureau.

Now, sir, with reference to the second point, let me say that it is a well-settled doctrine in every State of this Union that an officer entering upon the duties of any official position in the full discharge of the duties of an office makes his acts binding upon all the people. Any other doctrine would overturn half of the official acts in this Government. Why, sir, we, as members of Congress, sit here and pass laws, and afterward on an investigation it is determined that we were not elected; yet the law we assist in enacting is binding upon all the people. So with any other person performing official acts.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. I intend to devote a moment or two to the discussion of the only question before the House: whether the vote of the elector Downs shall be counted. The work to be performed in the joint meeting as to counting the votes has been practically concluded as soon as this House decides that the vote of Wisconsin is to be counted or rejected. The points of the objection have been argued, and it is scarcely necessary for me to refer to constitutional authorities in support of the arguments that have been made in favor of the eligibility of the elector Downs. The duty that he was to perform was imposed by section 4777 of the Revised Statutes, which authorizes the Commissioner of Pensions to appoint civil surgeons to make examinations and authorizes them to receive a fee of $2. There are decisions of the courts that decide under this act that pension agents under former laws appointed by the Secretary of War are not officers.

I have here a decision in 33 Mississippi Reports, where the court decided that under laws of the United States a pension agent appointed by the Secretary of War under the law at that time—

Is not in a legal sense an officer of the Government of the United States.

This decision was given in the case of Lindley vs. The Attorney-General, and that portion of the decision to which I refer may be found at page 529. That was a stronger case than this which is now before the House.

Then, again, I call attention to the fact that he is not required to give a bond; that he is not required by the law to take an oath. There is no feature about this case of an officer of the United States. He is not appointed by the President or by the head of a Department.

Again, by another decision in 20 California Reports it is decided that an appointment which has not received the approval of the head of a Department does not create an office.

This was not by law such an appointment. There are other cases in other States to which objection might have been made with much more force. I have here a certified copy of the commission of one of the electors voted for in Virginia, (Mr. Holladay,) whose place was substituted, as was this case of the Pennsylvania elector, an identically similar case. The evidence was before our committee, and believing that the law of Virginia authorizes the office of elector to be filled, and it having been filled, we thought that the elector was entitled to vote. There was a similar case of ineligibility in Tennessee, where the elector Moore, who had taken an oath to support the Constitution and was an acting midshipman in the service of the rebellion, was elected as an elector. He was disqualified by the fourteenth amendment, but no objection was made to him. But I pass by these cases, and say that there is, under the law, no ineligibility on the part of the elector Downs, and that the objection ought not to be sustained.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Mr. Speaker, the end has come. There is no longer a margin for argument, and manhood spurns the plea of mercy, and yet there is a fitness in the hour that should not pass unheeded. To-day is Friday. Upon that day the Saviour of the world suffered crucifixion between two thieves. On this Friday constitutional government, justice, honesty, fair dealing, manhood, and decency suffer crucifixion amid a number of thieves. [Applause on the floor and in the galleries.]

It was on that day that this presidential fraud received its nomination at the hands of the republican party. It was upon that day as it recurred that every determination reached by the blistered, perjured miscreants that constitute the majority of that commission have been promulgated to the country. It is on that day that you propose to consummate your iniquity and foist into a place of power him whom the people of the land have spurned, scorned, and rejected at the polls. If it must be, it is well that it should occur here and now; but it is well also that before the day is finished the truth should be vindicated and the record should show upon whom the responsibilities fairly rest. Those responsibilities do not rest upon the shoulders of the American people. They finished their work manfully and faithfully. When the sun went down upon the 7th of November they delivered to their representative a title to that office indefeasible and and indisputable, backed by a majority of 260,000 votes. By their leaders that title has been gambled off, gambled away with a stocked deck and loaded dice. It is upon us, the representatives of the people, that the responsibilities for this disgrace are fairly cast. I say it not in anger, but in sorrow. I impugn the patriotism of no man who voted for that bill, but I say it in sober earnestness, and the verdict of history will support the assertion, that it is owing to our own want of sagacity, want of nerve, want of devotion to the trust confided to our keeping, that we are now indebted for the pitiable and humiliating spectacle that the American Republic offers to the world.

The responsibility is ours. Let the people understand that; let us shoulder it and bear it as best we may. Mr. Speaker, when the time shall come for those who have brought this disaster upon us to account to that power that stands behind us, and from which we may not hope to escape, I trust that the manliness that has been lacking here will be manifested there; that we may go back and tell the people that the trust confided to our keeping has been abandoned or surrendered; that we acquit them clear, and hold ourselves alone responsible. I know, further, sir, that when the passions and prejudices engendered by this contest shall have passed and sober judgment shall have resumed its sway the honest, conscientious, patriotic comrades who sit about me, who pursued that course which rendered this result possible to the country, who refused to raise a hand to thwart this crowning degradation, will feel that they have no excuse to offer, only pardon to ask.

It has been in our power at any moment to prevent the execution of this foul sentence and we would not. It is of this alone that I complain. But those gentlemen who sit on the other side of the Chamber will have no defense, no palliation, no excuse to offer for what they have done. I cannot but believe that each and every member on that side of the House who has played the part of conspirator, who has been actively instrumental in chiseling and swindling the American people out of their own fairest and most clearly demonstrated rights does in his own heart put up that cry which comes from the agonized soul—

Can hell itself, with all its powers to damn,
Add yet one curse to the vile thing I am?

Sir, the keenest pang that this disaster brings—I speak for my own side now—the keenest pang that this is to inflict upon us will be found in the reflection that the blow comes, not from the hands of our enemies, but that it comes from the hands of our own honest, conscientious, but misguided friends. [Cries of "True!" "True!"]

So the struck eagle, stretched upon the plain,
No more through rolling clouds to soar again,
Views his own feather on the fatal dart
That winged the shaft that quivered in his heart.

It is ourselves, not they alone, who did this work; and yet this lessens not one whit of the weight of the damning load of responsibility that settles upon them. If we have failed to meet our obligations, however honestly we may have striven; if we shall have proven recreant, unworthy, or unfitted for the trust, I turn with hope, not without faith, to the people that stand behind us, believing, or if not believing yet hoping and praying, in the utterance of as patriotic a sentiment as it is possible for mortal man to cherish, that they, smarting under the disaster that has overtaken them, realizing the shame, dishonor, wrong, and outrage that has been put upon them, will rise in their majesty and might, not only to rebuke and spurn but to punish, ay, if need be in blood, the perpetration of all the villainy and scoundrelism of this proceeding. [Applause on the floor and in the gallery.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MACDOUGALL. Why does not some gentleman on that side of the House ask that the galleries be cleared?

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. I do not desire to retort in the spirit indulged in by the gentleman who has just taken his seat, [Mr. BLACKBURN.] But if I did I might remind him and this House that this is not only Friday but hangman's day; and that there could be no more fitting time than just past the hour of midnight

When churchyards yawn, and Hell itself breathes out
Contagion to this world,

that this bogus, pretentious, bastard brat of political reform, which for the last twelve months has affronted the eyes of gods and men should be strangled to death, gibbeted higher than Haman. [Great applause on the floor and in the galleries.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. COCHRANE.) The Chair desires to say to the galleries that if there is any further applause in them he will order that the galleries be cleared. And there must be no further applause on the floor. Gentlemen are requested to keep order.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. I trust, sir, this does not come out of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The officers of the House will see that persons not entitled to the privileges of the floor are not allowed to be upon the floor.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. I had risen intending to say that this contest, one of the most memorable in the history of the nation, which has engaged the attention of Congress and of the country for the last three months, is nearing its end. It chances to fall to the lot of Wisconsin to close the column of republican States which announces the election of Rutherford B. Hayes as President of the United States, and installs a republican administration in power for four years to come.

The record of the contest is made up. Parties and individuals have fixed their status; we cannot change it now if we would. There has been excitement; there has been passion; there have been criminations and recriminations. Hot and bitter and blistering words have been uttered, these will vanish and pass away. But as individuals and parties there stands the record of our acts; this will not pass away; our children and our children's children will read it, and as it is graven on the pages of the proceedings of these two Houses, so must it go for final rejection or approval to the supreme tribunal of the American people and the enlightened judgment of mankind.

It is not my purpose in this the closing hour of the debate, with the pressure of the public business crowding upon us, demanding attention, to attempt to re-state the reasons and the grounds of our proceedings, which have been stated and restated, reiterated and re-argued by the ablest legal minds of this or of any age, until they have become as familiar here as household words.

Neither is it my purpose to dwell upon the points urged in objection to this elector from Wisconsin. Two conditions must meet and harmonize in order to render the objection tenable: First, the office must be established by law, and second, under the Constitution the incumbent must have been appointed by the President of the United States, by a court of law, or by the head of a Department. Mr. Downs, this pension surgeon, was appointed by the Commissioner of Pensions, the head of a bureau; not by the President, not by a court of law, not by the head of any Department. He is therefore not disqualified from casting the electoral vote of Wisconsin. That vote will be counted.

This contest will be decided and ended, business will spring into new life, enterprise will take heart and courage, labor will find employment, capital will be unlocked, the wheels of commerce will revolve again, and this country will go forward once more in the grand career of its national destiny.

Did the time permit, I should be glad to say a word to gentlemen on the other side of the Chamber. They need fear no unseemly exultation at our success. There is full and ample guarantee for that, for never have men sat with greater patience under greater provocation than has been exhibited here during the last ten days.

We seek only liberty, justice, and equality for all. And when in the hour of supreme trial, when the country stood on the crumbling verge of anarchy and was hourly in danger of being plunged into all the horrors of civil war and when a few stanch democrats, men who regarded their honor and in their reverence for law stepped to the front and saved this nation from a common calamity, how our hearts went out to you gentlemenof the North and gentlemen of the South in full and hearty gratitude; but when we are told that you recoil from a coalition with the incoming administration as from "a wound of cruel dishonor," how can mutual sympathy thrive? There may have been irregularities in South Carolina and other States in the disordered condition of things there. [Laughter on the democratic side.] But let me tell you, gentlemen, while you laugh we shrink from no investigation of recent atrocities there under the blazing light of truth, and I tell you further, that where in 1860 there was scarcely a common-school house in that State, to-day there are twenty-five hundred school-houses there, there are three thousand teachers, and nearly a quarter of a million of pupils being educated, and half a million of dollars annually spent for common schools, when formerly there were less than sixty thousand.

The seed is planted; the tree has stuck its roots deep into southern soil, and you cannot eradicate it if you would. Stand by your own States; improve and beautify them. We do not seek to dominate over you. Give us a public opinion which shall say to this country and to the world that all your people, of every race, color, and condition, in South Carolina, in Louisiana—in all the South—shall be protected, and which shall forbid now and forever that the poor and humble laborer who tills your soil, cultivates your cotton, your corn, your rice, your sugar; who obeys the laws and creates the wealth which pays your taxes and enables you to live in elegance and ease; assure us that after his hard day's work is done and he retires to his humble cabin for rest he shall not be surrounded by scores of masked men at midnight, men of the "superior race," torn from his terrified wife and children, hitched to the pommel of a saddle, and the life dragged out of him over the roots and stones of the ground. Pledge us that and that all the citizens of the Republic may come and go unchallenged for political opinions, and we promise you in return that you shall be free from all intermeddling from us. Gentlemen, you say we are brothers. In Heaven's name let us be friends!

Mr. O'BRIEN. Mr. Speaker, when I contemplate the proceedings of the last few days, while appreciating personally my friends on the other side, yet when I consider their political conduct I am compelled to say, not in anger but in sorrow, "Shame, where is thy blush?"

Mr. Speaker, down in one of the cells of this Capitol there is now imprisoned four men solemnly condemned by the judgment of the House of Representatives for the greatest crime that was ever perpetrated in the history of the American Republic; and to be just I must say that there is not a crime however infamous of which those prisoners have been adjudged guilty that every member of the republican party upon the other side of the House and in the other wing of the Capitol seems willing to share, ay, and must share, the guilt. You are willing to-day to exult, to rejoice, ay to taunt the democratic side of this House, because you have been successful in robbing over four millions of American freemen of the right which they obtained by the solemn decision upon the 7th of last November to inaugurate their chosen President.

I ask my fellow-members upon the republican side what cause for rejoicing they have when they contemplate the picture which I presented to their view? When, through what I consider the misfortune, if not the weakness, of men placed in position by the democratic party, the country was reduced to such a situation that the whole American nation shuddered at the dread of civil war—in that emergency the democratic party in perfect good faith, in honor, and to preserve the fair name of the Republic offered to the republican side what was believed to be a compromise of their opinions—a measure providing for the selection of an honest tribunal to declare the result of the presidential election.

I ask my fellow-members whether the democratic party did not carry out their part of the agreement in good faith? I ask whether in the democratic column of Representatives and Senators we could have placed the high trusts left to that commission in purer hands than those of the five who were selected by us; and I ask them whether the blush of shame does not tinge their cheeks when they realize that they selected among their five commissioners at least two who were unworthy—deemed so by all honest men to represent them, unworthy because of their character as shown by the records of the two Houses—men recognized as politically dishonest, and deliberately selected because of their known partisanship and astuteness in political warfare?

Not only that; but I say to my republican friends that from the moment that commission was organized, by jobbery, political trickery, and every possible legal device, it has by its partisan majority denied to the American people a rightful and just decision of the questions submitted to it.

While the democratic Representatives on this side of the House have been struggling for the last three days to prevent the consummation of this fraud by constitutional and strictly legal means, we have been unfortunately beset by a desertion from our own side, which I deplore. By united action we could have defended the country successfully, notwithstanding the conspiracy to inaugurate the fraudulent usurper whose success is obtained by a defiance of every principle of honor and justice. We may have contended in vain to prevent the crowning infamy which will forever stain our country's fair name, but we have no apology to make for what we have done. We are willing to refer this question to the American people, and let them determine whether the seventy-five men, more or less, who have stood here battling in favor of right, in favor of justice, in favor of law, in favor of free institutions, have truly represented the people who sent them here to maintain their rights and to preserve inviolate the Constitution of our country.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Mr. Speaker, the single question before the House is whether the vote of the elector Downs should be counted from the State of Wisconsin.

The objection taken to this vote is that this elector was ineligible on the ground that he was an examining surgeon for invalid pensions. I think it has been sufficiently shown, Mr. Speaker, that the position he occupied is not an office, and therefore the objection is not well taken. It certainly has been shown by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. BURCHARD,] with the authorities which he read and from the nature of the duties to be performed by an examining surgeon, that this elector did not within the meaning of the Constitution hold any office, and therefore, as I have already remarked, the objection is not well taken. He is no more an officer than would be a lawyer who, for pay, manages a case for the Government of the United States; no more an officer than would be a contractor who erects a building for the Government of the United States under a contract; no more an officer than is the skilled mechanic who shoes the Army horses for the Government and receives his pay for that; or, as my friend here states, he is no more an officer of the Government than is a juror who sits in a national court in the trial of a cause.

But it would make no difference if he were an officer of the Government. It is perfectly well settled in all the books, and there is no case decided by any court in this country to the contrary, that the acts of an officer de facto are as to the public and third persons perfectly valid and lawful. There are constitutional and statutory provisions which declare certain classes of persons ineligible to certain offices; but the law is well settled that if such ineligible persons be nevertheless elected to office and enter on the duties thereof they become officers de facto, and their acts are entirely legal and valid. I never have met a lawyer of any reputation or learning who disputed this proposition, and I will assume that it is settled law. The electoral vote of the elector Downs is therefore, in any event, legal and valid and should be counted.

Mr. Speaker, we ought not to make bad precedents here, for unfortunately they may return to plague the inventors. If we establish a bad precedent now it may hereafter be turned against those who make it. There is a possibility that the democratic party may come into power some twelve, sixteen, or twenty years hence. [Great laughter.]

Several MEMBERS. O, heavens! do not put it off so long!

Mr. LAWRENCE. When they come here some twenty years hence, as it is possible they may do, claiming to have elected a President, they may find themselves embarrassed and harassed by the precedent they are endeavoring now to establish. [Laughter.]

A MEMBER. They will never come in as long as Wells lives to run a returning board. [Laughter.]

Mr. LAWRENCE. I do not think there is any possibility they can come into power very soon.

I can say now, Mr. Speaker, to the other side of the House, that President Hayes will give to this country an administration so pure, so just, so wise, so acceptable to the people of the country, accompanied with so many reforms, that the republican party will be installed in power more firmly at the end of his four years' term than they ever have been before. This is the firm conviction which rests upon my mind, and I rejoice to know that the blessings which flow from good government are shared by men of all political parties. We have all read the letter in which General Hayes accepted the nomination for the Presidency, and I think its sentiments meet a hearty response in the feelings and are approved by the judgment of the great mass of the people. The principles of this letter will be carried out honestly and fully. I say this because I know the man. I know his purpose is to give to the people of this country an administration satisfactory to every reasonable and just man in every portion of it, from one end to the other. But this is a digression from the subject immediately before the House.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not deem it necessary to discuss further the particular vote of this elector from Wisconsin, but I do desire to say a single word in reference to the case of the elector objected to from the State of Vermont.

Mr. PAGE. It is not in order to go back. [Great laughter.]

Mr. LAWRENCE. I merely want to give my republican friends on this side of the House some solace in reference to the vote that they were compelled to cast in the case of the elector Sollace from the State of Vermont. [Laughter.] I wish to show why it was we voted for the proposition in that instance that the vote of Sollace should not be counted.

Mr. STEVENSON. Let me ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. LAWRENCE. Very well.

Mr. STEVENSON. I wish to ask the gentleman from Ohio whether he did not vote in that case to exclude the vote of Sollace?

Mr. LAWRENCE. I did; and now I propose to bring solace to those who so voted.

Mr. STEVENSON. That is to the other side?

Mr. SPRINGER. Is not this case exactly like the case of Sollace, the elector from Vermont, for whose exclusion the gentleman voted?

Mr. LAWRENCE. I am coming to that.

Mr. Speaker, I voted for the proposition of the gentleman from New York [Mr. WOOD] affirming that the vote of Mr. Sollace, a presidential elector for the State of Vermont, "be not counted." I did this in order to reach a final decision by the House. The Senate had already decided that the vote of Sollace should be counted. Under the act of January 29, 1877, creating the electoral commission, all electoral votes are to be counted unless rejected by the vote of both Houses. The action of the Senate, therefore, determined that the vote of Sollace should be counted, no matter what the House might decide. The question was therefore settled by the action of the Senate. But I knew that if the House voted down the proposition of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. WOOD,] then the whole question would be open; it would be left without a final decision by the House at this point, and the entire controversy would be left unsettled. There would then follow new propositions and dilatory motions, which might occupy a day or more in debate and which might prevent the two Houses of Congress from completing the count of the electoral votes until the 4th of March; and it was to avoid this that, in common with other republican members, I voted as I did. I believe that the electoral vote of Sollace was legal and valid and should be counted. No vote of mine or of any republican member of this House was intended to throw any doubt on this question. If it becomes necessary I will vote in the same way as to Downs, the Wisconsin elector, and for the same reasons.

If some result had not been reached in the case of Vermont, if debate had been allowed to go on, if dilatory motions had been permitted to be piled one upon another, and the yeas and nays ordered upon each and all of them, this proceeding might have been prolonged until noon on the 4th day of March next. Then no result would have been reached. Before that hour the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS] would have urged some excuse for the resolution he introduced a few hours since. I must confess my great surprise that any gentleman should propose to this House that it should now assume the right of determining that there has been no election when we have not yet finished the counting of the votes.

That gentleman has invited this House, before the two Houses of Congress have finished the work of counting the electoral votes and while that duty is in progress, to take the advice of Jere. Black. By this I understand he alludes to the advice so recently given by that distinguished citizen in his argument before the electoral commission when the objections to the electoral vote of South Carolina were before it for consideration, and to that other advice which he gave when he declared that this House is the exclusive judge to decide when there has been a failure to elect a President. The country took the advice of Jere. Black on one occasion, a little more than sixteen years ago, as the Attorney-General of President Buchanan, but unfortunately it turned out to be the most expensive advice ever given or acted upon by a portion of the people. I trust the experiment may never again be repeated. It is high time we should cease to take such advice as that, and that we should take the advice of men who believe that this is a Republic; that it is clothed with the power to maintain its existence; that it is a nation; that its people belong to one common country and that they are determined that this Republic shall live through all time.

Mr. POPPLETON. I move that the time of the gentleman from Ohio be extended. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. COCHRANE.) That motion is not in order.

Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"

Mr. BURCHARD, of Wisconsin. I rise to a question of order. I trust that some slight degree, at least, of order will be preserved in the Hall.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair sustains the point of order. He has repeatedly requested the House to maintain order. The officers of the House will see that gentlemen in the lobby be seated and cease conversation. The gentleman from Wisconsin will suspend his remarks until order is restored.

Mr. WELLS, of Mississippi. I wish to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that the noise comes from the front, and not from the rear.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The noise comes from the rear as well as from the front.

[Mr. LYNDE and Mr. WALLING addressed the House. Their remarks will appear in the Appendix.]

At the conclusion of his remarks,

Mr. WALLING moved that the House take a recess until ten o'clock to-morrow morning.

Mr. GARFIELD. I raise the point of order upon that.

The SPEAKER. The motion is not in order.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move the previous question on the resolution and amendments, if there is no desire to further continue the discussion.

The SPEAKER. The amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. CASWELL] will first be read and submitted to the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the vote of D. L. Downs be counted with the other votes of the electors of the State of Wisconsin, the objections thereto notwithstanding.

Mr. MILLS. I desire to withdraw my proposition and to offer it as a substitute for all the other propositions.

Mr. GARFIELD. Is that in order?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has a right to withdraw his proposition.

Mr. GARFIELD. Not to renew it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can renew it as an amendment in the second degree.

Mr. GARFIELD. He cannot without consent renew it at any other place than where it was.

Mr. MILLS. I will state to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] who has always exhibited great fairness upon this floor—I accord him that praise—that I first had the floor——

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires that the gentleman from Texas may have a vote upon his proposition.

Mr. GARFIELD. I do not object to that; I only ask that it shall be kept in its place.

Mr. MILLS. It seems to be now in a place where it is so situated that I cannot have a fair vote upon it.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. I think I can unravel the difficulty.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the difficulty is unraveled.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. I think not. I am myself anxious to give a vote in favor of the proposition of the gentleman from Texas, but I cannot concede for an instant that the resolution, proposition, or motion, whatever he may term it, is germane to the question before the House. I think that mixing it up with the original proposition of the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. LYNDE,] making it as it were the negative of that proposition, is entirely irrelevant to the subject.

If the gentleman will put his proposition before the House so that it can be voted upon without any interference with the execution of this law, which requires us to act upon the objection sent down to us from the two Houses in joint meeting, then I am in favor of having a vote upon it.

Mr. MILLS. I will state to the gentleman from New York, and I do so in no unkind spirit, that I had the floor before he or any other gentleman in this House; had it on a question of privilege to offer my resolution alone.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. I do not dispute that.

Mr. MILLS. The Chair advised me to withdraw it from that position and to offer it as a substitute, telling me that I should have a vote on it in that situation. In deference to the judgment of the Chair I did so, but it seems to me now that it is not in a place where I can have a bona fide vote upon it in the House.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. The Chair cannot make any agreement for the House; the Chair does not assume to do so.

The SPEAKER. Certainly not.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. I know he does not. But I desire to understand from the Speaker the position of this question. If the proposition of the gentleman from Texas is the first to be voted upon, as a substitute for all the other propositions, then I shall be compelled to vote against it.

Mr. MILLS. Very well; you have the right to do so.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. If it is proposed as an isolated proposition, then I will vote for it.

Mr. MILLS. I offer it as a substitute for the whole.

Mr. WARREN. It seems to me that the gentleman from Texas has made a mistake in submitting his proposition at this stage. His resolution has no reference to the objection to counting the vote from Wisconsin. It goes further than that, and undertakes to declare that the whole action of the commission and of the Senate in ratifying the decision of the commission is beyond the power conferred by the electoral bill.

Mr. MILLS. Then vote against it.

Mr. WARREN. But I want to vote for it, or some similar resolution. In my judgment, it is a distinct, independent proposition, which has nothing to do with the execution of the law, but it has much to do with declaring what are the privileges and rights of the House—in expressing the opinion of the House upon the action of the commission. Now, I think the most of us on this side of the House will agree that the electoral commission has acted in a manner which the bill creating that commission did not authorize, and which it was not in the power of Congress to authorize by any act that it could pass. But that is a question which obviously comes up after we have gone through the duty which we agreed to perform when we passed the electoral bill.

I was surprised that my friend from Texas should offer that resolution at the time he did offer it, when the simple and sole question before the House related to an objection to counting the vote from Wisconsin and did not relate to the whole question of whether this count when completed was valid under the terms and provisions of the bill, or was consistent with the Constitution itself.

Mr. MILLS. I desire to ask if I change this proposition by consent may I have a vote on it in the House as an independent proposition?

Mr. WOOD, of New York. You may have my support.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. After the count is concluded, of course?

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. GARFIELD. I demand the previous question on the original proposition and the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. WALLING. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. If the proposition is to be withdrawn at this time, and offered as a separate proposition, can it come before the House?

The SPEAKER. A vote of the House may be taken on that proposition.

Mr. WALLING. After or before the conclusion of the count?

Mr. HURLBUT. After the counting of the vote.

Mr. MILLS. No, sir; directly after these votes I am to take a vote on this as an independent proposition before the Senate comes in.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GARFIELD. I object.

Mr. MILLS. Then I demand a separate vote on it as an amendment. I offer it as a substitute for all of them.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. We will vote it down.

Mr. MILLS. Then you violate a solemn agreement. I have been deceived if it is so; I have been trifled with if it be voted down.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. I objected to the gentleman's proposition when it was first presented.

Mr. MILLS. I want it voted on.

Mr. REA. Is it in order to offer a substitute for the gentleman's proposition?

The SPEAKER. It is not. The gentleman from Ohio demands the previous question on the pending proposition.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. HALE moved to reconsider the vote by which the main question was ordered; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. MILLS. I now demand that my proposition be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas, on the 7th day of November, 1876, an election was held in the several States of the Union for electors of President and Vice-President for the term of four years from the 4th day of March, 1877, at which election the majority of said electors favorable to the election of Samuel J. Tilden for President and Thomas A. Hendricks for Vice-President were duly and constitutionally elected by the qualified voters of the several States;

And whereas the returns of said election in the States of Louisiana and Florida were duly made to the officers in said States whose duty it was under the laws of the same to aggregate the votes of the States aforesaid and certify the names of electors so chosen by the qualified electors in accordance with law;

And whereas said return officers willfully, corruptly, and fraudulently suppressed the votes of those electors who were duly and legally elected, and falsely and fraudulently certified the election of persons who were defeated at the ballot-box;

And whereas the governors of said States falsely and fraudulently gave certificates of election of said persons who were defeated and refused them to those persons who were elected;

And whereas said false and fraudulent certificates were referred to a commission to investigate and report to Congress the true constitutional electoral votes in said States;

And whereas said commission refused to investigate the question as to who were the true constitutional electors chosen by the qualified voters of said States;

And whereas it appears in the count of the electoral votes in the presence of the Senate and House of Representatives, on account of said frauds in suppressing the true votes and certifying the false ones, that Samuel J. Tilden, though having received a majority of the electoral votes cast at the ballot-box in the several States, has not a majority in said joint count of all electors appointed in accordance with the terms of the Constitution;

And whereas Rutherford B. Hayes has not received a majority of the constitutional electors duly and legally appointed and the contingency provided for by the Constitution having happened when it becomes the duty of the House of Representatives to proceed immediately to the election of a President of the United States for the ensuing four years: Therefore,

Resolved by the House of Representatives, That said House will proceed immediately, in obedience to the Constitution, to choose a President from the persons having the highest number not exceeding three, on the list of those voted for as President.

Mr. WOOD of New York. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. In the first place my point of order is that the gentleman's proposition is not germane to the subject before the House; secondly, that under the electoral law it is not competent for this House to consider any question except the objections which are sent down to us from the joint convention.

This is another subject, beginning with another motion, and cannot be entertained by the Speaker as an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood consent was given to have a vote on this proposition.

Mr. MILLS. It was discussed.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. The gentleman has refused that, and insists on offering it as an amendment. I raise the point of order on him.

Mr. MILLS. The point of order comes too late, as the proposition has already been discussed.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it was allowed to come in by consent.

Mr. MILLS. No consent about it.

Mr. FOSTER. If you will find the written statement, you will find he accepts the question of order.

Mr. WALLING. That is not so; that was stricken out.

Mr. GARFIELD. The gentleman from Iowa reserved the point of order until such time as it was again read.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recollects that.

Mr. MILLS. The proposition has been discussed, and there has been no point of order raised. It has been by agreement.

Mr. BROWN, of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, my understanding in reference to this matter was there was merely the assurance of the Chair that the gentleman should have a vote at some point on his resolution.

Mr. MILLS. No, sir.

Mr. BROWN, of Kentucky. And general consent was not asked.

Mr. MILLS. I wish to state again——

Mr. BROWN, of Kentucky. In one moment. In the various whereases we all agree, but the final resolve the gentleman asks us to support puts us in a false position, and one I think he ought not to force upon his friends at this time.

Mr. POPPLETON. Is debate in order?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has allowed the gentleman from Texas considerable latitude.

Mr. POPPLETON. I rise to a point of order.

Mr. MILLS. The Speaker recognized me to occupy the floor upon a question of privilege, and before any other gentleman had the floor upon any question I had the floor to submit that proposition, upon the assurance of the Speaker I should have an opportunity to offer it as a substitute, and have it voted on in the position in which it is now placed. I then withdrew it, and offered it as it is. To refuse to take a vote on it is in violation of the agreement.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has gone long out of his way to induce the House to allow the gentleman from Texas to have a vote on the proposition.

Mr. JAMES B. REILLY. I desire to say that the attitude in which the gentleman puts this question before the House places, I apprehend, every gentleman on this side of the House in a false position. If put in proper shape, every member I believe on this side of the House would vote for it. In the shape it is I cannot. We are now proceeding under the electoral law, a law passed but a few days ago by ourselves, and it would be a sorry spectacle indeed if law-makers should become law-breakers. While I heartily approve of everything in the gentleman's resolution and would be only too glad to have an opportunity to vote for it, I cannot conscientiously vote for it at this time; and I appeal to the gentleman not to place in a false position at this time his friends who are in full accord and sympathy with him in regard to his proposition. I am as sincere as he is or as any gentleman in this House is in a desire to enter a protest against this wrong and outrage upon justice, but I am anxious to have it in a proper shape; and I again appeal to the gentleman not to place us in this position, for if he forces us to vote upon the proposition now we will be compelled to vote against it.

Mr. MILLS. I have but one object, and that is to discharge the sworn duty which rests upon me to obey the Constitution of the United States. I find myself situated in the contingency in which a President of the United States has not been elected, and I offer a resolution that the House take what is the proper constitutional course in that contingency.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. I rise to a question of order. I want the Chair to decide whether this is in order.

Mr. HARRISON. I wish to speak to this question of order. I ask the Speaker if it is in order at any time to introduce a proposition by agreement which is illegal in itself?

The SPEAKER. That is for the House to decide.

Mr. HARRISON. We are here acting under a law. It is immaterial what our own private views may be.

Mr. MILLS. That law is not superior to the Constitution.

Mr. HARRISON. Under that law we are to decide whether the vote of Wisconsin is to be received or not. We cannot at this time decide any other question. That is a law we cannot get rid of. Whatever our own private views may be, we are compelled to obey the law.

Mr. LANE. It is not above the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. BLAND. I rise to a parliamentary question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLAND. I make this point. I understood the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. MILLS,] at the suggestion of a number of gentlemen, especially the gentleman from New York, [Mr. WOOD,] had agreed to withdraw this resolution at the present time, with the understanding that we should have a vote upon it at a future time.

Mr. GARFIELD. That is right.

Mr. BLAND. And that the previous question was then moved on the other two propositions.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the statement of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] is correct.

Mr. BLAND. That was the understanding of the House, and it was upon that understanding that the previous question was moved. I want that the gentleman's proposition shall be voted upon, but it was understood that it should not be voted upon at this time; and it is bad faith to insist upon it now at this juncture. The arrangement was made by unanimous consent, and the Speaker put it to the House.

Mr. MUTCHLER. The Constitution requires that the two Houses shall proceed to count the vote, and the contingency when this House shall elect a President of the United States does not arise until it is ascertained by the count of the vote that no one has been elected President. And inasmuch as the count has not yet been completed, it is not competent for this House to proceed to elect a President of the United States.

Mr. MILLS. That makes nothing against my resolution. You can vote against it.

Mr. MUTCHLER. I say that for that reason it is not competent for the House at this time to proceed to elect a President of the United States, because the count of the electoral vote has not been completed. And until it is completed and it is ascertained that no one has a majority of all the votes cast, it is not competent for this House to proceed to an election. The resolution of the gentleman from Texas is therefore out of order.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. Clearly out of order.

The SPEAKER. Does the Chair understand that the statement of the gentleman from Missouri is correct? That the understanding was that the gentleman from Texas should have an opportunity hereafter to have a vote upon his proposition?

Mr. WALLING. Before the completion of the count.

Mr. GARFIELD. I demanded the previous question, Mr. Speaker, upon the resolution of the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. LYNDE,] and one amendment to it. My motion did not include the proposition of the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I desire to ask the Chair one question which I think will settle this controversy. I ask the Chair whether it was not understood and announced by the Chair that upon the gentleman from Texas withdrawing his resolution, in the nature of an amendment, he should have a vote upon it in the House before the Senate came back to proceed with the count?

Mr. CAULFIELD. That is it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state exactly what occurred between the Speaker and the gentleman from Texas.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS] was in the situation in which he was not likely to get any vote on his proposition, because from the past votes of the House it was evident that the amendment to the amendment would be adopted, the effect of which would be to prevent any vote on the proposition of the gentlemen from Texas.

The Chair then sent for the gentleman from Texas and told him of that condition of things, and suggested to him that his only remedy was to withdraw his proposition and get it in in some other way. The Chair has exhausted every agency known to him to secure to the gentleman from Texas a vote in the House on his proposition. When the proposition was originally offered the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. MCCRARY] raised a question of order upon it and reserved it as against the proposition.

Mr. MILLS. Permit me to ask the Speaker a question. Did I not have the floor upon a question of privilege before this question in regard to the vote of Wisconsin came up?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas was not entitled to the floor, because the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. LYNDE,] who offered the objection, was entitled to it.

Mr. MILLS. Had you not recognized me when the gentleman from California [Mr. LUTTRELL] moved a recess and I contended that he could not do it?

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognized the gentleman from Texas only to facilitate his getting a vote on his proposition.

Mr. MILLS. Did not the Chair tell me that he would recognize me first?

The SPEAKER. The Chair told the gentleman that he would recognize him so as to secure if possible a vote upon his proposition.

Mr. BLAND. The House has given unanimous consent that the proposition of the gentleman from Texas shall be submitted after the count of the electoral votes is completed.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I ask the question whether the Chair did not put it to the House whether there was objection to the gentleman from Texas having a vote on his resolution as an independent question?

The SPEAKER. The Chair did, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HURLBUT] objected.

Mr. PLAISTED. I rose in my place and objected.

Mr. HURLBUT. When the proposition was first presented I objected to its being considered until after the electoral count was completed.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. I rose in my place and objected to its being considered until after the electoral count was completed.

Mr. JAMES B. REILLY. I wish to say that this controversy depends upon the gentleman from Texas retaining a position which will place his amendment before the House.

Mr. MILLS. Has not the previous question been ordered upon the two amendments pending?

The SPEAKER. It is demanded.

Mr. MILLS. Was not the previous question ordered by the House?

Mr. JOHN REILLY. If the gentleman from Texas divides the resolution I think there will be no difficulty about it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] stated the proposition correctly, that unanimous consnt was given to the gentleman from Texas to offer his proposition as an independent proposition.

Mr. BLAND. After the completion of the count of the electoral votes.

Mr. HARRISON. I would like to ask if this is a part of the counting of the vote of the State of Wisconsin. I hold that no agreement, even if given by every member of the House, could admit that which is not a part of the objection to the vote of Wisconsin. No unanimous consent can do upon this floor what is illegal. It is the law that the vote shall be counted, and if every member of this House should agree to admit a proposition having no reference to the count, it would be illegal, and the Chair would be compelled to rule that it should not come in. If he has ruled otherwise, then it is his duty to take back his ruling.

Mr. MILLS. I only want to be restored to the place I occupied, anterior to all these propositions.

Mr. HARRISON. You had no right to that place.

Mr. MILLS. I had it by the accord of the Speaker.

Mr. HARRISON. But the Speaker could not give you that right.

Mr. MILLS. Who presides over this House, I would like to know?

Mr. HARRISON. The Speaker cannot give the right to do anything that is illegal. We are now counting the vote of Wisconsin, and until that vote is disposed of, nothing else is in order.

Mr. BROWN, of Kentucky. We are acting under the provisions of the electoral bill. The proposition of the gentleman from Texas asks us to repudiate that bill, to stop this count, to undo all that has been done under the bill, and I submit it to the Chair that such being the condition of this proposition the Chair cannot entertain it, and I make that point upon it if its consideration is insisted upon at this time and in this connection.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Kentucky object to the gentleman from Texas offering it hereafter as an independent proposition?

Mr. EDEN. I object to unanimous consent until after the count is completed.

Mr. BROWN, of Kentucky. I have no objection to the gentleman from Texas having a vote upon this proposition at the proper time.

Mr. CAULFIELD. When will that be?

Mr. BROWN, of Kentucky. Most of the affirmations of his resolution I indorse, but the conclusion I cannot indorse without stultifying and putting myself in a false position before the country. Therefore I insist that at this time the resolution cannot be entertained, and is not in order.

Mr. CAULFIELD. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BROWN, of Kentucky. Yes, sir.

Mr. CAULFIELD. Will the gentleman from Kentucky tell us when this proposition will be in order?

Mr. BROWN, of Kentucky. I am willing to make it in order by unanimous consent after the counting of the electoral vote is completed.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thought unanimous consent had been given.

Mr. MILLS. It was.

Mr. WHITE. I object to any unanimous consent.

Mr. POPPLETON. I rise to a point of order.

Mr. BLAND. I desire to say that I understood——

The SPEAKER. One at a time, if gentlemen please.

Mr. POPPLETON. I desire to raise this point of order: The motion for the previous question was made and sustained and the main question was ordered. The previous question as moved by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] included this amendment of the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. MILLS.] I appeal to the notes of the stenographer to prove the correctness of the assertion which I make. Therefore the proposition of the gentleman from Texas is included under the previous question.

The SPEAKER. If it is in order.

Mr. POPPLETON. There was no question of order raised upon it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. MCCRARY] reserved the point of order.

Mr. POPPLETON. I call for the notes of the stenographer to bear out my assertion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recollects distinctly that the gentleman from Iowa reserved all points of order against the proposition.

Mr. CONGER. Allow me to corroborate the statement of the Speaker. When the Speaker proposed that the proposition of the gentleman from Texas, if in order, might be submitted as an amendment, I arose in my place, as the Speaker may remember, and requested that he would not then decide whether the proposition was or was not in order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recollects that.

Mr. CONGER. And after making that request, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. MCCRARY] rose and reserved all points of order against the proposition.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. I made a point of order against it when it was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there unanimous consent that the proposition of the gentleman from Texas shall be voted upon as an independent proposition?

Mr. WOOD, of New York. At the proper time.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. After the count has been completed.

Mr. WADDELL. Will the Chair recognize me to make——

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize no one until all gentlemen are seated.

Mr. WALLING. I rise to make a privileged motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is not recognized by the Chair to make any motion.

After a pause,

The SPEAKER said: The Chair will hear the gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. WADDELL.]

Mr. WADDELL. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. The House seems in a dilemma upon this matter. The Chair has ruled, as I understand, that if objection is made this proposition cannot be entertained at this time. I now ask the Chair if, after the House has voted upon the proposition in regard to the Wisconsin vote, and Mr. Hayes has been elected, will the proposition then be in order?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Texas to offer the proposition.

Mr. WADDELL. After the conclusion of the count.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can then move to suspend the rules and adopt his proposition.

Mr. GARFIELD. I call for the regular order.

Mr. STENGER. Can a separate vote be taken upon the preamble of the resolution?

The SPEAKER. Under a motion to suspend the rules and pass the preamble and resolution, the question is not divisible, for the suspension of the rules will include the suspension of the rule which allows a division of the question.

Mr. EDEN. I call for the regular order.

Mr. WALLING. I rise to make a privileged motion, and I insist upon my right to do so. I move to reconsider the vote by which the House ordered the main question upon the resolution of the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The SPEAKER. That has already been done.

Mr. WALLING. That has not been done—at least within my hearing.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is mistaken. He certainly will not contradict the Chair.

Mr. WALLING. I did not intend to do that. I wanted to say——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. HALE] made the motion to reconsider and to lay that motion on the table.

Mr. HALE. I myself made that motion, and it was carried.

Mr. EDEN. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is upon the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. CASWELL] to the proposition of the gentleman from Wisconsin farthest from the Chair, [Mr. LYNDE.]

Mr. SPRINGER. Let that amendment be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the vote of D. L. Downs be counted with the other votes of the electors of the State of Wisconsin, the objections thereto notwithstanding.

The question was taken by a viva voce vote, but before the result was announced,

Mr. SPRINGER said: Is it in order to move to lay that upon the table? If so, I make that motion.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. I submit that the House is dividing upon the amendment and it is too late to make that motion.

Mr. HALE. If the motion to lay on the table should prevail, it would carry everything with it.

Mr. SPRINGER. I want to carry everything with it.

Mr. GARFIELD. The House was dividing upon the proposition.

The SPEAKER. The House was dividing upon the proposition. If the gentleman had risen in time, the Chair would have recognized him.

Mr. SPRINGER. I withdraw the motion.

The question was then taken upon the amendment; and upon a division there were—ayes 112, noes 98.

Before the result of this vote was announced,

Mr. WALLING. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. COX. Before the roll-call commences I would like to ask whether the gentleman from Texas will accept a modification of his proposition.

The SPEAKER. That proposition will be entertained after the disposition of this question. It is not now before the House.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 77, nays 136, not voting 77; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Bagby, George A. Bagley, John H. Baker, William H Baker, Ballou, Banks, Belford, Blair, Bradley, William R. So the amendment of Mr. CASWELL was not agreed to.

During the roll-call the following announcements were made:

Mr. SCALES. My colleague, Mr. DAVIS, is absent on account of illness.

Mr. STONE. The gentleman from Kentucky, Mr. DURHAM, the gentleman from Georgia, Mr. HARRIS, and the gentleman from Indiana, Mr. CARR, are absent on account of sickness. Mr. CARR, if present, would vote "no."

Mr. JOHN REILLY. My colleague, Mr. HOPKINS, is absent on account of sickness.

Mr. GOODE. The gentleman from West Virginia, Mr. WILSON, is absent on account of sickness.

Mr. A. S. WILLIAMS. My colleague, Mr. DURAND, has been kept away from the House during all these proceedings in the electoral count by severe sickness.

Mr. HOUSE. The gentleman from New York, Mr. HEWITT, is absent on account of illness.

The result of the vote was announced, as above stated.

The question recurring on the resolution of Mr. LYNDE, it was agreed to.

Mr. LYNDE moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The later motion was agreed to.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. I now ask that the Senate be notified.

The SPEAKER. The law requires that.

Mr. MILLS. As I have been deceived in regard to my proposition I withdraw it. I do not care to be stultified by having a vote on the resolution after both Houses have declared the election of a President of the United States.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I ask that Rule 134 be enforced and that these lobbies be cleared. [Cries of "O, no."]

Mr. KASSON. Let there be a warning that order must be preserved, or the lobbies and the galleries will be cleared.

Mr. GARFIELD. If the Speaker gives a caution that no demonstrations will be allowed, that will no doubt be sufficient.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to state to gentlemen on the floor and in the galleries that no expression of approval or disapproval will be allowed; and any one in the galleries guilty of such demonstration will be put under arrest.

COUNTING THE ELECTORAL VOTE.

At five minutes before four o'clock a. m. the Doorkeeper announced the Senate of the United States, who entered the Hall, headed by their President pro tempore, and accompanied by their Sergeant-At-Arms and Doorkeeper.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore of the Senate took the chair as presiding officer of the joint meeting.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint meeting of the two Houses of Congress for counting the electoral vote resumes its session. The Houses acting separately having considered and determined the objection to the certificate from the State of Wisconsin, the Secretary of the Senate will read the resolution of the Senate.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the vote of Daniel L. Downs as an elector for the State of Wisconsin, be counted together with the other nine electoral votes of that State, the objections made thereto to the contrary notwithstanding.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Clerk of the House will read the resolution of the House.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the vote of Daniel L. Downs, as an elector of the State of Wisconsin, should not be counted, because he held an office of trust and profit under the United States, and therefore was not constitutionally appointed an elector by said State of Wisconsin.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The two Houses not having concurred in an affirmative vote to reject, the vote of the State of Wisconsin will now be counted. Tellers, announce the vote of the State of Wisconsin.

Mr. ALLISON, (one of the tellers.) The State of Wisconsin casts 10 votes for Rutherford B. Hayes, of Ohio, for President, and 10 votes for William A. Wheeler, of New York, for Vice-President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (at five minutes past four o'clock a. m., March 2, 1877.) This concludes the count of the thirty-eight States of the Union. The tellers will now ascertain and deliver the result to the President of the Senate.

Mr. ALLISON (one of the tellers) announced the result, as follows:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In announcing the final result of the electoral vote the Chair trusts that all present, whether on the floor or in the galleries, will refrain from all demonstrations whatever; that nothing shall transpire on this occasion to mar the dignity and moderation which have characterized these proceedings in the main, so reputable to the American people and worthy of the respect of the world.

The whole number of the electors appointed to vote for President and Vice-President of the United States is 369, of which a majority is 185.

The state of the vote for President of the United States, as delivered by the tellers, and as determined under the act of Congress approved January 29, 1877, on this subject, is:

For Rutherford B. Hayes, of Ohio..... 185 votes
For Samuel J. Tilden, of New York..... 184 votes

And the state of the vote for Vice-President of the United States, as delivered by the tellers, and as determined under the act of Congress approved January, 29, 1877, on this subject, is:

For William A. Wheeler, of New York..... 185 votes
For Thomas A. Hendricks, of Indiana..... 184 votes

Wherefore, I do declare—

That Rutherford B. Hayes, of Ohio, having received a majority of the whole number of electoral votes, is duly elected President of the United States for four years, commencing on the 4th day of March, 1877.

And that William A. Wheeler, of New York, having received a majority of the whole number of electoral votes, is duly elected Vice-President of the United States for four years, commencing on the 4th day of March, 1877.

This announcement, together with the list of the votes, will be entered upon the Journal of the two Houses.

The count of the electoral vote being completed, and the result declared, the joint meeting of the two Houses is dissolved. The Senate will now retire to its Chamber.

The Senate accordingly retired from the Hall of the House of Representatives at ten minutes past four o'clock a. m., March 2, 1877.

The SPEAKER then resumed the chair and called the House to order.

Mr. TUCKER. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. ATKINS. I hope the gentleman from Virginia will withdraw that motion and allow us to take up the Army appropriation bill.

Mr. TUCKER. I think after such a scene as has now transpired we should adjourn. I insist on my motion.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at four o'clock and eleven minutes a. m.) the House adjourned till twelve o'clock m.

The following petitions, &c., were presented at the Clerk's desk under the rule, and referred as stated:

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter of the Secretary of War, transmitting, for the information of the Committee on Military Affairs, a letter of the Adjutant-General of the 24th instant, touching the memorial of the General Assembly of Colorado asking for an appropriation for a military wagon-road from White River agency, Summit County, to Hot Sulphur Springs, Grand County, Colorado; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 27th instant, a report of the Secretary of State relating to the payment of moneys claimed to be now due the Dominican government from the Government of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

EDWARD A. LELAND—VETO MESSAGE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read:

To the Senate of the United States:

I have the honor to return herewith, without my approval, Senate bill No. 691, entitled "An act for the relief of Edward A. Leland."

The reasons for withholding my approval may be found in the accompanying communications received from the Secretary of the Interior.

U. S. GRANT.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, February 28, 1877.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, February 27, 1877.

SIR: I have the honor to return herewith the bill (S. 691) entitled "An act for the relief of Edward A. Leland," accompanied by copy of a letter from the Commissioner of Patents suggesting an objection to the bill in its present form, and to recommend that it be returned to Congress for amendment in accordance with the suggestions of the Commissioner.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully,

Z. CHANDLER,
Secretary.

The PRESIDENT.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, UNITED STATES PATENT OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., February 27, 1877.

SIR: In the matter of the enrolled bill (S. No. 691) extending letters-patent of Edward S. Leland, I have the honor to report that said letters-patent were granted for an improved paint-can, August 14, 1860, for the term of fourteen years, that they consequently expired on the 14th day of August, 1874, whereupon the invention became the property of the public.

The present act proposes to extend the term of the patent seven years from said 14th day of August, 1874, and give to them the same effect in law as if they had been originally granted for the term of twenty-one years.

It will be seen, therefore, that those who have innocently used and purchased the invention since the expiration of the letters-patent on the 14th of August, 1874, under the impression that the invention was the property of the public, will, by the retroactive terms of the bill, be liable for damages for such use upon suits for infringement.

This hardship is generally, if not always, provided against by a proviso to such bills, setting forth in terms "that no person shall be held liable for the infringement of said patent, if extended, for making use of said invention since the expiration of the original term of said patent and prior to the date of its extension."

Unless such a proviso is incorporated into the present bill the injustice alluded to may be done.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

ELLIS SPEAR,
Commissioner of Patents.

HON. Z. CHANDLER,
Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. MORRILL. As I do not see the chairman of the Committee on Patents in the Chamber, I move that the message be referred to the Committee on Patents.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. MORRILL, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 4112) directing the Secretary of the Treasury to report upon the necessity of a public building at Rochester, New York; reported adversely thereon, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3925) relating to the production of fruit brandy, and to punish frauds connected with the same, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. WRIGHT, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 401) for the relief of Mrs. Flora A. Darling, of New Hampshire, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Frances Lynch, of Cheraw, South Carolina, praying compensation for subsistence stores furnished the United States Army in 1865, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

He also, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 858) for the relief of William C. Edmonston, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1038) for the relief of George E. I move that the memorials be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORT ON MINING STATISTICS.

Mr. ANTHONY. I am directed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred a resolution of the House of Representatives to print 4,000 copies of the report of R. W. Raymond on mining statistics, to report it without amendment, and I ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring,) That there be printed of the report of R. W. Raymond on mining statistics for 1875, with the accompanying engravings, 2,500 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, 1,000 for the Senate, and 500 for the Secretary of the Treasury and commissioners.

The resolution was agreed to.

REPORT ON OREGON ELECTORAL VOTE.

Mr. ANTHONY. I am directed by the same committee, to whom was referred a resolution to print five thousand copies of the report on the electoral vote in the Oregon case, to report it with an amendment striking out the words "and House" after "Senate," so as to read:

Resolved, That 5,000 additional copies of the evidence and report in the case of the Oregon electoral vote be printed for the use of the Senate.

I ask for the present consideration of the resolution.

Mr. WHYTE. I object to the consideration of the resolution at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the resolution goes over.

VIRGINIA E. WHITE.

Mr. KERNAN. I am authorized by the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1016) for the relief of Virginia E. White, of Ohio County, West Virginia, to report it without amendment. There is a report of the House committee which states the facts, and that report is presented with the bill. I have been requested to ask that the bill be considered now. I would state that it returns $1,250 of tax erroneously and improperly assessed on income.

By unanimous consent the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Virginia E. White, widow and executrix of Andrew White, deceased, who was administrator, with the will annexed, of Daniel Steenrod, deceased, $1,250, being the amount of tax erroneously and improperly assessed on income on the estate of Daniel Steenrod, deceased, and paid by Andrew White as the administrator of the estate, and since his death recovered of Virginia E. White as the executrix of Andrew White by the residuary legatees of Daniel Steenrod.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HERMAN HULMAN.

Mr. COOPER. I am directed by the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 256) for the relief of Herman Hulman, of Terre Haute, Indiana, to report it without amendment.

Mr. MORTON. I should be glad to have that little bill considered now, if there is no objection to it.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to allow the amount of the claim filed by Herman Hulman, of Terre Haute, Indiana, for abatements in his office, for the sum of $1,809.41, as the abatements asked for by him are right and proper, and he should not be required to pay that amount to the Government.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I think there ought to be some explanation made of the bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. The only objection I have to the bill is the reason given in the bill for its passage. I have no doubt the bill is just. It is the abatement of a forfeiture imposed on a distillery by an erroneous estimate of its capacity. I suppose it is all correct, but I do not like the phraseology of it, and if we are to amend it at all, the reason given in the bill for its passage ought to stricken out. The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. COOPER] examined it carefully, I have no doubt.

Mr. MORTON. An amendment would necessitate sending the bill back to the House and endanger its passage. Although there may be objection to the phraseology of the bill, I prefer to have it passed as it is.

Mr. COOPER. I examined the bill once before for the committee, and reported under instruction from the committee in favor of its rejection. Upon a recommitment to the committee and an examination of the facts, the committee became satisfied that the Commissioner of Internal Revenue was mistaken himself in regard to the facts. After examining the facts thoroughly we became convinced that it is similar to a bill heretofore passed and that it is in strict accordance with law; that is, that Mr. Hulman should not in any way be held responsible for the mistake which was made by the assessor upon an application made out by the assessor, which failed to accomplish what Mr. Hulman intended and what the assessor supposed would be accomplished by the application. The bill is just. The phraseology certainly ought to be amended, but as an amendment to the bill would send it back to the House, and would be simply a change of phraseology, it had better be allowed to pass in its present form.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COLONEL FRANK L. WOOLFORD.

Mr. McCREERY. I rise to ask for the present consideration of a bill which I hold in my hand. I do not believe, if the Senate hear it read, that there will be any objection from any quarter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the motion? The Chair hears none.

Mr. McCREERY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 4117) for the relief of Colonel Frank L. Woolford, late of the First Kentucky Cavalry Volunteers, of certain disabilities.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It relieves Colonel Frank L. Woolford, late of the First Kentucky Cavalry Volunteers, from all the penalties and effects of General Order No. 117, dated at Washington, March 24, 1864, signed E. D. Townsend, Assistant Adjutant-General, dishonorably dismissing him from the service of the United States, and restores him to all the rights and privileges he would be entitled to had said order not been issued and enforced.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I trust that this bill will pass without any opposition. When at this moment, on this side of the House, we are in such good humor, and when I trust our friends on the other side are a little penitent, we ought to be magnanimous. This man was a good soldier on the Union side; but he had a frailty; he thought he was an orator; and upon one occasion he was a little too "handy with his tongue," to use an expression very common among the Scotch-Irish of Pennsylvania, and he made some very foolish remarks. After having fought and having been wounded, and having gone everywhere that duty called him, he was dismissed by the Secretary of War. I think it was a little cruel, and I trust this bill will be passed.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REPORT ON LOUISIANA INVESTIGATION.

Mr. HOWE. The Committee on Privileges and Elections has instructed the subcommittee designated to make inquiry in the State of Louisiana to make a partial report which I now send to the Chair and ask to have printed. Further report will be made from the same committee some days hence touching a portion of the State not included in this report.

Mr. SAULSBURY. The Senator from Indiana [Mr. McDONALD] and myself being unable to agree in our conclusions with the majority of the subcommittee on questions of law and fact I have been authorized by the Committee on Privileges and Elections to submit the views of the minority, which I shall be prepared to do to-day. I ask therefore that I may be allowed to place upon the file to-day the views of the minority in connection with the report which has been presented by the Senator from Wisconsin.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the submission of the views of the minority to accompany the report? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I desire that the same order in reference to printing may be taken in regard to the minority report that may be made with reference to the regular report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That has been ordered.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN.

On motion of Mr. MITCHELL, it was Ordered, That Mrs. Elizabeth Stevens, administratrix of Hazard Stevens, have leave to withdraw her petition and papers from the files of the Senate.

TROOPS IN THE MODOC COUNTRY.

Mr. WHYTE submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War furnish for the use of the Senate a copy of the final report of the operations of the troops in the Modoc country by General Alvan Gillem, while under his command, which report is dated 1st June, 1874.

INAUGURATION CEREMONIES.

Mr. MORRILL. I offer the following resolution, which is customary, I believe:

Resolved, That a committee of three Senators be appointed by the President pro tempore to make the necessary arrangements for the inauguration of the President-elect of the United States on the 5th of March instant.

The resolution was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. MORRILL, Mr. HOWE, and Mr. MCDONALD as the committee.

Subsequently Mr. MCDONALD, being unable to serve, was excused from service and Mr. MCCREERY appointed in his place.

AMENDMENTS TO AN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. MORRILL. I am directed by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to report an amendment intended to be proposed to the bill (H. R. No. 4680) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes. I do not ask to have it printed, but merely referred to the Committee on Appropriations. I make that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. COOPER, Mr. MCDONALD, and Mr. KELLY submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them to the bill (H. R. No. 4680) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SARGENT submitted the following report; which was read:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 4559) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, and for prior years, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 49, 58, 68, and 70.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments numbered 1, 2, 3, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, 50, 51, 52, 53, 54, 55, 56, 57, 59, 60, 61, 63, 64, 65, 66, 69, 71, 72, 74, 75, 76, 77, 78, 79, and 80, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 4 and agree to the same, with an amendment, as follows: Strike out of said amendment these words "to H. F. Hutchinson, $259.25," "to Andrew Carnes, $147.60," "to Louis Delano, $313.04," and strike out in lines 12 and 13 the words "nine hundred and thirteen dollars and sixty-eight," and insert in lieu thereof "one hundred and ninety-three dollars and seventy-nine;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 5, with an amendment substituting the words "Treasury Department" for "Internal Revenue Office;" and the House agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 14, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 5 of said amendment strike out "three hundred and seventy" and insert "and fifty-three;" in lines 6 and 7 strike out "five hundred and twenty-four" and insert "two hundred and seven;" and add at the end of the amendment the following: "and no part of this sum shall be used for payment of postage or purchase of postage-stamps;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 15 and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: Strike out from said amendment the word "four," and strike out on page 6, line 2, of the bill, the words "hundred thousand" and insert after the word "seven," in line 1, page 6, of the bill, the words "and for prior years;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 62, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of said amendment substitute the following:

"For defraying the expenses of the Supreme Court and circuit and district courts of the United States, including the District of Columbia, and also for jurors and witnesses and expenses of suits in which the United States are concerned, of prosecution for offenses committed against the United States, and for the safe keeping of prisoners, to be disbursed by the Attorney-General, being deficiencies for the fiscal year 1877 and prior years, $300,000."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 67, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: In lieu of "thirty-seven" insert "twenty-five;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 73, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: Insert before the word "seven" the words "one thousand;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 81, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: In line 11, page 9, of the bill strike out "the" and insert in lieu thereof "a;" and after the word "Digest," in the same line, insert "of the rules and practice of the House;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 82, with an amendment as follows:

Insert: "for miscellaneous items, $15,000," "for clerks to committees, $4,527," "for pages, $2,369.56," "for folding documents, $3,000," "for stenographers to committees, $780;" and in line 21, page 9, of the bill strike out "annum" and insert "session."

And the House agree to the same.

A. A. SARGENT,
WM. WINDOM,
R. E. WITHERS,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

J. D. C. ATKINS,
HENRY WALDRON,
ROB. HAMILTON,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. SARGENT. Mr. President, the two principal points of difference between the two Houses were the items relating to judicial deficiences and the pay of the Navy. By the letters of the First Comptroller and of the Attorney-General, submitted to the Senate and also to the committee of conference, it was shown that to conduct the business of the Department of Justice for the remainder of the fiscal year, including the balance on hand, there would be required about $1,200,000. The appropriations last year were less by some $750,000 than the ordinary appropriations for carrying on the judicial system. I have no doubt that the expenditures during the present fiscal year have been considerably increased by the operation of the United States statute providing for the appointment of deputy marshals in cities of 20,000 inhabitants and upward to supervise elections, and the payment to them of $5 a day for a period not exceeding ten days during the time so employed. But making all the allowance that could be paid for marshals, still there was much more of a reduction in the present year's appropriations than ordinarily suffices to run the courts of the United States.

This item was the last one on which we arrived at a conclusion in the committee of conference, and we were able to procure from the conferees of the House only $300,000. Accepting the principle laid down very generally in the Senate last session, that if either House refused to appropriate more than a given sum, but while appropriating an insufficient sum did not insist upon a change of law, and merely left a deficiency, the other House after full and free conference would assent to that result and leave the deficiency thereafter to be provided for, the conferees on the part of the Senate concluded that it was better to accept this $300,000, and leave to a future session of Congress the payment of the necessary deficiency which will be left.

Of course we appreciate the fact that all the courts of the United States may be closed up; that we may have no grand juries to inquire into crime; that we may have no petit juries to try crime; that witnesses may not be brought or may remain unpaid. It is an unfortunate circumstance that the two Houses are so far apart upon this deficiency; but we have done what we thought our duty in accepting the amount which the House would give, and therefore report the bill back with this item of deficiency at $300,000.

I should like to say, however, that it is not possible to allege that the Department of Justice, even if it has appointed and paid these deputy marshals, has exceeded its authority, has done anything more than obey the plain provisions of law; and unquestionably Congress must, when there is time to consider the matter, do justice in this case. But to insist on it at the present time would be simply to sacrifice the bill, and therefore we have reported it in this shape.

The pay of the Navy stands somewhat in the same fix. The House made an indefinite appropriation which by careful figuring amounts to $150,000, and in addition to that an appropriation of $500,000, in all $650,000, to bridge over a gap of $1,650,000. This seemed to the Senate conferees to be a mere matter of arithmetic, and the elements of our calculation were not successfully assailed; in fact there was hardly an attempt to show that the Navy Register does not represent correctly the number of officers, the number of men, and the amount of pay allowed to each grade; and taking the average between sea pay, leave or waiting orders pay, and shore duty pay, that this average would prove that the amount which was asked by the Secretary of the Navy was correct.

In this connection the House assented to an addition of $500,000 to the $560,000, which they had before in the deficiency bill inserted, making, so far as I can see or the Senate conferees could understand, a probable deficiency of $400,000 more at the end of the fiscal year. But acting upon the same principle which we adopted in regard to the judiciary item, we accepted this amount, which was the last figure that would be conceded. If there is a deficiency at the end of the year it will have to be made up in the future, because we have made no provision for reducing the number of officers or reducing their pay, and it is due to the House conferees to say that they did not make a proposition tending in that direction, and in fact expressed a disinclination to do so, appreciating as well as the Senate conferees that the service of the officers entitled them to the pay they are now receiving.

These are the two principal items of difference and they have been reconciled in this way. For the reasons I have given I recommend the adoption of the report.

The report was concurred in.

TAX ON GRAPE BRANDY.

Mr. SARGENT. Mr. President, I am compelled probably for the whole of the remainder of the session, certainly after a few moments shall have passed, to be out of the Senate upon the Committee on Appropriations. The Finance Committee this morning, by the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. MORRILL,] reported a very important bill affecting the distillers of brandy from grapes, largely affecting my State. It has the sanction of the Department. I think it will take but a moment to pass it. It is in the shape of an amendment to a House bill intended to cover the same matter. The measure reported by the Committee on Finance is in harmony with the views of the Department, although they were not ready to assent to the bill as passed by the House. I should like to appeal to the Senator from Vermont to call up that bill and see if it cannot be passed in a moment while I can be in the Senate.

Mr. MORRILL. My impression is that the justice of the bill asked for on the part of the Senator from California will so recommend it that there will be no lengthy discussion upon it, that it will barely have to be read in order to be approved.

Mr. DAWES. What is it?

Mr. MORRILL. It provides merely that there shall be a credit given on grape brandy for the space of three years and that warehouses shall be established in different parts of the State of California.

I will say this, that the State of California is a large State, runs a great length upon the shore of the Pacific, and many of the valleys from top to bottom are covered with grape-vines. The committee have been informed that the capital invested in these grape-vines and the lands will be entirely lost to the large majority of the owners unless they can have a credit given for the time that it takes the brandy to ripen, which is three years.

The bill has been carefully prepared at the Department, providing all possible safeguards against any fraud or collusion by which the United States shall be defrauded of any portion of the revenue that may be due, but merely giving these men who are engaged in grape culture an opportunity to keep the brandy in Government warehouses until it shall become fit for sale.

Mr. DAWES. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Vermont if there is any danger of the Government being deceived about the character of the brandy, whether it can distinguish between the grape brandy and other brandy? That used to be the great difficulty in fixing these bills. There is the apple brandy, there is the peach brandy, and there are various kinds of brandy that might be manufactured and called grape brandy. If the bill is properly guarded——

Mr. SARGENT. It is identified by warehouse stamp.

Mr. DAWES. I know.

Mr. SARGENT. The bill, it seems to me, should cover brandy distilled from apples, grapes, or peaches.

Mr. DAWES. I know the Senator from California has always been anxious to have so broad a bill as that, but the difficulty of having so broad a bill as that is that it would substantially relieve all the Pacific coast from paying duties on that kind of liquor. If it does not cover any more than what the Senator from Vermont intends to cover by it, it is an excellent bill.

Mr. SARGENT. That is all it does.

Mr. MORRILL. My impression is that the bill has been submitted to the various members of the Committee on Finance for careful examination. There is also a provision left in the bill providing that the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may make all needful rules and regulations for carrying into effect the provisions of this act, and such regulations when made shall have the force and effect of law.

Mr. DAWES. I know nothing against the bill. Both Senators will excuse me for making inquiries about the bill. The matter had come up in another place so often that I was anxious to know whether they had succeeded in guarding that point in the bill.

Mr. MORRILL. I am also as familiar perhaps as the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. DAWES. And a great deal more so.

Mr. MORRILL. Now, familiar with the previous importunities for such a bill as this, I have consented to this with reluctance; and after examination and on conference with the officers of the Internal Revenue Department, I am satisfied that it will be productive of more good than evil. I therefore can support it.

Mr. MERRIMON. I beg to ask the Senator from Vermont if there is any substantial reason why the provisions of the bill might not be extended to other States? In my own State the grape culture is very considerable and increasing annually, and I am sure that its provisions would be as interesting to the people of North Carolina in proportion as to the people of California; and unless there is some special reason why this discrimination should be made, I cannot consent to the passage of such a bill.

Mr. MORRILL. Certainly the Senator from North Carolina will see that this is an experiment. There are other States more largely interested than North Carolina, outside of California. There are Missouri, Iowa, and Ohio; but the Committee on Finance chose to report a bill confined to this State, so as to try it for a year, and if it operates properly it may become a general law. I hope, therefore, the Senator from North Carolina will not ask to have this made a general law now, and thereby defeat it, because it is a real necessity for California, where they have so large an amount of land and capital invested in the grape culture.

Mr. DAWES. I did not understand the Senator. Is it confined to California for one year?

Mr. MORRILL. No; it is confined to California, but not for one year.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 3925) relating to the production of fruit brandy, and to punish frauds connected with the same.

Mr. COCKRELL. I suppose, as a matter of course, if it works well in California, this will be extended to all the other States. I think the law ought to operate upon Missouri. Certainly we are raising a great deal of wine there. We can supply the whole world with wine hereafter, and it is a production that ought to be encouraged.

Mr. MORRILL. This is not for wine culture. It is exclusively for grape culture devoted to grape brandy.

Mr. COCKRELL. We use that occasionally too. [Laughter.]

Mr. PADDOCK. If the statement of the Senator from Vermont is correct, it ought to be applied to Nebraska as well.

The amendment reported by the Committee on Finance was to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and in lieu thereof to insert the following:

That the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall be, and hereby is, authorized, in his discretion, and upon the execution of such bonds as he may prescribe, to establish warehouses, to be known as special bonded warehouses, not exceeding ten in number in any one collection district, exclusively for the storage of brandy made from grapes, each of which warehouses shall be in the charge of a storekeeper, to be appointed, assigned, transferred, and paid in the same manner that storekeepers for distillery warehouses are now appointed, assigned, transferred, and paid. Every such warehouse shall be under the control of the collector of internal revenue of the district in which such warehouse is located, and shall be in the joint custody of the storekeeper and the proprietor thereof, and kept securely locked, and shall at no time be unlocked or opened or remain open except in the presence of such storekeeper or other person who may be designated to act for him, as provided in the case of distillery warehouses. And such warehouse shall be under such further regulations as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may prescribe.

SEC. 2. That every distiller of brandy from grapes, upon rendering his monthly return of materials used and spirits produced by him, shall immediately pay the tax upon such spirits, or may, after they have been properly gauged, marked, and branded, under regulations to be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, and also stamped as hereinafter provided, cause them to be removed in bond from the place of manufacture to a special bonded warehouse, under such regulations, and after making such entries, and executing and filing with the collector of the district in which such spirits were manufactured such bonds and bills of lading, and giving such other additional security as may be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury.

SEC. 3. That all brandy intended for deposit in a special bonded warehouse, before being removed from the distillery, shall have affixed to each package an engraved stamp indicative of such intention, to be provided and furnished to the several collectors as in the case of other stamps, and to be charged to them and accounted for in the same manner; and for the expense attending, providing, and affixing such stamps ten cents for each stamp shall be paid the collector on making the entry for such transportation.

SEC. 4. That any brandy made from grapes removed in bond according to law may, upon its arrival at a special bonded warehouse, be deposited therein upon making such entries, filing such bonds and other securities, and under such regulations as shall be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury. It shall be one of the conditions of the warehousing bond covering such spirits that the principal named in said bond shall pay the tax on the spirits as specified in the entry or cause the same to be paid within three years from the date of the original gauging of the same, and before withdrawal, except as hereinafter provided.

SEC. 5. That any brandy made from grapes may be withdrawn once and no more from one special bonded warehouse for transportation to another special bonded warehouse; and such brandy shall, on its arrival at the second special bonded warehouse, be immediately entered therein, from which warehouse it shall be withdrawn only on payment of the tax or for immediate exportation. In case the brandy withdrawn is intended for deposit in another special bonded warehouse, an additional stamp, indicative of such intention, shall be affixed to each package withdrawn, as in the case of brandy withdrawn from a distillery intended to be so deposited. And in case the brandy is intended for exportation, an engraved stamp, indicative of such intention, shall be affixed to each package so removed, as in the case of spirits withdrawn from a distillery bonded warehouse for exportation, under the provisions of section 3330, Revised Statutes; all the provisions of which section not inconsistent with this act are hereby made applicable to such withdrawals. And all withdrawals authorized by law of grape brandy from any special bonded warehouse shall be upon making such withdrawal entries, and under such regulations, and unless the withdrawal is upon payment of tax, upon the execution of such bonds and bills of lading as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may prescribe. Export bonds given under the provisions of this act shall be canceled upon the production of such certificates of lading as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may prescribe, or upon proof of loss at sea satisfactory to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. And the provisions of existing law relative to an allowance of loss by casualty in a distillery bonded warehouse are hereby made applicable to brandy stored in special bonded warehouses, in accordance with the provisions of this act.

SEC. 6. That the provisions of existing law in regard to the exportation of distilled spirits are hereby extended so as to permit the exportation from special bonded warehouses of grape brandy free of tax in any original cask containing not less than twenty gallons, and for the exportation of grape brandy upon which all taxes have been paid, with the privilege of drawback in quantities of not less than one hundred gallons, and in the distillers' original casks, containing not less than twenty wine gallons each.

SEC. 7. That whenever, in the opinion of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, any special bonded warehouse is unsafe or unfit for use, or the merchandise therein is liable to loss or great wastage, he may discontinue such warehouse, and require the merchandise therein to be transferred to such other warehouse as he may designate, and within such time as he may prescribe; and all the provisions of section 3272 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to transfers of spirits from warehouses, including those imposing penalties, are hereby made applicable to transfers from special bonded warehouses.

SEC. 8. That the tax upon any brandy distilled from grapes, removed from the place where it was distilled, and in respect of which any requirement of this act is not complied with, shall, at any time, when knowledge of such fact is obtained by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, be assessed by him upon the distiller of the same, and returned to the collector, who shall immediately demand payment of such tax, and, upon the neglect or refusal of payment by the distiller, shall proceed to collect the same by distraint. But this provision shall not exclude any other remedy or proceeding provided by law.

SEC. 9. That nothing in this act shall be construed as extending the time in which the tax on brandy made from grapes shall be paid beyond three years from the day on which the taxable quantity is ascertained by the gauger; and all brandy made from grapes, found elsewhere than in a distillery or special bonded warehouse, not having been removed therefrom according to law, and all brandy on which the tax has not been paid within three years of the date of the original gauging shall be forfeited to the United States.

SEC. 10. That the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may make all needful rules and regulations for carrying into effect the provisions of this act, and such regulations when made shall have all the force and effect of law.

SEC. 11. That in case any grape brandy removed from the distillery for deposit in a special warehouse shall fail to be deposited in such warehouse within ten days thereafter, or within the time specified in any bond given on such removal, or if any grape brandy deposited in any special warehouse shall be taken therefrom for deposit in another warehouse, or for export, or otherwise, without full compliance with the provisions of this act, and with the requirements of any regulations made thereunder, and with the terms of any bond given on such removal, then any person who shall be guilty of such failure, and any person who shall in any manner violate any provision of this act, or of the regulations made in pursuance thereof, shall be subject, on conviction, to a fine of not less than $100 nor more than $5,000, and to imprisonment for not less than three months nor more than three years, for every such failure or violation; and the spirits as to which such failure or violation shall take place shall be forfeited to the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

P. J. QUATTLEBAUM.

Mr. STEVENSON. I am instructed by the Committee on the Judiciary to report a bill to remove the political disabilities of P. J. Quattlebaum, of Georgia. I ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent, the bill (S. No. 1288) to remove the political disabilities of P. J. Quattlebaum, of Georgia, was read three times.

The bill was passed, two-thirds of the Senators present voting in favor thereof.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WEST. From the committee of conference on the bill (H. R. No. 4187) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes, I beg leave to report that the two committees have had under consideration the various differences existing between the two bodies, and have agreed upon all except such as I will now designate.

The Senate committee adheres to the proposition of the Senate amendment to increase the amount for transportation by railroad from $9,000,000 to $9,600,000, with the provision also that $250,000 of that amount may be used by the Postmaster-General to obtain proper facilities on the great trunk lines of railroads, &c. The committee on the part of Senate would have been willing to modify the amount contained in that proposition, but they were not met with a corresponding disposition on the part of the House.

The committee also report back a disagreement as between the two bodies on the amendments of the Senate providing for $500,000 to carry the mails between the United States and China and Japan, and for a similar sum to carry the mails from New Orleans to Rio de Janeiro, the Senate committee offering with respect to these two items to reduce the amounts to $300,000 respectively. I am requested to ask that the Senate insist upon its amendments on those two items and ask for a further conference on the part of the House. I make that motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Louisiana moves that the Senate insist on its amendments named and ask for a further conference.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the committee.

JULIUS S. BOHRER.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour has expired, and the Chair calls up the unfinished business, which is the bill (S. No. 1010) for the relief of Julius S. Bohrer, master in the United States Navy. The question is on the amendment reported by the Committee on Naval Affairs, as amended, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to pay to Julius S. Bohrer, retired master, United States Navy, or his legal representatives, the pay and allowances of a retired master from the 30th day of December, 1865, to the 5th day of June, 1876, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred it.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ACTS OF CONTINENTAL CONGRESS.

Mr. HOWE. I move to proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 1019.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 1019) to provide for the reprint of the resolves, ordinances, and acts passed by the Continental Congress and the Congress of the Confederation, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HOWE. There are some blanks to be filled. I move to fill the first blank with "five thousand."

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOWE. The next I move to fill with "fifteen hundred."

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOWE. The next with "three thousand."

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOWE. I move to insert in the next blank "five hundred."

The motion was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, reads as follows:

That there be printed at the Government Printing Office, for the use of Congress, 5,000 copies of the resolves, ordinances, and acts of the Continental Congress and the Congress of the Confederation of the United States, 1,500 copies for the use of the Senate, 3,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 500 copies for the use of the Executive Departments.

SEC. 2. That said resolves, ordinances, and acts shall be taken from the journals and printed with a proper index under the supervision of the Librarian of Congress.

SEC. 3. That the sum of $1,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to defray the expense of making such work and index; the same to be disbursed under the direction of the Joint Committee on the Library.

The bill was reported to the Senate; ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SWAMP LANDS IN MISSOURI.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 1253, reported favorably from the Committee on Public Lands.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 1253) granting to the State of Missouri all lands therein selected as swamp and overflowed lands, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WRIGHT. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Missouri the necessity for this legislation.

Mr. COCKRELL. The necessity for this legislation is, that under the act of Congress, as determined by the Supreme Court of the United States and the supreme court of Missouri, swamp land was conveyed by the General Government to the State in fee, and it was conveyed by the State to the counties, but patents have never been issued. A large number of persons are living on these lands; they cannot get them, and they are delayed year after year before the investigations can be made in the Land Office. I have a letter from the Commissioner of the General Land Office, stating that there will be only a small amount of land actually affected by this bill. It affects a class of persons who have invested their all on this land, and they want to get some title. They are paying taxes on it, and still have not title.

Mr. WRIGHT. Is there not authority of law now to make a patent by the United States?

Mr. COCKRELL. It has to go through a mode of investigation and they have been at it so long that it takes years and years to settle it.

Mr. WRIGHT. Then what is the short-cut proposed by this bill?

Mr. COCKRELL. It is simply to vest the title and confirm it without waiting for action at the Land Office, which may take three or four years and at an expense which would be greater than the value of the land.

Mr. WRIGHT. Do I understand that these lands have been selected and it is known exactly what they are?

Mr. COCKRELL. Yes, sir. The bill says:

That all lands in the State of Missouri selected as swamp and overflowed lands, and regularly reported as such to the General Land Office, and now withheld from market as such, so far as the same remain vacant and unappropriated, and not interfered with by any pre-emption, homestead, or other claim, under any law of the United States.

It is only to expedite the business and give title. They have been at it now fifteen years and have not got through with it, and it is a very great expense and very little profit to anybody.

Mr. WRIGHT. I merely want to understand this bill. As I understand, under the law as it is at present, notwithstanding reports by the proper officers of the swampy character of this land, those reports have to be investigated by the superior officers and their swampy character in fact ascertained and settled. Now it is proposed by this bill that all lands which have been returned, without waiting for an investigation by the proper Department, shall vest at once in the State of Missouri—all that have been selected——

Mr COCKRELL. All lands regularly "selected as swamp and overflowed lands and regularly reported as such" and "now withheld from market" on that account. There will not be in the State of Missouri probably three hundred acres or five hundred acres, according to the letter of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, about which there will be any controversy as to their swampy character.

Mr. WRIGHT. Then I understand this legislation has the approval of the Department.

Mr. COCKRELL. They make no objection to it. As a matter of course they do not recommend one way or another.

Mr. WRIGHT. Has the matter been referred to the Department?

Mr. COCKRELL. Yes, sir; and I have the letter of the Commissioner of the General Land Office here. I hope the bill will be passed. It is simply confirming title to a class of persons who are very needy and have expended large sums of money.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LANDS IN KLAMATH INDIAN RESERVATION.

Mr. KELLY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 1316) to adjust the claims of the owners of lands within the limits of the Klamath Indian reservation, in the State of Oregon.

Mr. INGALLS. I am convinced that it will be impossible for that bill to pass the Senate without a very protracted discussion, that the present stage of business will hardly permit. I regret exceedingly to interpose an objection to any motion made by the Senator from Oregon, but I ask if his motion is open at this time to an amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It cannot be amended.

Mr. INGALLS. Can I not move to amend his motion by proposing to proceed to the consideration of another bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is not in order. The Senate can negative the motion, and then any Senator who obtains the floor can move the consideration of any other bill.

Mr. INGALLS. The subject has already been twice before the Senate.

Mr. KELLY. Four times.

Mr. INGALLS. Then certainly it has been twice. [Laughter.] That does not contradict my statement that the subject has already been twice before the Senate and has received a very considerable investigation; and the more I have examined it the deeper have become my convictions that it establishes an injurious and dangerous precedent, and that the bill ought not to pass. Of course, if the Senate see fit to take up the bill, I cannot prevent it; but I submit to the Senate whether it is advisable at this stage of the business to take up a bill that must lead to protracted discussion.

Mr. KELLY. It is well known that I have not had very much of the time of the Senate, but this bill has, as stated by the honorable Senator from Kansas, not only been considered twice, but four times. I do think every Senator knows its merits or its demerits, if it has any. It is the only favor I shall ask of the Senate, and I trust there will be no objection to it. I will not, so far as I am concerned, ask more than five minutes to explain it. It may be that I may have to answer objections that may be urged against it, but surely the discussion has been so elaborate that every Senator must have made up his mind. I ask as a favor now that the bill be taken up and voted on.

Mr. WRIGHT. I agree with the Senator from Kansas, from my knowledge of the bill and the information that has come to me since it was up before, that it cannot pass without very protracted discussion. There are questions involved in this bill of very great importance. I feel, just as he does, the very greatest reluctance to antagonize anything that the Senator from Oregon may want at this time, and I do not feel like standing here and objecting to taking up this bill; but the Senate must take it up with a full knowledge that if taken up it will lead to discussion, and possibly a discussion for the remainder of the day. That is the condition of it. I am very sure there are objections to the passage of this bill, and objections that the Senate will be called upon to consider, and that they will deliberate long and carefully upon before they pass this bill. In view of the state of the session now, and the very important matters that are pressing upon us, I cannot see any ground on which this bill can be pressed at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon moves the present consideration of the bill named.

Mr. INGALLS. If the Senate decline to take up this bill, as I hope they will, it is my purpose to ask attention to House bill No. 2454, concerning which I presume every Senator on this floor has been importuned during the past session. It is the bill providing for the amending of the laws granting pensions to soldiers and sailors of the war of 1812 and their widows, and for other purposes, which involves the consideration of the question of reducing the period of limitation from sixty to ten days, and also removing the bar that was imposed by the resolutions of 1862 and 1867 from certain soldiers of that war who were upon the pension-roll, but who were supposed to have participated in some way in the acts of the southern confederacy. This subject is one of confessedly the very highest importance to a very large number of citizens of this country; and as it is of a character that applies to all sections of the country, and it has been urged upon the attention of the Senate so repeatedly and with so much strenuousness, I hope the Senate will decline to proceed with the consideration of a purely local bill that establishes a dangerous precedent, and allow me to call up House bill No. 2454.

Mr. KELLY. Just one word, Mr. President. I think it is hardly fair that this bill is to go over and go over for further consideration. I assented to it before so that Senators might have an opportunity to fully investigate it. Now, at the close of the session, objection is made that we cannot hear it. I am very certain that my friend from Iowa is mistaken when he supposes it will take any length of time. It has been so fully discussed by Senators that all know its merits, and if the Senator from Iowa has anything now to urge he can certainly do it in a brief space of time. I insist on my motion.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I shall vote with my colleague to take up this bill. I think it ought to be taken up and disposed of. I cannot vote for the bill, however, myself when it is up; but I do not base my objections to the bill upon the same ground on which many Senators who have spoken have based their objections, namely, that these parties had no title to the lands included in the Klamath agency. My own opinion is that they have the title, and it is a controversy that ought to be settled; but I cannot give my consent to the settlement proposed in this bill. At the same time I am willing to vote that the matter shall come up, that it may be considered and disposed of one way or the other.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Oregon, [Mr. KELLY.]

The question being put, the yeas were 8.

Mr. KELLY. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 24, nays 14; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bayard, Bruce, Burnside, Chaffee, Cooper, Cragin, Ferry, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Hamlin, Johnston, Jones of Florida, Kelly, Kernan, McCreery, Mitchell, Norwood, Oglesby, Paddock, Randolph, Stevenson, West, Whyte, and Windom—24.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Cameron of Wisconsin, Christiancy, Cockrell, Dawes, Howe, Ingalls, Logan, Morrill, Sharon, Sherman, Teller, Wadleigh, and Wright—14.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Allison, Bailey, Barnum, Blaine, Bogy, Booth, Boutwell, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Clayton, Conkling, Conover, Davis, Dennis, Dorsey, Eaton, Edmunds, Frelinghuysen, Hamilton, Harvey, Hereford, Hitchcock, Jones of Nevada, McDonald, McMillan, Maxey, Merrimon, Morton, Patterson, Ransom, Robertson, Sargent, Saulsbury, Spencer, Thurman, Wallace, and Withers—37.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

Mr. MORRILL. I recollect a bill of something of this character years ago, and in looking upon the map where the road was surveyed it was quite obvious that the parties in locating the road had taken a route not the nearest one, but the one that would give them the most and the best land, going far greater distances than were required for the road from one point to another and going through the most valuable portions of the land. It seemed to me at that time that the bill was grossly unjust and unfair. I desire to ask the Senator from Oregon if this is that bill, the road referred to in which went, instead of a straight line, ziz-zagging about through different portions of the country, in order, as was perfectly apparent, to obtain the greatest quantity and best of the lands.

Mr. KELLY. Shall I answer now?

Mr. MORRILL. Certainly.

Mr. KELLY. The honorable Senator from Vermont is very much mistaken. It is true the road is somewhat crooked, but if the Senator were only there he would see that it is the only possible way in which the road could be made unless it was to go over mountains sometimes averaging from five to ten thousand feet in height, rendering the road wholly valueless. The road was intended to bring into market the most valuable lands for settlement.

Mr. INGALLS. If I can have the attention of the Senator from Vermont a moment upon the subject to which he has referred, I should like to read to him a single paragraph of a communication from the United States Indian agent stationed at this agency, dated the 23d of September, 1874. It appears as an appendix to the report in the House of Representatives that was made by Mr. LAFAYETTE LANE at the first session of the present Congress. Mr. Dyar, the agent, says:

> This road runs diagonally through the whole length of the Klamath reservation, a distance of sixty miles or more, traversing the very best portions of the same; in fact, is so located as to embrace within the limits of the six miles in breadth more than one-half of all the land upon the reserve suitable for cultivation or for winter grazing.

Mr. MORRILL. If this is the road to which I alluded, I am very sure that if Senators could see the line of the road upon the map there could be but a very small vote obtained in favor of a bill of this kind.

Mr. KELLY. Mr. President, I will refer to the act of Congress granting lands in the first instance—I do not wish to occupy the time of the Senate, however, in reading—but it is contained in the thirteenth volume of the Statutes at Large, page 355. The act was approved July 2, 1864, granting lands to the State of Oregon for the purpose of constructing a road from Eugene City, by way of Middle Fork of Willamette River, and the most feasible pass in Cascade range of mountains, near Diamond Peak. I call the attention of the honorable Senator from Vermont to this act. It was marked out in the act of Congress where the road should go:

> The most feasible pass in Cascade range of mountains, near Diamond Peak, to the eastern boundary of the State, alternate sections of public lands, designated by odd numbers, for three sections in width on each side of said road.

Here the act of Congress granting to the State of Oregon certain lands prescribed where the road should go; it said it should go through the most feasible pass in the Cascade Mountains, and should go by Diamond Peak to the eastern boundary of the State of Oregon. The fault, if there be any, is with Congress in making the grant, but really there was none, because the object of Congress was to open up the public lands of the United States; the road was for the purpose of bringing the lands into market where they were most valuable. That was the reason why this grant was made. There was certainly no wrong in the company following the requirements of the law of Congress and going where Congress designated that the route of the road should be. Whether the agents of the State or the company that had in view the construction of the road intended before the law was passed to get the best lands I do not know, but such is the law of Congress which prescribes the direction and the route.

The State of Oregon granted these lands on the 24th of October, 1864, to the company for the purpose of constructing the road. They built the road at an expense of some $300,000 more than they can sell the lands for at this day. It cost them more than they can get. The company, in fact, became insolvent and was compelled to transfer these lands. They built the road, and it is now used by the United States in carrying goods to this very Klamath Indian reservation.

Not only that, but there was no reservation there at the time. The Indian reservation was located subsequently to the passage of the law of Congress making the grant, but I admit prior to the time when the lands were given by statute to the company. The treaty with the Klamath Indians was not ratified until the 2d of July, 1866, two years after the company had commenced the construction of this road and built it. Article 12 of that treaty is in these words:

This treaty shall bind the contracting parties whenever the same is ratified by the Senate and President of the United States.

And it was proclaimed in 1870, long after this road had been constructed and accepted. These lands had been earned by the company; they had been patented to the company; and after the road had been constructed and the lands selected, then the Indian agent chose to establish this reservation upon these lands. The same Indian agent from whose report my friend from Kansas has read in the strongest terms recommends that the United States grant to the company other lands in lieu of these, so that the Indians may remain where they are. I admit that these lands that they have given up are valuable; they are the most valuable there are in the grant; there is no doubt of that; and very reluctantly will they consent to take other lands for them; but the Indian agent and the United States authorities there, as well as the State authorities, have recommended that for the purpose of peace and quiet with the Indians they be allowed to take the lands now patented to the company, be permitted to keep them as their own, and that other lands in lieu of these which were earned by the company shall be granted to it, but only upon the condition that it shall reconvey all lands patented to it to the United States.

It is nothing but good faith, Mr. President, that this should be done. I do not care about it, and I will not consume the precious time of the Senate; because I admit that the few remaining hours are precious indeed, and I do not wish to take any more time than is barely necessary to state this case, which I know is just and right.

Mr. WRIGHT. I should like to ask the Senator from Oregon one or two questions. Will he be good enough to tell me how much land this company gets, or rather the capitalists who bought out the original road or company, how much they get outside the reservation and how much they already have?

Mr. KELLY. I cannot say; but I will say to my friend that all outside of the reservation is virtually of little account. It is through a mountainous region. A great portion of it in Southeast Oregon is sage-brush land, and a large portion of it is on the Cascade Mountains which is virtually worth nothing and will not be for many, many years to come, when it may possibly be valuable for the timber. In fact, the land granted outside of this reservation is comparatively worthless.

Mr. WRIGHT. Do they not get outside of this reservation 6,700,000 acres of land?

Mr. KELLY. I do not know. Perhaps they do.

Mr. WRIGHT. What is the length of the road built by them?

Mr. KELLY. I think it is four hundred and odd miles.

Mr. WRIGHT. Is the road now in use or is it out of repair?

Mr. KELLY. It is in use at this day. It is the road over which goods are taken to the Klamath Indian reservation; the very goods that the United States furnishes to the Indians, the annuity goods, are all transported over this road. It is the regular route through that section of the country and the only one.

Mr. WRIGHT. One other question. How much land in this reservation will they get by this bill?

Mr. KELLY. The amount within the reservation is 402,000 acres.

Mr. WRIGHT. What proportion of that do they get?

Mr. KELLY. Four hundred and sixty-one miles is the length of the road.

Mr. WRIGHT. How many acres will they get in the reservation?

Mr. KELLY. I cannot tell that; 102,000 acres, I think.

Mr. WRIGHT. Do they not get about 130,000 acres?

Mr. KELLY. No, sir; 102,313.09 acres is the exact amount, I find.

Mr. WRIGHT. This bill has been before the Senate several times, as has already been stated; objections have been pointed out to it; and those objections to my mind have never been removed. Now, I do not propose to discuss it, but I send to the Clerk's desk an article upon this subject taken from an Oregon paper which I ask to have read as a statement of the nature of this grant and the character of this bill, how it came that the men who are now trying to get these lands got the whole of this grant, how much they have paid for it, how much they have already got, and how much they will get by this proposed legislation, and also to show the condition of this grant at the time of the legislation under which they pretend to claim. I send it to the Clerk's desk that it may be read, being, as I believe and as I am advised, a correct statement of this entire transaction, and if it be true it is a better statement of it, a more thorough statement of it, and one that will be better understood than any that I could make. I may say that it has been handed to me by a gentleman in whom I have entire confidence, and it is said to present the exact character of this entire transaction.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, in the chair.) The Clerk will read the paper.

The Chief Clerk read as follows, from the Oregon State Journal of April 1, 1876, published at Eugene City:

Mr. LANE, from the Committee on Public Lands, submitted a report strongly recommending the passage of his bill. In this report he says: "In February, 1870, a treaty with the Klamath Indians was ratified, which treaty set apart a large tract of land as the Klamath Indian reservation. Said reservation embraced within its limits 130,377 acres of land, which under the act of July 2, 1864, legally inured to the said road company. The particular section of road which runs through the reservation was accepted according to law by the governor of the State as early as 1866, four years prior to the ratification of the treaty referred to." Mr. Lane here makes a false statement. The particular section of the road above referred to was not approved by the governor in 1866. It was not constructed till the fall of 1869, and was accepted and approved by the governor on the 12th day of January, 1870.

Mr. LANE knew, by reference to volume 16, United States Statutes, page 707, (to which his attention had been called by a copy of a letter from Governor Grover to the Secretary of the Interior,) that a treaty was concluded October 14, 1864, between the United States and the Klamath and Modoc tribes and Yakooskin's band of the Snake Indians. Ratification, with amendments, was advised July 2, 1866; amendments assented to December 10, 1869, and proclaimed by the President February 17, 1870.

The amendments referred to had nothing whatever to do with the boundary of the reservation. It will be seen that this treaty was concluded October 14, 1864. The act of Congress granting lands to the State of Oregon for the purpose of constructing a road was approved July 2, 1864, and by the Legislature of the State of Oregon conferred upon the O. C. M. Road Company on the 24th October, 1864, ten days after the Klamath treaty was concluded. But by the terms of the act of Congress rights to particular lands did not attach till the State or company selected the route and made a survey of the same, and filed a map thereof with the Secretary of the Interior. This was not done till in 1865. The report of the superintendent of the road bears date of November 29, 1865. By reference to the report it will be seen that Mr. Pengra, the superintendent, spent several days with the superintendent of Indian affairs while in the Klamath country. Negotiations preliminary to treating for peace had been opened by Pauline, a chief of a band of Snake Indians. In mentioning this matter Mr. Pengra uses this language, under date of August 6, 1865, (for the report is made in the form of diary:) "This chief, (Pauline) I was informed, had frequently expressed a desire to treat and be at peace and amity with the whites, * * * but finally agreed to meet the superintendent in Sprague's River Valley, some forty miles distant, (from Fort Klamath,) and near the eastern boundary of the country claimed by the Klamath Indians."

So Mr. Pengra, superintendent of the road company, knew at this time of the location of the Klamath reservation, before any road-line was settled. It requires no great knowledge of law to understand that the conclusion of this treaty specifying the metes and bounds of the reservation would be as valid in the matter of precedence as the filing of pre-emption or homestead claims, with this additional advantage in favor of the rights of the Indians: their title had been from time immemorial and was still in the Indians. The act of Congress of July 2, 1864, excludes from the operations of this grant all lands sold or otherwise reserved prior to the location of the road line. We have not a copy of the act before us, but give the substance from memory. Hence, by priority of rights the reservation lands are excluded from the operations of the grant.

The reserved rights of the Indians date by treaty from the 14th day of October, 1864, and no specific claim of the road company could attach prior to the adoption of the road-line by the company, made after the making of the superintendent's report of explorations and surveys, which bears date of November 29, 1865, more than a year after the treaty was concluded. Yet in view of these facts we find, upon examination of Mr. Lane's report and accompanying papers, that a studied effort has been made to mislead the members of Congress into a support of this measure. Governor Grover writes to the Secretary of the Interior under date of October 22, 1875, and says: "The line of the wagon-road passes through Klamath-Lake basin; and Klamath Indian reservation, as established subsequent to the listing of the wagon-road lands to the State for the use of said Wagon-Road Company, embraces 130,377 acres of said lands belonging to the Wagon-Road Company. * * * The Wagon-Road Company and their successors in interests have paid taxes upon said reservation lands from the time when they were segregated to said company."

The governor does not give us the dates of segregation as he might have done, since they are matters of record in his office, but the Commissioner of the General Land Office gives them as April 21 and December 8, 1871, and April 2, 1873. The governor further says: "The entire wagon-road grant has been transferred by sale to a number of prominent capitalists, chiefly of the State of California, as I understand, without notice that the Klamath Indians claimed to hold the lands," &c.—just as though the Government was under obligations to make good frauds perpetrated by the road company! But the facts are the "prominent capitalists" did know of the reservation claim, or their agents did who made the contract. Mr. Pengra, in writing to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, in his zeal to promote the interests of "prominent capitalists," says "that the lands granted to the State of Oregon by the act July 2, 1864, were, by the Legislative Assembly of said State in September following, granted to the Oregon Military Road Company," when he knew very well that it was not till October 24, ten days after the Klamath treaty was concluded.

So it is, through Mr. Lane's report and accompanying papers, a studied effort to cover up material facts and give prominence to certain other facts, with a view to mislead Congress. The whole job is a swindle upon the Government. It is a case of "prominent capitalists" against the people; in which event persons are generally found ready to assist "capitalists." These "prominent capitalists" paid the road company $125,000 for their land grant, containing between six hundred thousand and seven hundred thousand acres of land, exclusive of this on the reservation, and now it is proposed to take from the poor men seeking Government lands on which to make homes one hundred and thirty thousand acres more and give these "prominent capitalists." The road is out of repair and impassable across the Klamath Marsh, and no effort is being made to keep up repairs. In fact, neither the company nor "prominent capitalists" feel under any obligations to keep up repairs on the road. Road companies and swamp-land "angels" already hold a monopoly of the lands of our State, and now to give one hundred and thirty thousand acres more to "prominent capitalists" is about equivalent to publishing to the world: No immigrants wanted unless they have money to pay such prices as these monopolists see proper to charge.

It might be well enough for our next Legislature to investigate this land business, and see how much "prominent capitalists" have to do with it.

Mr. WRIGHT. I have nothing to add to that article. As I stated before, the article is vouched for to me by a gentleman in whom I have confidence. If the statements made in that article to any considerable extent are true, then there ought not to be a vote in the Senate for this bill. It is very manifest that the bill has passed the House on a misunderstanding and mistake as to the true condition of these lands and the condition of our legislation. I do not know how many Senators paid attention to the article just read, but so many as have paid attention to it, it seems to me, must be satisfied at once that this would be most flagitious legislation. I trust that the bill will not be pressed, under the circumstances, and if it is, I trust that it will be defeated.

Mr. KELLY. Some of the statements in the paper have a semblance of truth and others are destitute of truth. It says that the lands were not selected and patented, as I understand, until about 1869. That probably is the date when they were finally examined; that is, when the last portion of the lands was examined by the executive of the State of Oregon, then Governor Wood; but long before that certain other portions were examined, and the company received their lands and they were selected and patented. And here, by the way, I will correct an error that I made. I said that the whole amount in the reservation was 102,313 acres. That is the amount of lands that are patented to the company for which they have received patents from the United States. The whole amount is, as was stated by the Senator from Iowa, 130,000.

Mr. WRIGHT. That is to say they will get 130,000 acres in lieu of lands in this reservation if this bill passes?

Mr. KELLY. Yes, sir; and these are the only valuable lands they have. Again the writer of the article says they paid $125,000. In fact they paid $200,000 in gold and agreed to pay $100,000 more toward the construction of a railroad from California to Oregon in case it was built that way; if not, they were to pay the $200,000 in gold. That was the sum paid by the present owners. There is an error of only $75,000 there. So far as the listing and patenting of the lands are concerned and so far as the dates when the Indian treaty went into operation are concerned there is no dispute. All that is matter of record. It is a matter of record that the treaty was proclaimed in 1870 on the 17th day of February. It is true it was ratified July 2, 1866; but two years before that the company had commenced to construct this road on the line prescribed by the act of Congress to the most feasible pass in the Cascade Mountains by Diamond Peak, following the line laid out for them by the act of Congress.

Mr. President, I have an opinion that was given by my colleague and his law partner when they examined the title to these lands. His firm gave an opinion, fortified by reason and authority, to show that this company was entitled to these lands, after examining all the questions of law and of fact. This company propose, in the interest of peace with the Indians, to give up all these valuable lands that they have earned and which have been patented to them, and to which they have in my judgment an unquestioned title. They are willing to give them all up for the sake of peace. If I had time I could read from the report made by the committee of the House, in which they refer to Hon. E. P. Smith's opinion, Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and that of Mr. Dyar, and that of the governor of Oregon. Two letters from Mr. Smith, the Commissioner, are here, all suggesting the propriety of this measure.

It may be said that if these gentlemen are the legal owners by patent from the United States, why do they not assert their rights in the courts? I have no doubt they could do so; and if they were to do that, it might produce trouble. The Indians are on the lands, and if the gentlemen concerned should assert the title they have, the result necessarily would be to produce disquiet. They do not want to do that. As they have earned the lands, I think it is but just that they should receive compensation for them by other lands in lieu. It is certainly not asking anything unreasonable after they have earned these lands and propose to give them up and transfer the title they have, to ask for other lands in lieu of them. The bill has heretofore been amended in several instances by the Senate and everything, it seems to me, is guarded for the interest of the Government.

Mr. OGLESBY. Mr. President, this bill passed the House of Representatives, came to the Senate, and was referred to the Committee on Public Lands. It is fair to say of this bill that it did receive very considerable attention in the committee. It has been a long time since it was before us, but it was, as I now remember, pretty thoroughly explained and discussed there. I also voted this morning to take up the bill for present consideration. As a member of the committee from which the bill is reported, I thought I owed that much to it; but I at no time saw my way clear to approve this bill. I felt obliged to oppose it in committee and I feel obliged to oppose it now. It did not commend itself to my approval; and I think, without going into any extensive argument to-day, that it ought not to pass. I have no earthly hostility toward the measure, but I could not see my way clear to give it my support.

In the first instance a large portion of this road was built over a desert country where it cost nothing to make it. Wagon tracks run through the sage-brush on the desert will make a highway.

Mr. KELLY. Will my honorable friend allow me——

Mr. OGLESBY. I will correct that. I will give you the full benefit of it. Certain parts of the road were constructed over difficult and extensive mountains and rocky hills; some rivers were crossed and bridges put up. There was considerable expenditure of money on portions of the road. That statement ought to be made because it is true. But the company that constructed this road has ceased to exist. There is no obligation that can be imposed by this Congress on any corporation or any body in esse to improve it and keep it in repair. There is not anybody responsible for it. The corporation that built the road is defunct and no covenant can be entered into with anybody to keep it in repair.

Another thing; it crosses over valuable Indian lands in an Indian reservation, and I cannot make up my mind that the company had a prior right to those lands over the Indians. I think the proper construction would give the occupation of the land for Indian purposes in the reservation prior to the title in the company. I thought so at the time the bill was considered in committee; I think so yet. It is a valuable donation of land, and for a purpose that might be commendable enough if we were perfectly sure we understood ourselves in its operation. The road was built, a large portion of it, through desert country, where it cost nothing; another portion as I have stated was through a populous portion of Oregon, where it did cost considerable. Now, to give this land to the assignees of a company that has gone out of business, that has ceased to exist, I thought was carrying the matter further than I could go. I have no hostility toward the measure except to state to this body, as I ought as chairman of that committee, that the bill did not meet my approval and does not now meet it. I shall have to vote against it.

Mr. MITCHELL. My colleague [Mr. KELLY] has appealed to me in regard to the title to these lands. I have said before in the Senate when this matter was up, and I repeat now, that it has been my opinion and is my opinion still that, so far as the title is concerned, these parties have it. I had occasion, as stated by my colleague, to investigate the matter as a lawyer many years ago, before I had a seat here, and I then came to the conclusion that the company had the title to these lands. So far as that question is concerned, I have never had any difficulty in reference to this bill. So far as the settlement of this controversy is concerned, as to the propriety of a speedy settlement, I have never had any doubt, nor have the people of Oregon. They unite in saying that this controversy between these parties and the Indians ought to be speedily settled in some proper way, and in fact there are on the files of the Department and of the Senate long petitions and letters from the citizens of Oregon urging a speedy settlement of the controversy. But there is a difference of opinion in Oregon among the people as to whether or not the settlement proposed by this bill is a proper one or one that ought to meet the approval of Congress—a very wide difference of opinion.

I do not agree to all the statements contained in the newspaper article read at the desk. In so far as that article attacks the title of these parties, I cannot subscribe to it. That is not my opinion. But the trouble is here: this bill proposes to grant lieu lands to these parties, and that is to be a floating grant extending over the whole State of Oregon. There is where the objection comes in, as a matter of policy; and I myself have had considerable hesitation in regard to the matter. Feeling that I ought to vote for some measure that would speedily settle this controversy, I have not felt and I do not now feel that I can vote for this bill in its present shape.

If this grant was to be limited in some respects so that these parties would not be at liberty to go all over the State in the selection of the lieu lands, I might then feel justified in giving it my support. I do not know whether the amendment that I have in my hand would meet with the approval of my colleague or not. I do not know whether it would meet with the approval of the parties owning this land across the Indian reservation. I would be willing, however, to vote for the bill with the amendment which I now send to the desk and offer; but should the amendment not be adopted, I cannot vote for the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 11 after the word "mineral" it is proposed to insert:

Within a distance of six sections on each side of the line of the military road running from Eugene City to the eastern boundary of the State, and not included in the Klamath reservation.

Mr. OGLESBY. That amendment of course ought to made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Oregon, [Mr. MITCHELL.]

Mr. INGALLS. Before that is adopted, I should like a word of explanation from the Senator from Oregon, as I am not sure that in the hurried reading by the Clerk I fully comprehended the terms of his amendment. Does he intend by his amendment to confine this selection of indemnity or lieu lands to that portion of the military road that lies outside of the Klamath reservation exclusively?

Mr. MITCHELL. No, sir; I intend to confine it to the whole line of the road; instead of permitting the grant to float all over the State, I confine it to within six sections on either side of the line of the road.

Mr. INGALLS. What is the present limit?

Mr. MITCHELL. Three sections.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, if this were a purely local matter, it is unnecessary for me to say that I should interpose no objection to the passage of the bill. If the people of Oregon are contented to have their vacant lands all occupied by grants to corporations, it is, of course, personally to me a matter of no consequence. But there is underlying this whole question a principle that, if it is once admitted by the action of Congress, will involve the United States Government in an absolutely incalculable amount of expenditure upon matters arising under a condition almost precisely like this. In brief, this proposition is to allow a grant of lands to a wagon-road corporation, to take effect within the limits of an Indian reservation previously established; and if that proposition is admitted, if this precedent is once established, then there is not a State in this Union through which subsidized or land-grant railroads run and within which there have been Indian reservations established that have been penetrated by these roads, in which the Government will not be called upon, without equivalent or compensation, to give either large quantities of lands to these corporations or make large payments of money to the Indians whose lands, by this bill, will have been held to have been improperly taken.

The facts in regard to this matter are briefly that, on the 2d day of July, 1864, Congress passed an act granting public lands to the State of Oregon to aid in the construction of a military road from Eugene City to the eastern boundary of said State; and, in this connection, the dates are important, and I ask the attention of the Senate to them, because they establish the rights respectively of the corporation, the Government, and the Indians. By an act of the Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon, which was approved on the 24th day of October, in the same year, 1864, this grant was conferred by the State upon the Oregon Central Military Road Company, which road was completed throughout its entire length according to the terms of the grant as established by data before the Department, the 12th day of January, 1870. The treaty with the Klamath Indians, establishing an Indian reservation in that tract of country through which this road runs, appears by the report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to have been made and recognized as valid on the 14th day of October, 1864. The Senator from Oregon states that it was not ratified until February 17, 1870.

Mr. KELLY. July 2, 1860, and proclaimed in 1870.

Mr. INGALLS. Proclaimed on the 17th of February, 1870.

Mr. COCKRELL. Will the Senator from Kansas permit me to ask him when those Indians were removed to that reservation?

Mr. INGALLS. They were on the reservation at the time when the treaty was made in October, 1864.

Mr. COCKRELL. Before this selection of land?

Mr. INGALLS. Long before the selection of the land.

Mr. KELLY. I beg to correct the Senator from Kansas. They were not on the reservation, as I understand, until after the treaty was ratified.

Mr. INGALLS. The selections of lands were as follows: On the 21st of April, 1871, 51,248.56 acres were selected and approved; on the 8th of December, 1871, 37,414.51 acres were approved; and on the 2d of April, 1873, 4,487.34 acres, making, according to the report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, the then incumbent, S. S. Burdett a total aggregate of 93,150.41 acres within the limits of this reservation that had been selected and approved by the Department.

Now, the only question is whether or not by virtue of the act of July 2, 1864, the grant of lands to the State of Oregon attached to the Klamath Indian reservation, or whether they were at that period of time public lands within the meaning of the act by which this grant was made. The Supreme Court of the United States has had this whole subject before it within the past year, in the somewhat celebrated case of The United States against The Leavenworth, Lawrence and Galveston, and The Missouri, Kansas and Texas Railroad Companies, which run through the State of Kansas and intersect each other within an Indian reservation known as the Osage ceded lands. Those two railroads run through that tract diagonally, the tract itself comprising about a million acres; and the companies claimed that under and by virtue of the act which endowed them with portions of the public land, upon the extinction of the Indian title to the Osage ceded tract, their grant became operative, and that those lands then became public lands within the meaning of the terms of that act, and that they therefore took a grant within those limits. The settlers upon those lands took issue with this proposition. The Commissioner of the General Land Office and the Secretary of the Interior held that the claim of the railroad companies was correct; that their grant did inure within the limits of the Osage ceded tract. But a suit was instituted by the Attorney-General in the name of the United States, and after a protracted argument by eminent counsel, the court decided that the holding of the Commissioner of the General Land Office and the Secretary of the Interior was wrong; that under no sense whatever could the Indian lands ever be considered as public lands, either before or after the title was extinguished. The court say:

> We held that they attached only to so much of our national domain as might be sold or otherwise disposed of, and that they did not embrace tracts reserved by competent authority for any purpose or in any manner, although no exception of them was made in the grants themselves. Our decision confirmed a grant of every alternate section of land to such whereto the complete title was absolutely vested in the United States.

They proceed to say further:

> The words "public lands" are habitually used in our legislation to describe such as are subject to sale or other disposal under general laws. That they were so employed in this instance is evident from the fact that to them alone could, on the location of the road, the order withdrawing lands from pre-emption, private entry, and sale apply.

Now, sir, if you will apply the terms of that decision to the conditions named in this bill it is evident that the Klamath Indian reservation never was public land within the meaning of the term as employed in the act making a grant to the State of Oregon.

Mr. COCKRELL. In what volume is the decision of the Supreme Court you are reading from?

Mr. INGALLS. It is not published.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is it in pamphlet form?

Mr. INGALLS. It is in last year's reports, which are not yet published. I have sheets of it before me.

Mr. PADDOCK. I think it is perfectly apparent that this bill cannot be passed at this session, and it seems to me a consumption of time which might be well employed in the consideration of bills to which there will be no objection. I move, therefore, that the bill be postponed until the first Monday of December next.

Mr. KELLY. I hope the Senator will not make that motion.

Mr. PADDOCK. I dislike exceedingly to antagonize my friend from Oregon; but it seems to me impossible that this bill can pass, and it is a consumption of time that ought not to be tolerated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. KELLY. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion to postpone.

The motion was agreed to.

WESTERN AND ATLANTIC RAILROAD.

Mr. GORDON. I move to proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 177.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 177) to authorize the Secretary of War to adjust and settle claims of the State of Georgia against the Government on account of the Western and Atlantic Railroad.

The Committee on Military Affairs reported the bill with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

> That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to re-open the settlement made by the United States Government with the Western and Atlantic Railroad, of the State of Georgia, and to adjust the same upon the basis and the plan of settlement which was adopted in the settlement made by the Secretary of War with the Nashville and Chattanooga Railroad Company, the East Tennessee and Georgia Railroad Company, and the Nashville and Decatur Railroad Company, under the authority of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1871.
> SEC. 2. That when said claims have been adjusted in pursuance of the provisions of this act, the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to issue his warrant on the Treasury of the United States to the governor of Georgia or his order for the amount of money it is found ought to be refunded to said railroad on account of said settlement.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I ask if there is a report in this case?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is a report.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. From what committee?

Mr. COCKRELL. The bill is reported from the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I ask for the reading of the report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the following report submitted by Mr. GORDON April 3, 1876:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred Senate bill No. 177, report the substitute which accompanies this report, and recommend that the substitute pass.

It is a bill to authorize the Secretary of War to open the settlement made by the United States Government with the Western and Atlantic Railroad, of Georgia, and to make a settlement upon the same basis which was adopted by the Government in its settlement with the railroads of Tennessee.

The committee make this recommendation for the following reasons:

First. The Western and Atlantic Railroad, of Georgia, was turned over to the owners about the same time, to wit, on the 21st day of August, 1865; that the said railroads of Tennessee, the Nashville and Chattanooga Railroad, the East Tennessee, Virginia and Georgia Railroad, and the Nashville and Decatur Railroad, were turned over to their owners, and under the same orders from the War Department, and by the order and under the direction of Major-General Thomas; that the United States Government turned over these roads to their owners, and sold to each of them the engines, rolling-stock, &c., owned by the Government and used upon these roads respectively; that the sale was made to each of these railroads of the said Government property upon an appraisement made at the time and at the same or like prices to each and to all.

Second. Because afterward, to wit, in the year 1871, the United States Government, through the Secretary of War, acting under act of Congress of March 3, 1871, proceeded to revise the prices and re-adjust the settlements formerly made with the said Tennessee railroads, and reduced the amounts due from those roads to the Government, for the reasons assigned by the Secretary of War in his letter to the Judiciary Committee of the House of Representatives, dated January 21, 1874, in which the Secretary says:

"The committee further ask what the basis or reasons of such deductions were; whether or not any allowance was made for damages claimed to have been done these roads during the war; and whether or not the War Department found the Government appraisals of the property purchased by said corporations to have been excessive.

"To which it is answered—

"First. That no allowance was made for damages of any kind.

"Second. That the appraisal of the property sold was regarded as excessive," &c.

And because, although the excessive prices were paid by the Western and Atlantic Railroad, of Georgia, no deductions were or ever have been made in behalf of this last-mentioned road.

Third. Because the committee believe that, if the prices paid for the Government property were excessive in the case of the Tennessee railroads, the same prices were also excessive in the case of the Western and Atlantic Railroad, of Georgia, and that it is just and equitable that like deductions should be made to this road, and that the Government deal with all these creditors alike.

The committee, therefore, recommend that this substitute for the original bill pass, authorizing the Secretary of War to settle with the Western and Atlantic Railroad, of Georgia, upon the same basis which was adopted by the Government in the settlement with the Tennessee railroads.

Mr. BURNSIDE. This bill is simply for the relief of a railroad company that paid promptly the demands of the Government, while other railroads did not pay, and afterward settled with the Government upon a certain basis; and now this bill provides that settlement shall be made with this railroad upon the basis of settlement made with other railroads, particularly those in Tennessee. It is recommended unanimously by the Military Committee, and I am satisfied it is but just to this road that the bill should pass.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I should like to ask the Senator from Rhode Island a question, in order to understand this bill. Did this road make a settlement with the Government at any time?

Mr. BURNSIDE. As I understand, the road answered the demands of the Government. It was more a demand on the part of the Government than a settlement.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Did the Government afterward settle with other roads more favorably?

Mr. BURNSIDE. It afterward settled with other roads more favorably and now this road asks to be settled with on the same terms.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. This road wants the settlement opened and wants to make a settlement on the same terms that the Government settled with these other roads; is that it?

Mr. GORDON. If the Senator from Wisconsin will allow me, the Tennessee roads to which this bill refers paid for their property precisely the same rates that were assessed upon the property purchased by the Georgia road. The appraisal of the property on all these roads was made by a board of officers appointed by the Government. This Georgia road paid its assessments. Afterward the Tennessee roads applied to the War Department to have these prices reduced on the ground that they were excessive. The Department, under act of Congress, appointed another board of officers who re-examined the property and reported that the prices were excessive to the extent of fully 25 per cent., and a deduction was made by the War Department. The Western and Atlantic Railroad of Georgia asks that the Secretary of War be authorized to make the same settlement with it as was made with the others. A number of roads have had similar deductions made since that time.

Mr. WRIGHT. I should like to make some inquiries about this bill. I have an impression that this bill was at one time before the Judiciary Committee of this body.

Mr. GORDON. The Senator is mistaken. It was never before any committee except the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. WRIGHT. I have an impression that legislation of some kind was asked, and was before the Judiciary Committee, touching these roads. I should like to know how much is involved probably in this bill; that is to say, how much the Government will have to pay back if the bill should pass.

Mr. GORDON. I think about $160,000 or $175,000. I answered that question when the bill was discussed last session; but I have not the data now before me. The amount, however, cannot change the principle upon which the settlement is asked. I am willing for an amendment on the bill, fixing the percentage to be deducted at 25 per cent., if the Senator insists, although it is proper that this road should be placed upon the same basis with the Tennessee roads.

Mr. WRIGHT. I inquire why it is that the Department cannot arrange and settle this matter with this company, as it has settled with the others?

Mr. GORDON. Because a bill was passed to authorize the other settlements, and the Secretary of War did settle according to the recommendations of the board. I will read the names of the board if the Senator will allow me.

Mr. WRIGHT. My impression was, as I understood the Senator's statement just now, that application was made to the Department, and not to the Legislature, where they made the settlements heretofore. I understand now that it was based upon legislation touching these other roads. That is to say, those settlements were not made under the general power of the Department to adjust and settle these matters, but there was special legislation authorizing them to settle with these other roads on the basis named. Am I correct in that?

Mr. GORDON. Under a law passed March 3, 1871, the Secretary of War proceeded to revise the prices of these other roads, and a board—composed of Colonel R. B. Marcy, inspector-general; Colonel W. M. Dunn, assistant judge-advocate-general; and Major M. I. Ludington, quartermaster—proceeded to re-adjust those prices and to recommend the deduction on account of excessive charges by the Government. All this bill proposes to do is to allow the War Department to make the same deductions for the Western and Atlantic Railroad and for precisely the same reasons.

Mr. WRIGHT. Will the Senator allow me to ask why it was that this road was not included in the legislation at the same time?

Mr. GORDON. Simply because at that time the State of Georgia did not present her claim. This road belongs to the State. I endeavored to get a similar bill passed immediately upon my entrance into the Senate. I assure my friend from Iowa that it is an eminently just bill. It was discussed in committee, and received the unanimous sanction of the Committee on Military Affairs after the fullest investigation.

Mr. WRIGHT. Neither of the roads covered by the legislation of 1871 was in Georgia?

Mr. GORDON. No, sir; they were in Tennessee.

Mr. WRIGHT. Both of them?

Mr. GORDON. Yes, but connecting with this road at Chattanooga, Tennessee.

Mr. WRIGHT. There was no effort made at that time to include this road in that legislation?

Mr. GORDON. No, sir; there was no effort made.

Mr. WRIGHT. Then it was not excluded by the action or non-action of Congress, but merely because the matter was not pressed at that time? This road was not excluded by Congress?

Mr. GORDON. Not at all. There was nothing asked at that time for this road. There is no doubt the report is correct, and that the prices were excessive. The Government cannot desire to exact excessive prices of any of these roads. We only ask that the prices of the property sold be brought down to what it was justly worth at the time. That is the purpose of this bill.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. That is right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert what has been read.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to authorize the Secretary of War to open and re-adjust the settlement made by the United States Government with the Western and Atlantic Railroad of Georgia."

WILLIAM WHEELER HUBBELL.

Mr. CRAGIN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 667) for the relief of William Wheeler Hubbell, and to make just compensation for the past making, or use, or vending of his patent explosive shells, fuses, and percussion exploders by the United States.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and in lieu thereof to insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to William Wheeler Hubbell, of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, or his heirs or legal representatives, the sum of $33,333.33, out of any general appropriation for judgments of the Court of Claims, in full satisfaction of the balance of his actual loss and damage, ascertained by the Court of Claims, for the past use made by the United States of certain patents, the inventions of said Hubbell, mentioned in the preamble and reference of joint resolution approved June 3, 1864, said payment to be in full for all past use by the Government of his inventions of whatever name or nature; and the acceptance of the sum provided by this act shall be a full and complete transfer of his patents dated September 30, 1862, for concussion fuse; his patent dated July 8, 1862, for rifle projectiles; his patent dated October 31, 1865, for incendiary shell; and of all patents and inventions mentioned in said joint resolution to the United States.

Mr. CRAGIN. I move to amend the amendment in line 7, after the word "any," by striking out the words "general appropriation for judgments of the Court of Claims," and inserting: "out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated;" so as to read: "The sum of $33,333.33, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, in full satisfaction," &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to settle for the inventions and patents of William Wheeler Hubbell."

CHANCY J. POORE.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. I move to proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2229) for the relief of Chancy J. Poore, late a private in Battery G, First New York Light Artillery. It is for the change of a single word in a soldier's discharge, in order to correct a mere clerical error.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the Secretary of War to correct the entry made as the cause of the discharge from the service of the United States of Chancy J. Poore, late a private in Battery G, First New York Light Artillery, so as to show the cause of such discharge to have been "phlebitis" instead of "diabetes," as erroneously entered in the record.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THOMAS E. MALEY.

Mr. SPENCER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 1111) for the relief of Thomas E. Maley.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceded to consider the bill. It relieves Thomas E. Maley, who was, on December 15, 1870, duly retired from the active service and placed upon the list of retired officers of the United States Army, with the full rank of lieutenant-colonel, on account of wounds received in battle while performing the duties of lieutenant-colonel in command of eight companies of his regiment, from the operation of the act of Congress entitled "An act for the relief of General Samuel W. Crawford, and to fix the rank and pay of retired officers of the Army," approved March 3, 1875, solely because the injuries received by him in battle are more severe, dangerous, and disabling and more fully incapacitate and disqualify him for any service than the loss of an arm or leg or the permanent disability of an arm or leg by resection; and he is restored upon the list of retired officers of the Army to the full rank of lieutenant-colonel, held by him from the date of his retirement up to March 3, 1875, with the pay of such rank from the date of the passage of this act, and shall hereafter hold and receive the rank and pay of lieutenant-colonel upon the list of retired officers of the Army.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask that House bill No. 3483, which is a case precisely similar, go with this bill.

Mr. SPENCER. I do not object to that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. One bill only can be passed at a time.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GEORGE A. ARMES.

Mr. SPENCER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 407) to authorize the restoration of George A. Armes to the rank of captain.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. To put the bill in a better form, I wish to offer a substitute.

Mr. SPENCER. I will accept the substitute presented by the Sena- from Missouri.

Mr. INGALLS. Let us hear it read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and to insert:

That the provisions of law regulating appointments in the Army by promotion in the line are hereby suspended for the purposes of this act, and only so far as they affect George A. Armes; and the President can, if he so desire, in the exercise of his own discretion and judgment, nominate, and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint said George A. Armes, late captain in the Tenth United States Cavalry Regiment, to the same grade and rank of captain held by him on June 7, 1870, in any vacancy occurring: Provided, however, That no pay, compensation, or allowance whatever shall ever be given to said Armes for the time between June 7, 1870, and the date of appointment hereunder.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ROSETTA HERT AND OTHER HALF-BREED INDIANS.

Mr. BOGY. I move to take up the bill (H. R. No. 534) for the relief of Rosetta Hert, (late Rosetta Scoville,) Charles C. Benoist, Emily Benoist, and Logan Fanfan, half-breed Indians.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Private Land Claims, with an amendment in line 5, to strike out the words "money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated" and insert:

Funds which may remain of the moneys arising from the sale of lands known as the Nemaha half-breed reserve, on the Missouri River, in Nebraska, under an act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations, approved February 28, 1859, upon these parties satisfying the Secretary of the Interior that they are entitled to the same.

Mr. PADDOCK. I should like to have the bill explained by the Senator who reported it.

Mr. BOGY. The report explains the bill very fully. It is to provide for the payment of a fund now remaining in the Treasury of fourteen or fifteen hundred dollars to half-breed Indians, whenever they make their proofs to the Secretary of the Interior. The money is to come out of the fund now remaining there for that purpose. It is a very small sum. The subject was examined by the Committee on Indian Affairs and the bill was reported unanimously.

Mr. CLAYTON. Let the bill be read.

Mr. BOGY. Let it be read as proposed to be amended.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

That the proper accounting officers of the Treasury and Department of the Interior are hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of any funds which may remain of the moneys arising from the sale of lands known as the Nemaha half-breed reserve, on the Missouri River, in Nebraska, under an act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations, approved February 28, 1859, upon these parties satisfying the Secretary of the Interior that they are entitled to the same, to Mrs. Rosetta Hert, (late Rosetta Scoville,) Charles C. Benoist, Emily Benoist, and Logan Fanfan, each the sum of $204.38, as their distributive shares of the moneys arising from the sale of the lands known as the Nemaha half-breed reserve on the Missouri River in Nebraska.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WRIGHT. I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Missouri to one point. If I heard correctly the reading of the bill, the first two or three lines provide that there shall be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury and the Secretary of the Interior this money. Is that the case?

Mr. BOGY. There is a misprint there, I think.

Mr. WRIGHT. Does the bill provide that this money shall be paid by both the Secretary of the Treasury and the Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. BOGY. There is a misprint. How it got in the bill I do not know. The words "Department of the Interior" should be stricken out.

Mr. WRIGHT. That is what I supposed. Of course you do not want to have both named in the bill; but it must be one or the other.

Mr. BOGY. In the forty-third and fourth lines of the bill, after the word "Treasury," I move to strike out the words "and Department of the Interior;" so as to read:

That the proper accounting officers of the Treasury are hereby authorized and directed to pay, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time. The bill was read the third time, and passed.

REPORT OF SILVER COMMISSION.

Mr. JONES, of Nevada. I ask leave to submit the report of the joint monetary commission.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be received and printed.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I submit a minority report, signed by Mr. Francis Bowen, a member of the commission, and also a report of my own, which I ask may be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. They will be printed.

Mr. PADDOCK submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring,) That 3,000 copies of the report of the monetary commission, created by the joint resolution of August 15, 1876, together with accompanying evidence and documents, be printed for the use of the Senate and 7,000 for the use of the House of Representatives.

WARREN MITCHELL.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 1145) for the relief of Warren Mitchell.

Mr. CAMERON of Wisconsin. I object to the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will submit it to the Senate. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Florida to proceed to the consideration of this bill.

The question being put, it was declared that the noes appeared to prevail.

Mr. JONES of Florida. I ask for a division.

Mr. CONKLING. May I inquire from what committee the bill is reported?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. From the Committee on Claims.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Would it be proper for me to make a statement in regard to this bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It would be.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. A bill for the relief of this claimant was referred to the Committee on Claims at the last session of the present Congress. It was considered by the committee during that session. It was referred to me for special examination. I made such examination and reported adversely. The report was concurred in by this committee and concurred in by the Senate, and the bill was indefinitely postponed. Subsequently the bill was recommitted to the committee. It was again considered by the Committee on Claims and a majority of the committee reported in favor of the bill. In examining another case referred to the Committee on Claims since that time, the committee have discovered some very important evidence bearing upon this claim. It was claimed that this claimant, Warren Mitchell, was loyal during the late civil war. In examining the case of Connor Brothers, we had occasion to look into certain testimony taken before the district court for the district of Kentucky; and it appears from that testimony that this same claimant, Warren Mitchell, was employed by the confederate government at Nashville, prior to the occupation of Nashville by the Federal forces, for the purpose of packing meat for the confederate government. He had a contract with the confederate government by which the live hog was furnished to him, he agreeing to slaughter the hog and return the hams, sides, and shoulders to the confederate government and retain the rest of the hog for his pay. Immediately before the occupation of Nashville by the Federal forces he left with the confederate army and went South. This testimony, I will state, was not before the Committee on Claims at the time the bill was reported from the committee.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. What case does the Senator refer to in which these facts were made to appear?

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. The case of Connor Brothers.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Investigated by the committee of the Senate?

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. By the Committee on Claims of the Senate.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Recently?

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Quite recently. The Senator from Florida was not present.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I ask for the reading of the report in this case.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the following report submitted by Mr. JONES, of Florida, from the Committee on Claims, January 17, 1877:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the memorial of Warren Mitchell, of the State of Kentucky, praying to be refunded the proceeds of seven hundred and thirty bales of cotton seized by officers of the United States at Savannah, Georgia, and covered into the Treasury, having considered the same, report as follows:

The petitioner, at the commencement of the late civil war, was a resident of the city of Louisville, in the State of Kentucky, where he was engaged in commercial business. The firms with which the petitioner was connected were largely indebted to the Bank of Kentucky and other banks in Louisville, and, in consequence of the large amount of debts due these firms in the South, their creditors became apprehensive that they would not be able to meet their liabilities, and the petitioner was advised to go South and endeavor to collect or secure the debts due said firms This advice was given by Mr. V. McKnight, president of the State Bank of Kentucky, and others, and McKnight went with the petitioner to General Anderson, then in command at Louisville, introduced him to that officer, and procured a pass for him to go South for the purpose stated.

Under this pass, the petitioner went into the States in insurrection in the month of July, 1861, and remained there until the latter part of the year 1864 During this period he collected a large amount of debts due said firms, and purchased seven hundred and thirty-four bales of cotton, which were delivered to him, and then stored in the city of Savannah. The cotton was purchased in the months of November and December, 1864. When Savannah was captured by the United States Army under General Sherman, this, with a large amount of other cotton, was seized by the military authorities, turned over to the agents of the Treasury, and then sold. The net proceeds of the petitioner's cotton, after deducting all expenses of sale, shipment, &c., as appears from the books of the Treasury, amounts to the sum of $128,692.22. On the 3d of July, 1865, the petitioner received a full pardon from the President of the United States for all offenses committed by him or arising from any participation in the rebellion. The petitioner instituted a suit in the Court of Claims to recover the proceeds of his cotton from the Government, but, that tribunal being equally divided in opinion touching the claimant's right to recover, his case was dismissed, and he appealed to the Supreme Court.

The opinion of the court in the case is to be found in 21 Wallace, 350. The ground upon which the court decided against the claimant is purely technical. They found that he had purchased the cotton; that it was captured; and that the proceeds were in the Treasury; but decided that his purchase gave him no title, because his domicile was in Louisville, in a loyal State, and that a contract made under such circumstances was void.

In arriving at this conclusion the court held that the permit given to the claimant by General Anderson conferred no rights upon him; but your committee are constrained to think, without questioning the law as laid down by the court, that no advantage ought to be retained by the Govenment which resulted from the void and illegal act of its own officer. Admitting to the fullest extent possible the unauthorized and illegal character of the pass given to the claimant by General Anderson, after a full disclosure of the object of the former's mission, is it not plain that Mr. Mitchell would not have gone to the South at all if the pass had not been given to him? The circumstances under which the application was made and the permit granted show most conclusively that the officer and claimant were both ignorant, the one of his power, the other of his duty. General Anderson represented the Government in a high military station. The claimant was a loyal citizen, anxious to save the bulk of his fortune, about to be lost, as he thought, by the civil war then commenced. The law of nations, which was applied by the court very rigorously in this case, is founded on wise and just principles. It prohibits all commercial intercourse between the citizens or subjects of countries at war with each other, because it would tend to strengthen and increase the power of the public enemy, which it is ever the object of war to destroy. But in this case the real purpose of the citizen was to save from destruction what had been honestly earned and accumulated before hostilities began, and under the protection of the Government. Why is it that the most enlightened writers on the laws of war have praised the humane usage which permits the subjects of one nation to withdraw their property from another on the eve of hostile relations? And has it not always been an object of importance, on the conclusion of peace, to save to the subjects of the belligerent power their rights of property which were suspended during the flame of battle? We know, too, that when the private property of a subject is recaptured from an enemy by the forces or cruisers of that nation to which such subject belongs, that it is restored to him. The principles which uphold this practice spring from the reciprocal duties of allegiance and protection which constitute the most important relations in the State.

Had the claimant in this case entered the confederate territory for the purpose of uniting his fortunes with those in arms against the United States, his case would be different. But he was a man advanced in life, fifty-three years of age, and was not in sympathy with the secession movement. He did no act while at the South which was disloyal, unless it be claimed that the conversion of his credits into cotton was of that character. It must be conceded, under the decision of the Supreme Court, that if the petitioner had been domiciled in the State of Georgia, instead of the State of Kentucky, and had taken the most active part in the war against the United States, he would have recovered his property in the Court of Claims. It is only because his domicile was in a loyal State that he has been denied relief, while it might be claimed that the presence of the petitioner in the insurrectionary States and the investment of credits there in cotton was a technical violation of the laws of war, still the facts in the case show that there was no guilty intention, such as usually carries with it criminal consequences or forfeitures. The transactions of the claimant were not of a character to benefit the confederate authorities. They were all founded in debts due the claimant previous to the war, and which, if he had not collected, would under the laws of the States in rebellion, have been confiscated to the use of the confederate authorities. The Supreme Court held that his purchase, being against public policy, gave him no title. Did it confer any upon the Government? The proceeds of the cotton stand on the books of the Treasury in the name of the claimant. The money of course must follow the right of the thing which produced it. If the cotton was not Mitchell's, whose was it? It was seized as his, sold as his, and the fund arising from it the records of the Government admit to be his; he had actual possession of the cotton at the time of its seizure, and even if his title was defective, it is an elementary principle of law that such a possession is good against every one except the rightful owner. The law will not enforce a contract which arises out of an illegal consideration; neither will it disturb the rights of a party under such a contract after it is executed.

The whole right of the Government to hold this fund is derived from the fact that the claimant was, at the time he bought the cotton, a citizen of a loyal State. This establishes his loyalty, for it is in proof that he did not aid the confederacy, but, on the contrary, added to its burdens by becoming a consumer, while he did not increase its defenders.

Your committee are of opinion that the petitioner is entitled to the relief prayed for, and report a bill for his relief, authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to pay him the sum of $128,692.22, being the net proceeds of the cotton taken from his possession as hereinbefore stated.

Mr. STEVENSON. I never heard the testimony which has been suggested by the Senator from Wisconsin. I know this claimant well. He is one of the most respectable merchants in the city of Louisville. I am quite sure he took no part in the rebellion. He was a commission merchant, engaged in furnishing breadstuffs, pork, &c., to the South. When the war broke out, he being largely indebted to the banks of Louisville, and people in the South being indebted to him, and bearing a very high character, he was permitted by General Anderson under a military permit to go South. He there collected debts, was advanced some money, and invested it in cotton. This cotton was seized by the Government and sold, half of the amount of the proceeds used in costs and fees, and the other half is in the Treasury of the United States. This old man, after a life-time of usefulness and honor, finds himself bankrupt unless the Government chooses to relieve him. He was pardoned by the President. Even if what the Senator says be true, I understand the Supreme Court have settled again and again that a pardon even to the rankest rebel would give him the right to claim the proceeds of the cotton under the law.

It seems to me that this is a very just claim. I do not see how the Government, having absorbed more than half the property of this old man—his honest earnings, that which belonged to him, and that which now belongs to him—can rest satisfied, this man having been pardoned by the President, to hold on to this money; but it is with the Senate and not with me to decide it.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. It may be proper for me to say a few words in regard to the merits of this case, having made the report which has been read. I think it is a case of great merit and of the strongest equity. It so struck me from the first time the facts were presented to my mind, and nothing which the Senator from Wisconsin has stated has changed my convictions. Here was a citizen of the State of Kentucky. We know that his character followed the character of the State. Kentucky in the late unhappy war was regarded as a loyal State. This gentleman was a citizen of that Commonwealth, and for all legal purposes must be regarded as a loyal citizen. That was the view taken of this case, as I understand, by the Supreme Court when the case came before them. Without making any inquiry into the individual conduct of the person, the court fixed his character and status by the character and status of the State to which he belonged. He was a citizen of Kentucky at the time the permit was granted to him to enter the Southern States to collect his debts.

I have little to say about the power of the officer who granted this permit. Let it be admitted that he had no authority to grant it, what then? Is it to be insisted here that the Government shall take advantage of the wrong of its own officer? He had either authority to grant the permit to Mr. Mitchell or he had not. If he had authority to grant it, then the act was valid, and everything that was done under it was valid also. If he had no authority to grant it, then he violated his public duty, and it was wrong; but can the Government come in and found any title upon a violation of duty on the part of General Anderson, who commanded in the district of Kentucky? The permit was given to this man to go South, and under it he passed the lines and went into the confederacy and collected the large part of his fortune. That was invested there. He put it into cotton and carried it to Savannah, and when that city was captured by General Sherman the accumulation of three years' energy and industry was seized and appropriated by the Government. The property was sold, the proceeds were paid into the Treasury, after deducting one-half of the same for expenses and commissions. The balance is there to his credit upon the books of the Government. This is the case in a nutshell.

When the case went before the Supreme Court that tribunal, in interpreting the law, decided that as this gentleman was a citizen of a State which was regarded as loyal he could not, under the law as it then existed, hold any intercourse or make any contracts with persons residing within the confederate lines; and upon that technical ground, and that alone, that judgment is founded. According to the reasoning of the court, if this man had been a confederate out and out, a resident of the State of Georgia, and had received his pardon, he could have gone on and asserted his claim before the Court of Claims to recover, as a number of other claimants did in like cases; but because he happened to be a citizen of a loyal State the court held that this rule of law must apply to him, and that he acquired no right by the contracts that he made while within the limits of the confederacy. It was not denied that the property which produced this fund was his. None of the facts was disputed. On this technical question of law the whole case was decided, and they held that he could not recover. He came before our committee. We had the right to look into the equity of this case, and we found, as far as the testimony before us went, that he was a loyal man, a citizen of a loyal State, and that this property was his. The books of the Treasury show precisely the amount that was due him. Should he be placed in a worse condition in consequence of his being a citizen of Kentucky than he would be if he had been a citizen of the State of Georgia, the State of Florida, or the State of South Carolina? That is the question.

I never before heard anything about the testimony to which the Senator from Wisconsin has alluded. It may be all true, but it appears from the testimony in this case that this man was pardoned, as was said by the Senator from Kentucky. That fact is made distinctly to appear in the report which is now before the Senate. He was pardoned. How, therefore, can the Government claim this fund? On what ground can it rest its right to claim it?

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Certainly.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. If he were a loyal man and had done no disloyal act, for what purpose did he obtain a pardon?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I suppose the claimant could answer that question, if he were here, better than myself. The fact is here stated and the evidence shows that he obtained a pardon. I suppose he resorted to that as a mere matter of precaution. I know a number of individuals who did the same thing, who, in my judgment, had done nothing to call for the granting of a pardon. He had this controversy on hand with the Government, and it may be that as a matter of precaution before going into litigation in the Court of Claims and the Supreme Court he obtained a pardon, which I admit he did. Does it presuppose any iniquity? We are told by the decision of the court that if he had been a rebel this fact would have blotted out this technical objection and he would have come before the Senate with clean hands. The judgment of that court is to be regarded.

I think it a case of great merit, because there is no way in the world by which the Government can found any claim to this property, except upon the order of this officer alone, General Anderson, who permitted this man to pass his lines and transact this business within the confederacy; and after he had gone on under this order and acquired this property the Government is to turn around and say "we take advantage of this void order, confiscate your goods, and pocket the proceeds of the cotton."

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, rose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair now reminds Senators, as both sides have spoken, that Senators must not speak to the merits of the question on the motion to take up. The question is, Will the Senate proceed to the consideration of this bill.

Mr. STEVENSON. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Yes; let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 24, nays 21, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alcorn, Bailey, Barnum, Bayard, Bogy, Cooper, Dennis, Goldthwaite, Hereford, Johnston, Jones of Florida, Kelly, McCreery, McDonald, Maxey, Merrimon, Norwood, Randolph, Ransom, Robertson, Saulsbury, Spencer, Stevenson, and Whyte—24.

NAYS—Messrs. Booth, Boutwell, Bruce, Cameron of Wisconsin, Chaffee, Christiancy, Conkling, Dawes, Ferry, Hamlin, Ingalls, Jones of Nevada, Logan, McMillan, Mitchell, Morrill, Oglesby, Paddock, Sharon, Teller, and Wright—21.

ABSENT—Messrs. Allison, Anthony, Blaine, Burnside, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Clayton, Cockrell, Conover, Cragin, Davis, Dorsey, Eaton, Edmunds, Frelinghuysen, Gordon, Hamilton, Harvey, Hitchcock, Howe, Kernan, Morton, Patterson, Sargent, Sherman, Thurman, Wadleigh, Wallace, West, Windom, and Withers—30.

So the motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 1145) for the relief of Warren Mitchell was read the second time and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Warren Mitchell, out of any moneys in the Treasury derived from the proceeds of captured and abandoned property, $128,692.22, being the proceeds of cotton taken from him at Savannah, Georgia, the proceeds of which have been paid into the Treasury.

Mr. INGALLS. The claim of Mr. Mitchell appears to have been very deliberately and exhaustively considered by the judicial tribunals of this country. I have the twenty-first volume of Wallace's Reports, and on page 350 is found the syllabus of the case of Mitchell vs. The United States. It seems that the action was originally brought before the Court of Claims, which was equally divided in opinion as to whether the claim of Mitchell should be sustained, and his petition was accordingly dismissed. The claimant then removed his case to the Supreme Court upon appeal, assigning for error that on the facts found the Court of Claims should not have dismissed the petition, but should have decided that he had acquired a valid title to the cotton. A brief statement of facts appears to show that he was a resident of Kentucky at the outbreak of the war, and that after the 17th day of July, 1861, he went under a military pass of a Federal officer into the rebel States, and in November and December, 1864, bought a quantity of cotton there, seven hundred and twenty-four bales, and never returned to the loyal States until just after that time and when the war was not far from its close. Upon this state of facts he was held, on a question whether he had been trading with the enemy, not to have lost his original domicile, and accordingly to have been so trading.

The case seems to have been elaborately argued by the attorney for the appellant, and also by the Attorney-General and assistant attorney-general for the United States. The point of law involved was whether the domicile that the claimant had acquired was changed, and it was held that it must be presumed to continue until it was shown affirmatively to have been changed. The court say:

"Where a change of domicile is alleged, the burden of proving it rests upon the person making the allegation." * * *

When the claimant left Louisville, it would have been illegal to take up his abode in the territory whither he was going. Such a purpose is not to be presumed. The presumption is the other way. To be established, it must be proved. Among the circumstances usually relied upon to establish the animus manendi are: Declarations of the party, the exercise of political rights, the payment of personal taxes, a house of residence, and a place of business. All these indicia are wanting in the case of the claimant.

The rules of law applied to the affirmative facts, without the aid of the negative considerations to which which we have adverted, are conclusive against him. His purchase of the cotton involved the same legal consequences as if it had been made by an agent whom he sent to make it.

The amount involved in this claim is very considerable, aggregating $128,692.22, and as the claim has been submitted to the judicial tribunals of the country, has been fully argued and decided against the claimant, it seem to me there should certainly be a very conclusive amount of additional testimony advanced before Congress should be asked to overrule the final decision of the Supreme Court.

Mr. STEVENSON. I admit all that the Senator has said, that in point of law the Court of Claims, I believe, by a divided vote probably has decided against this claimant. The Supreme Court decided it purely upon a technicality as to domicile. The great question of ex æquo et bono which addressed itself to the court was all in favor of this claimant. He lost his cotton; the United States got it; they took half the proceeds, paying costs and damages on the other half, and although that cotton sold for, I think, in the neighborhood of $300,000, (I will not undertake to be accurate,) all that he asks is $128,000, which is the amount paid into the Treasury.

Mr. President, if everything that the Senator from Kansas said were true, this is an equitable appeal to Congress to relieve this claimant. Such relief has been granted a hundred times. It was done in the case which I referred to not long since, of Harmony vs. Mitchell, where General Doniphan directed certain goods of traders to be seized lest they might fall into the hands of the enemy. The Supreme Court decided that the order was illegal, but yet Congress relieved the claimants. Where a man acts under a void order or in the execution of a void command, and the Government itself becomes the beneficiary, the equitable power of Congress should be applied to grant equitable relief. Surely if ever there was a case in which the equity of any claimant addressed itself to the sound discretion of this body it is this case. This man devoted his whole life to merchandise in Louisville. He engaged in business without ever supposing there would be a war with the South, having his debts all there. When the war broke out, and when he had collected this cotton in payment of his debts, the United States seized the cotton, and because General Anderson's order, which allowed him to go South, turns out to be void, shall the United States hold that old man's property, and say, "We have you on a legal technicality, and we will turn a deaf ear to your complaint," and that, too, in the face of examples, almost pari passu, like this where relief was granted?

I do not think there can be a doubt in regard to this case. How inconsistent would it be to reject this claim! The Supreme Court say that if his arms and hands had been red in the blood of rebellion, he could have recovered; if he had been a rebel fighting from the beginning of the war to this time, he could have recovered; but he was an honest merchant engaged in his trade in Louisville, and went South to save just debts to pay his creditors. Under such a state of the case as that, having already lost half, the Government having received it, can the Government consistently with a high sense of equity and in the view of past precedents undertake to hold on to it? I hope not, Mr. President.

Perhaps I shall never open my voice again in this Senate Chamber; but I shall go out believing that no utterances of mine were ever made in a case where relief was more demanded by all the stern requirements of a just and equitable policy.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Mr. President, it is true that this claimant was a merchant doing business in the city of Louisville prior to the breaking out of the recent civil war. I suppose it is true, although that is not proved by the statement of the claimant himself, that there were large, or at least considerable sums of money owing to him in the Southern States at the time of the breaking out of the war. It is shown that in July, I think, 1861, he went to General Anderson, who at that time commanded the military district of Kentucky, and obtained from General Anderson a sort of permit to go into the seceding States. General Anderson did not guarantee that that permit was a valid and legal authority for him to go into the Southern States. The Government did not guarantee that such a permit was a valid and legal authority for him to leave Kentucky to go into the seceding States. He took that paper for whatever it was worth, and it turns out by the judicial decision of the highest court of the country that it was worth nothing; worth no more than so much blank paper. He went into the seceding States early in 1861. He remained in the seceding States until late in 1864 or early in 1865. He remained there during four long years.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Certainly.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. What time does it appear he was dealing with the enemy at Nashville, according to the evidence to which the Senator referred a while ago?

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Prior to the 24th day of March, 1862.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. At what time?

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. He was in Nashville immediately before Nashville was taken possession of by the Federal forces. It was taken possession of by the Federal forces, if my memory serves me right, on the 24th day of March, 1862.

I was remarking, Mr. President, that he remained in the seceding States during four years. He states in his petition that he was engaged during that time in collecting, or attempting to collect, the debts which were due to him in those States. He does not in his petition or in any of his proofs go into any particulars. He merely makes a general statement. He does not show in his petition, nor does he show in his proofs outside of the petition, where he was at any time during the four years that he remained in the seceding States, except that he was in Savannah at the time it was captured by General Sherman's forces. The Senator from Florida states in his report that it appears he was a loyal man. My recollection of the testimony submitted to the committee is that no evidence whatever was given upon the question of loyalty or disloyalty. I presume the Senator assumed that because his domicile was in a loyal State therefore he was a loyal man. The testimony to which I have alluded was examined by the Committee on Claims only a short time ago; I think about two weeks since. The Senator from Florida who is a member of that committee was not present at the time the testimony was taken by the committee; but I assert that the testimony taken by the committee in the case of Connor Brothers shows that Warren Mitchell was employed by the confederate government at Nashville prior to the capture of Nashville by the Federal forces in March, 1862, as a meat-packer for the confederate government; that he had a contract with the confederate government by which that government furnished him the live hog: he slaughtered the hog and returned to the government the hams, shoulders, and sides, cured, and he retained the rest of the animal for his pay.

Both the Senator from Florida and the Senator from Kentucky say that this question was decided by the Court of Claims and also by the Supreme Court on a mere technicality. I submit that it was not decided upon a technicality, but that the question upon which it was decided was a question of substance. The Senator says that if he were an inhabitant of a seceding State he could have recovered in this case. I suppose, according to the law of nations, when a citizen of the United States, not of one of the seceding States, went into the Confederate States and there assisted in any way the Confederate States in carrying on the war against the United States he ought to be deemed more guilty than an inhabitant of one of the seceding States.

When the Committee on Claims considered this case at the last session of the present Congress they were of the opinion that the equities of the case were not sufficiently strong to authorize the committee to go behind the decision of the Court of Claims and behind the decision of the Supreme Court, no matter what the character of this man is, no matter whether he is old or young. It is satisfactorily shown to us by the decision of the highest court in the land that he is not legally entitled to recover. Then he comes here, and as a matter of grace and favor asks Congress to pass a bill paying him this large some of money. I submit, Mr. President, that the equities as they appear to the Senate are not sufficiently strong to authorize Congress to go behind the decision of the court and to pay this large sum of money to the claimant.

Mr. STEVENSON. I am at least supported by a majority of the committee, of which the Senator who has just taken his seat is a minority. He does not represent this committee. What are standing committees for but to examine in such cases, first, the loyalty, then the equity, and then the justice? So that I say to the Senator so far as the equity is concerned my statements are upheld by a majority of his own committee. That is all I have to say on that point.

I say further that there have been a dozen cases that the Senator cannot controvert in which this identical principle has been settled, that, though an order was illegal, yet Congress when the court has decided against it has paid the claimant. No man will deny that principle; and why shall you make an exception in this man's case? Is it prejudice? Is it injustice? Is it the locality from which he comes? Then let every man take notice of his own claims. In Mitchell vs. Harmony this principle was recognized; and I say that this is a just claim. What is it? There is no doubt that the United States got this man's money; none that this was his cotton; but the allegation is that he should suffer for the illegal order of General Anderson, which allowed him to go to the South to collect his debts, an honest purpose, a just purpose, a loyal purpose. He applied to the military before he went, saying; "These men are indebted to me; give me permission to go there and save my property that I may pay my loyal creditors." General Anderson gave him permission; he went there; he took this cotton; it was sold; the Government has the proceeds, after taking half from him; and the Senator from Wisconsin says here is no equity. Great God, upon what standard does his idea of equity rest?

I have nothing more to say, Mr. President. I trust this case to the judgment of a majority of a standing committee of this House. I trust it to the sense of equity of the Senate, and hope that they will pass this bill.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Mr. President, is is true that at the present session of Congress the majority of the Committee on Claims reported in favor of the payment of this claimant; but at that time the positive evidence which was afterward brought before the committee of the disloyalty of the claimant was not before the committee. I am satisfied that if this claim were recommitted to the committee, and the testimony to which I have alluded with regard to his false claim of loyalty were brought to the attention of the committee, not a single member of the committee would vote in favor of this claim.

I do not think the Senator from Kentucky is entirely justified in questioning my motives in reference to the action I have taken in regard to this claim. It was submitted to me, as one of the members of that committee, for examination. I examined it, and reported against it; and the entire committee, so far as I now recollect, agreed with me in that report. It was subsequently, as I have stated, recommitted; and when considered during the present session of Congress, a majority of the committee, not having the evidence which subsequently came to our knowledge before them, reported in favor of the payment of the claim.

Now, the Senator from Kentucky asks whether the locality from which this claim comes influenced me or the committee to any extent. I do not think that the locality could influence the committee at all, because we all very well remember that Kentucky was neutral during the war. It is said that she sold mules to both parties, and grew rich while the remainder of the Southern States were growing poor. The locality, I assure the Senator, has nothing whatever to do with my action in regard to this claim.

Mr. ALCORN. Mr. President, it occurs to me that there is a misapprehension with regard to this claimant in one respect, and that the Senator from Wisconsin is not justified in asserting that the claimant here has represented himself as loyal to the Government. I may be mistaken, but it occurs to me that I heard read in the report that he had been pardoned by President Johnson. If he represented himself to President Johnson as loyal, that President certainly would not have undertaken to pardon him. It must have been upon his representation that he was disloyal that he was pardoned. Now, if the Senator from Wisconsin could convict this claimant of falsehood, I would for myself decide that that falsehood established against him would so taint his claim with fraud as to forbid that the Senate should give him any relief. But I do not understand that he has represented himself as loyal. Do not some of the papers which have been read state the fact that he was pardoned by President Johnson?

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. The papers do state that he was pardoned; but the claimant himself claims that he was loyal, and the Senator from Florida, who made the report which has been read in the presence and hearing of the Senate, stated that he was loyal.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I stated in the report that from what I could learn he had no sympathy with the secession movement, but as a matter of precaution, after having remained for some years within the confederate lines, he asked for a pardon and obtained it.

Mr. ALCORN. In asking for a pardon and obtaining it he confessed himself disloyal. I do not understand that he has attempted by any proof or by any affidavit on his part to show that he was loyal. The Senator from Florida represents him as loyal from the fact that he is a citizen of a loyal State and so technically a loyal man, but the claimant here has not represented himself as loyal and therefore he is entitled to the consideration of a disloyal man.

The proof shows that this claimant had a certain amount of property in the Southern States, and that that property was seized and sold. There has been no adjudication against him, no confiscation of that property.

The moneys arising from the sale of this cotton, the net proceeds, are now in the Treasury. To whom does the money belong? No proceeding has been had against him. It has not been declared to be the property of the Government of the United States; but the Government of the United States holds it in trust for the owner. It occurs to me that legally he is entitled to this money, though technically he did not recover before the Supreme Court. The cotton was his property. It has not been adjudicated the property of the Government; there has been no proceeding of confiscation of his property; and in equity I should hold for myself, the money being in the Treasury, there being no mistake whatever, the Government not having shown a title to this money by any proceeding against this claimant whereby confiscation could have been legally had, that he ought to have the proceeds of his cotton.

I repeat, if it can be shown that he has represented himself as loyal, and thereby been detected in falsehood, it would taint the whole case to a degree that should lead the Senate not to consider his equities at all.

Mr. WRIGHT. This claimant, as all claimants do who come to Congress knowing full well that they must establish their loyalty before they can have any standing before us, asserts in his petition and attempts to establish by his testimony that he was loyal to the Government during the war. If the committee had not been satisfied from the proof then before them of his loyalty, there would have been no member of the committee who would have voted in favor of reporting this bill; but as I remember, as the testimony then stood, a majority of the committee thought that point was sufficiently sustained by evidence, and therefore they reported this bill.

I repeat that this claimant knew perfectly well that he must not only assert his loyalty, but establish it; else he could have no standing before the committee or before the Senate. Hence, he did assert it, and he undertook to establish it by evidence.

I feel perfectly certain also in making another statement here. The Senator from Kentucky makes not a little claim in favor of the justice and equity of this demand, for the reason that a majority of the committee have reported in favor of it. That report was made under the circumstances that I have just alluded to, upon the evidence that was then before the committee; and I repeat that I do not believe there is a member of the committee who would have thought of reporting in favor of this bill if he had not been satisfied then of his loyalty.

I can say another thing, that no measure has been reported from that committee in favor of any claim at this session of Congress, nor, as far as I know, at any session of Congress since I have been here, unless there was affirmative evidence of loyalty. We have held that as a condition first to be established with reference to all these claims, that there must be proof of loyalty. Since this case was reported, in the examination of another case it turns out that there is the most conclusive evidence rebutting entirely the case made by the claimant in the first instance; and it is upon that testimony largely that the contest is now made against this bill, not forgetting, however, by any means the position which the claimant occupied as one asking relief here after the highest court in the land had decided against him. I understand that that decision was not upon a technicality, but it was upon this theory: That he was so engaged in trade at the time that it was contrary to public policy that such a person should be paid. That is to say, he was so engaged in trade with those who were at war with the Government that it was contrary to the very plainest principles of public policy and the well-settled principles of international law that he should be paid his claim. If he had not been thus engaged, being loyal, then I do not see how there would be much, if any, trouble in the Supreme Court, aside from the one of purest technicality; and that was that the law allowed only a certain class of persons to go into the Court of Claims for the purpose of having a return or a recompense for their cotton seized. That stood upon the language of the statute, which only allowed those who were residents of certain States to go into the Court of Claims and have compensation for their property seized, and not having been a resident of such State, it is said, could have no standing in court. But at the same time the point is made that his trade with the rebel government was contrary to public policy, and therefore he could have no claim upon the Government of the United States for his property.

In addition to that, the evidence establishes, since this case was reported, that he was not only engaged in such trade but that he was engaged in slaughtering pork or preparing pork for the rebel army, and under such circumstances and in such a condition that there never has been a report by our committee that could by any possibility recognize a claim of this character.

Under such circumstances, in view of this additional evidence, I think the claim should again go to the committee, and I therefore move that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Claims. I do it for the reason, as I have already stated, largely that the evidence which has been developed since shows that this person occupies a very different position from what he did, as the committee regarded, at the time the claim was passed upon before.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Mr. President, it will be remembered that a week or two ago a case not nearly as meritorious, in my opinion, as this one, not surpassing it at least in merit, came before the Senate; the case of a citizen of Georgia whose cotton was taken at or about the same time, who remained in the State of Georgia during the whole period of the war, who had been engaged in arms against the public authority of the United States, as disclosed by the testimony. That was thought to have been, and in my judgment was, a meritorious case; and I think that the Senator from Iowa voted for the bill for the relief of that claimant.

Mr. WRIGHT. No. My friend, the Senator from Florida, certainly does not want to do me an injustice. I reported against that bill from the Committee on the Judiciary, and contested the bill here to the very last moment; and finally a communication was sent from the Treasury Department, which stated that a substitute in a certain form could do no harm; and, upon the recommendation of the Department, I offered the substitute, and it was passed. But it was not for the payment of any certain amount, at all; it was referring it to the Treasury Department, because the Secretary said that the bill could not possibly do any harm, for there could be no allowance under it.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. There could be no allowance under it.

Mr. WRIGHT. Yes, sir, in the form of the substitute.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Very well. This case has been well stated by the Senator from Kentucky, [Mr. STEVENSON.] It was decided upon a mere technicality in the Supreme Court. This man came from a loyal State, the State of Kentucky. In such cases, I understand, proof of loyalty has not been required. When a citizen comes before us from the State of Massachusetts, from the State of Indiana, or from any State in the Union which is known to have been loyal during the war, it has not been, as I understand, the practice to inquire closely into his status during the late war. The presumption of law is in his favor, that he is loyal. When he comes from a disloyal State, so called, then the presumption is against him and he must overcome that presumption by meeting the question in the outset and showing affirmatively his loyalty. That has been the practice before this committee, as I understand. This was a case of that description. Here was a man from the State of Kentucky, prima facie loyal, and there was nothing in his case to demand any proof of loyalty. He held the permit of the officer of the Government authorizing him to go from that loyal State into the Southern States upon business which was supposed at the time to have been legitimate. He went there under this order, and while there he acquired this cotton upon the faith of this officer of the Government, because I think it will not be denied by any man that if General Anderson had not granted the order Mitchell never would have gone into the confederacy. After he acquires the property what is the attitude of the Government? It turns around and repudiates the action of its own officer and says that he shall be placed in a worse condition than he would have been in if the order had never been granted. The order, say the Senators, was void. Grant that it was; but, as I said in my report, did that fact confer any rights upon the Government? All the rights that it now claims to this man's property are founded in that order; it can have none beyond it.

I ask, in all candor and seriousness, if this great Government can afford to set up a title to property acquired in that way? Can it afford to say that General Anderson deluded this man with the belief that he had authority to give him this permit, and after it is given, after he acts in good faith under it and acquires this property, then turn around and say, "We repudiate the act, we will take your property?" And without submitting the question to the decision of any lawful court, as was well said by the Senator from Mississippi, [Mr. ALCORN,] the whole thing is gobbled up and he is told that he has no rights because this order did not confer any authority upon him to pass the military lines.

Mr. WRIGHT. I only wish to add one thing to what I have said, that I think the whole of the Senator's argument is answered by just one suggestion. Assuming that the order of General Anderson was ever so valid to allow this party to go into the Confederate States and trade, to collect his debts, it did not give him any authority to go there and trade as he did and furnish aid and comfort and assistance to the enemy by furnishing them pork, as he did at Nashville. I think that is a complete answer.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. That, I will say, of course is matter that has since come up, not anything that has been before me.

Mr. WRIGHT. That is the reason I move to recommit the bill, because I feel very sure if that fact had been known at the time the Senator made his report he would not have concurred in the report himself.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. But behind all that, in support of the equity of this case, lies this: that if this man had furnished pork in Tennessee and in Georgia, had been engaged in active hostilities against the Government, and had been pardoned and had gone into the Court of Claims, under the law as it stood at the time the case was passed upon he could have recovered his property.

Mr. WRIGHT. May I ask the Senator a question? If that matter had been made known to him at the time he reported the bill, would he have prepared the report in favor of the allowance of this claim?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. That is another question. I decided the question on the evidence before me. But I say that, under the law as it stood at the time this case was decided, if this man had been a citizen of Tennessee, and had furnished pork or any other thing to the army of the confederacy, and had engaged in armed hostility to the United States, and had been pardoned and had gone into the Court of Claims, under the law he would have been entitled to the property. But his case went off on the technical ground that he was a citizen of a loyal State, namely, the State of Kentucky.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa has moved to recommit the bill to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. WRIGHT. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 31, nays 29; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Anthony, Blaine, Booth, Boutwell, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Cameron of Wisconsin, Chaffee, Christiancy, Conkling, Cragin, Dawes, Dorsey, Ferry, Frelinghuysen, Harvey, Howe, Ingalls, Logan, McMillan, Mitchell, Morrill, Morton, Oglesby, Paddock, Sargent, Sharon, Teller, Wadleigh, Windom, and Wright—31.

NAYS—Messrs. Alcorn, Bailey, Barnum, Bogy, Conover, Cooper, Davis, Dennis, Eaton, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Hereford, Hitchcock, Johnston, Jones of Florida, Kelly, Kernan, McCreery, Maxey, Merrimon, Norwood, Randolph, Ransom, Robertson, Saulsbury, Stevenson, Wallace, Whyte, and Withers—29.

So the motion to recommit was agreed to.

TOWN SITES ON PUBLIC DOMAIN.

Mr. OGLESBY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 1765) respecting the limits of reservations for town sites upon the public domain. I will state in regard to this bill that it is one of very great interest to the people in Utah. It is of no local or personal interest to any Senator, but to those people it is of very great concern. The subject has been under consideration in Congress for two or three years and, at last, the Senate committee and the House committee have agreed upon a bill which has passed the House and is recommended by the Committee on Public Lands of the Senate. It will be a very excellent disposition of the question if the Senate will hear the four sections of the bill read and pass them. I do not want to take time to go into a lengthy explantion, unless some Senator should desire, about the merits of the bill. I move to take it up.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The first section declares that the existence or incorporation of any town upon the public lands of the United States shall not be held to exclude from pre-emption or homestead entry a greater quantity than twenty-five hundred and sixty acres of land, or the maximum area which may be entered as a town site under existing laws, unless the entire tract claimed or incorporated as such town site shall, including and in excess of the area specified, be actually settled upon, inhabited, improved, and used for business and municipal purposes.

Section 2 provides that where entries have been heretofore allowed upon lands afterward ascertained to have been embraced in the corporate limits of any town, but which entries are or shall be shown, to the satisfaction of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, to include only vacant unoccupied lands of the United States, not settled upon or used for municipal purposes, nor devoted to any public use of such town, the entries, if regular in all respects, shall be confirmed and may be carried into patent. This confirmation is not to operate to restrict the entry of any town site to a smaller area than the maximum quantity of land which, by reason of present population, it may be entitled to enter under section 2389 of the Revised Statutes.

Section 3 provides that whenever the corporate limits of any town upon the public domain are shown or alleged to include lands in excess of the maximum area specified in section 1, the Commissioner of the General Land Office may require the authorities of such town, and it shall be lawful for them, to elect what portion of these lands, in compact form and embracing the actual site of the municipal occupation and improvement, shall be withheld from pre-emption and homestead entry; and thereafter the residue of such lands shall be open to disposal under the homestead and pre-emption laws.

Section 4 declares that it shall be lawful for any town which has made, or may hereafter make, entry of less than the maximum quantity of land named in section 2389 of the Revised Statutes, to make such additional entry or entries of contiguous tracts, which may be occupied for town purposes, as, when added to the entry or entries therefore made will not exceed twenty-five hundred and sixty acres; but such additional entry shall not, together with all prior entries, be in excess of the area to which the town may be entitled at date of the additional entry by virtue of its population as prescribed in section 2389.

Mr. INGALLS. Is there a report in that case?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is no printed report.

Mr. INGALLS. I should like to hear the bill explained.

Mr. OGLESBY. The bill relates to a subject, as I stated before, of great concern and great interest to the people in Utah. It does not embrace any land within the city of Salt Lake.

Mr. INGALLS. Is the bill intended to apply to a particular case?

Mr. OGLESBY. No, sir; the bill is intended to limit the boundaries of town sites under the statute law. If the Senator will remember, there are various instances in which a town can take twenty-five hundred acres or six hundred acres, or so many hundred acres, according to the number of people in the incorporated village or town.

Mr. INGALLS. How then does this bill change the law?

Mr. OGLESBY. It limits the town sites to twenty-five hundred acres, unless the town is actually occupying more ground than that. If the boundaries of the city cover more ground than that actually, then the pre-emptors and homestead settlers cannot take it; but if, as is the case all over Utah where whole cities have grown up and taken up rich valleys, extending the limits indefinitely all over the valleys, when pre-emptors or homestead settlers have gone on and attempted to make improvements the gentiles, as they are called, wake up the last day to find that by some mysterious mode or other the corporate limits have been extended over their pre-emption and homestead claims. Corporate limits have been extended indefinitely in all directions around there until it is impossible to get a location; and yet the inhabitants of the town do not reach the land, do not come near it, do not touch it, but they simply shove these people off until a favorite comes along, and that favorite is regarded, and then the town site is moved a little so as to let him get a pre-emption or homestead. The corporate limits of the town are then modified so that the favorite can get his pre-emption or homestead. If he happens to be a gentile or an outside barbarian, or a gentleman of culture and refinement, he is cut off by the corporate limits held in abeyance and chaos over his rights. This bill simply defines the limits of these corporations, that they shall not hold the public domain unless between actual defined limits of a corporation exceeding twenty-five hundred acres; but if in fact they do cover more territory than twenty-five hundred acres by actual occupancy then that by this bill is prevented from being taken otherwise. It opens the public lands in those rich valleys—and they are not very numerous, you know—to actual settlement by pre-emptors and homestead settlers. It relieves from these corporations just that much of the public domain that is held there under claim of the statute law where the boundaries of the corporation or town reach around. This is to limit, restrain, and define that, to leave the public land open to the settler and pre-emptor. That is the substance of the bill.

Mr. INGALLS. Has the bill been submitted to the Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. OGLESBY. I suppose it was in the House. The bill has been before us for a year or two. The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. WINDOM] had it particularly in charge during my absence, seven or eight weeks. It has been thoroughly discussed in the House and in the Senate, and both committees have concluded that it is the best measure we can get on the subject, and it is a measure that absolutely ought to receive the attention of Congress, as we think. It is the best bill we can get on the subject.

Mr. PADDOCK. I understand it to have been approved by the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENTS TO AN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BLAINE, Mr. INGALLS, and Mr. STEVENSON submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them respectively to the bill (H. R. No. 4680) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

MOTION FOR A RECESS.

Mr. WINDOM. I wish to ask unanimous consent of the Senate that a recess be taken at five o'clock until half-past seven, or, if it be preferred that the Senate remain in continuous session, until we can report upon the sundry civil bill. The committee will have it ready to report in fifteen or twenty minutes, and I suggest the recess as perhaps being the most desirable.

Mr. SARGENT. Suppose you say from five to eight, which will give a chance to print the bill.

Mr. WINDOM. I do not believe it can be printed in that time.

Mr. SARGENT. I think it can. We are wearied out, and I think we had better have a recess from five to eight.

Several SENATORS. Five to eight.

Mr. WINDOM. Several Senators suggest that the recess be from five to eight o'clock. As that seems to be the general desire, I move that the Senate take a recess from five to eight o'clock this evening.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WINDOM. I wish to say one word to Senators present, that unless we can act upon the sundry civil bill to-night it will be impossible to get it through; and therefore I appeal to every Senator to be present, so that we may be sure to have a quorum.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SARGENT submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 4616) making appropriations for the naval service for the year ending June 30, 1873, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, report that they cannot agree.

A. A. SARGENT,
A. H. CRAGIN,
WM. A. WALLACE,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

J. H. BLOUNT,
EUGENE HALE,
W. C. WHITTHORNE,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. SARGENT. I move that the Senate further insist on its amendments and ask for another conference.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the committee on the part of the Senate; and Mr. SARGENT, Mr. BOUTWELL, and Mr. WITHERS were appointed.

AGRICULTURAL REPORT.

Mr. PADDOCK. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives authorizing the printing of the Report of the Commissioner of Agriculture.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the following resolution:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring,) That there be printed 300,000 copies of the Report of the Commissioner of Agriculture for 1876; 224,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, 56,000 copies for the use of the Senate, and 20,000 copies for the use of the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. ANTHONY. I move to amend that by reducing the number to 200,000; 35,000 for the Senate, 140,000 copies for the House, and 25,000 for the Commissioner.

Mr. PADDOCK. I hope the amendment of the Senator from Rhode Island will not prevail, because at this late hour if the resolution should be so amended it may be a question whether it can be passed at all at this session, and it certainly is an imperative demand on the part of the agricultural interests of this country that the resolution should pass. I hope the amendment will not prevail.

Mr. HARVEY. I hope the resolution will be passed without amendment. There is no document published by Congress that is in so much demand and none of so great use.

Mr. ANTHONY. This amendment gives seven hundred and fifty copies to each Senator and to each member of the House of Representatives of this book for gratuitous distribution.

Mr. PADDOCK. If there were seventeen hundred and fifty there would yet not be enough. It is a very easy matter here to appropriate a million of dollars in the interest of commerce, to remove a snag somewhere in the navigation off the coast of Rhode Island which may obstruct a clam-boat, but when it comes to the interest of agriculture, in which more than one-half of the people of this country are deeply concerned, it seems to be almost impossible to make any progress.

Mr. ANTHONY. We have not found it very easy to get appropriations to remove the obstructions from our navigation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon the amendment of the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. CLAYTON. I hope the number will not be reduced.

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the resolution.

Mr. ANTHONY. Then I will introduce as a substitute a bill making an appropriation. This publication is to cost $120,000. I offer this bill in lieu of the resolution.

Be it enacted, &c., That the Public Printer be, and he is hereby, directed to cause to be printed 300,000 copies of the report of the Commissioner of Agriculture for the year 1876; of which 224,000 copies shall be for the use of the House of Representatives, 56,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, and 20,000 copies shall be for the use of the Department of Agriculture; and that the sum of $120,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated for the execution of the work.

Mr. PADDOCK. I hope this amendment will not prevail. It is practicable for my friend, if he wishes to make an appropriation to defray the expense of printing this report, to submit an amendment to the Appropriation Committee to be placed upon the sundry civil bill or some other bill under consideration by that committee; and for the reason that I have before assigned, that at this late hour of the session it would be unfortunate to make an amendment to the resolution lest it might fail absolutely, I object to the amendment. I hope it may be voted down.

Mr. ANTHONY. You cannot make any amendment that will prevent a bill passing by the vote of the Senate and House. In fact I feel much obliged to my friend from Nebraska that he had not introduced a bill for seventeen hundred and fifty copies instead of seven hundred and fifty copies for each Senator and Member. I think if we are going into this expensive work of printing we ought to face the music and make an appropriation when we make the order for printing.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Rhode Island as a substitute.

Mr. MORRILL. I would suggest to my friend from Nebraska that it would be of no importance to pass this resolution without the appropriation, for the reason that the Printing Department will not have the funds to print the books, and it will turn out as it did some years ago, that the books will not be printed for the reason that there is no fund provided. It seems to me that it is not at war with the purpose of getting the larger number printed to have it accompanied by an appropriation bill, so that if one passes the other should pass to make both effectual.

Mr. WEST. It occurs to me that probably an arrangement can be arrived at in regard to this matter that will suit the Printing Committee and also suit the friends of the measure for printing the agricultural report. The sundry civil bill will be in here to-night, and if the Senate see proper it can make the requisite appropriation upon that bill, but do not hamper this measure by making an amendment upon it and thereby accomplishing its defeat.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Rhode Island, [Mr. ANTHONY.]

Mr. PADDOCK. I give notice to the Senate that if this amendment is voted down I shall offer an amendment to the sundry civil bill to provide for the expense of printing these reports; therefore I hope the amendment will be voted down. I think that will be agreeable to the chairman of the Committee on Printing.

Mr. MORRILL. The notice as given is all well enough, but it will not be in order. No committee has recommended it, and it will be an increase in the amount of the appropriations.

Mr. PADDOCK. I think the point of order suggested by the Senator from Vermont is not correct.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Rhode Island.

The question being put, there were, on a division—ayes 21, noes 14; no quorum voting.

Mr. PADDOCK called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

Mr. MERRIMON. I beg to ask the chairman of the committee what amount is required?

Mr. ANTHONY. One hundred and twenty thousand dollars.

Mr. MERRIMON. How many copies?

Mr. ANTHONY. Three hundred thousand, at forty cents a copy.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I hope the original resolution will prevail. I believe that of the hundreds of thousands of dollars appropriated for public printing there is no expenditure of a dollar more generally desired and more generally satisfactory to a large portion of the constituency of the great Northwest than this. I think this is economy that is rather unusual. I hope the resolution will not be amended, but will be passed as it is.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 21, nays 29; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anthony, Bogy, Booth, Boutwell, Bruce, Burnside, Cameron of Wisconsin, Cragin, Davis, Dawes, Howe, Kernan, Merrimon, Morrill, Norwood, Robertson, Sargent, Wadleigh, Wallace, Whyte, and Wright—21.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Bailey, Barnum, Chaffee, Christiancy, Clayton, Cockrell, Cooper, Dennis, Ferry, Goldthwaite, Harvey, Hitchcock, Ingalls, Johnston Logan, McCreery, McMillan, Maxey, Mitchell, Paddock, Randolph, Ransom, Spencer, Stevenson, Teller, West, Windom, and Withers—29.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Bayard, Blaine, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Conkling, Conover, Dorsey, Eaton, Edmunds, Frelinghuysen, Gordon, Hamilton, Hamlin, Hereford, Jones of Florida, Jones of Nevada, Kelly, McDonald, Morton, Oglesby, Patterson, Saulsbury, Sharon, Sherman, and Thurman—25.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the resolution as passed by the House of Representatives.

The resolution was concurred in.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. GEORGE M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had concurred in the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 4559) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, and for prior years, and for other purposes.

CHANGE OF NAMES OF VESSELS.

Mr. CONKLING. I ask consent, as I am compelled to go out, to report two bills from the Committee on Commerce changing the names of vessels. I call the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts to the fact that these bills are reported. They concern his constituents; they are all regular; and although I may be out for a few moments myself, if he or his colleague will take an opportunity to call them up there will be no objection. The bills I report without amendment are the bill (H. R. No. 1611) authorizing the changing of the name of the sloop Addie Parker, of New Bedford, Massachusetts, and the bill (H. R. No. 1824) to change the name of the pleasure yacht Hiram B. to Iola.

Mr. DAWES. I hope these bills will be passed at once. There cannot be a particle of objection to them.

Mr. CONKLING. Nobody can object to them.

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. No. 1611) authorizing the changing of the name of the sloop Addie Parker, of New Bedford, Massachusetts, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

By unanimous consent the bill (H. R. No. 1824) to change the name of the pleasure yacht Hiram B. to Iola was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HEIRS OF ASBURY DICKINS.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 129) for the relief of the heirs of Asbury Dickins. The subject of this bill is entirely familiar to the members of the Senate, and I apprehend it will require no time in discussion. I suppose upon the reading of the report in this case the facts will be drawn to the attention and memory of the Senate so that they can proceed without any further delay. This bill has been upon the Calendar during the last session and this, and it is extremely desirable that the matter should be disposed of one way or the other, and if the Senate will consent to vote upon this subject it is all I desire. I wish to have the business of the Committee on Claims disposed of, so that the Calendar may be rid of it, and that the various parties concerned may have justice done them. I think this a just case calling for the action of the Senate.

Mr. WRIGHT. I just wish to say one word about this proposition of my friend from Minnesota. I do not propose to antagonize him at all, but I give him notice now that when the bill shall be taken up I shall expect that the two reports shall be read—the majority and the minority; and it will take just about one hour to read them. I want that understood.

Mr. WINDOM. That being the state of the case, I ask consent to make a report from the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I think this matter had better be disposed of now. My motion is before the Senate, and I ask action upon it. I am under the impression that the reading of the reports will not occupy nearly so long as the Senator from Iowa supposes. I may be mistaken, however.

Mr. WINDOM. I fear if this motion is put it will take until five o'clock, and I shall not have an opportunity to report the sundry civil bill.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I will yield for that report as soon as the bill is up.

Mr. COCKRELL. I do hope that this case of Asbury Dickins will not be taken up. I have a precisely two hours' speech to make on that case whenever it comes up in the Senate, and I am sure it will consume at least one day's time of the Senate. It has been upon the Calendar for the last twenty-five years. It is a claim that originated from 1832 to 1837, and it has been pending ever since, and it has been argued at length, and I do hope that the time of the Senate right at the heel of the session will not be consumed in useless debate. It cannot pass the House. It can do no party any good to take it up, and it is a consumption of time to no purpose.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I do hope the Senate now will give the Senator from Missouri an opportunity to make such a speech, for I am sure it would secure the passage of the bill without any delay if the Senate would just take that course, and the only thing then is a matter of time. But, Mr. President, I think the circumstances of this case are such as to call——

Mr. WEST. I rise to a question of order, and I do it in justice to the Senate and the business before it, that it is out of order to discuss the merits of a bill on a motion to take it up.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I am not aware that I have discussed the merits.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota had not discussed the merits.

Mr. WEST. I understood he was speaking of the peculiar circumstances of the case.

Mr. MCMILLAN. But not referring to the merits of the bill.

Mr. WINDOM. I ask my colleague to yield until I can have a disposition of the sundry civil appropriation bill.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I yield.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WINDOM. I am instructed by the Committee on Appropriations to report back the bill (H. R. No. 4680) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes, and to recommend its passage, with sundry amendments. I ask unanimous consent of the Senate to consider this bill to-night without printing. There are quite a large number of amendments, and I do not believe they can be printed with the bill until morning, and if we wait until morning I doubt very much if the bill can be passed. I submit that question to the Senate. If it cannot be printed before eight o'clock, I ask that it be considered without printing.

Mr. ANTHONY. O, no; there is time to have it printed, I think.

Mr. WINDOM. I am informed that there is time enough to print it, therefore I withdraw the request. The understanding is that the bill shall be proceeded with to-night.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I will, under the circumstances, withdraw the motion I made, and will take some other opportunity during the session.

MILITARY ACADEMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 4306) making appropriations for the support of the Militaty Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 10, 12, 13, 14, 16, 21, and 22.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 9, 11, 15, 17, 18, 19, 20, and 23.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 8 and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: Strike out "eleven thousand" and insert in lieu thereof "eight thousand nine hundred and ninety-nine;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 24, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: Strike out of said amendment the words "nine hundred;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 25 and agree to the clause proposed to be stricken out with an amendment as follows: After the word "band" insert "for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878," and the House agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 26, with an amendment striking out all of the amended matter after the word "Army" in line 20, page 6 of the bill; and the House agree to the same.

W. B. ALLISON,
JOHN A. LOGAN,
WM. A. WALLACE,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

HIESTER CLYMER,
JAMES H. BLOUNT,
EUGENE HALE.
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was concurred in.

REPORT ON IMMIGRATION.

Mr. HARVEY. I offer the following resolution, and ask its reference, with the accompanying papers, to the Committe on Printing:

Resolved, That there be printed of the special report of the Chief of the Bureau of Statistics on immigration, from the stereotype plates, 1,000 copies in the English and 2,000 copies in the German language, for distribution by the Treasury Department in those countries in Europe where the languages are spoken.

The resolution, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Printing.

MARSHAL P. THATCHER.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move to proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 3574) for the relief of Marshal P. Thatcher, who had a horse lost in the service and who cannot get pay for him because he had not been mustered according to the regulations.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to Marshal P. Thatcher, late of the Second Michigan Cavalry, $150, in full satisfaction for the loss of a horse, April 15, 1862, while in the military service of the United States.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HENRY VOELTER.

Mr. WADLEIGH. I move to take up Senate bill No. 1255. It is the only thing the Committee on Patents have asked for.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 1255) for the relief of Henry Voelter was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the Commissioner of Patents to hear and determine the application of Henry Voelter for the extension for the further term of seven years of the letters-patent for improvement in reducing wood to paper-pulp, granted to him August 10, 1858, antedated August 29, 1856, extended for seven years from August 29, 1870, and re-issued upon an amended specification June 6, 1871; the form of such application and the mode of proceeding under it to be in all respects the same as was provided by the act of Congress approved July 8, 1870, entitled "An act to revise, consolidate, and amend the statutes relating to patents and copyrights" for the extension of patents granted prior to March 2, 1861; and if upon such hearing the Commissioner shall be satisfied that Voelter, without neglect or fault on his part, has failed to obtain from the use or sale of his invention or discovery a reasonable remuneration for the time, ingenuity, and expense bestowed upon it and the introduction of it into use, and that it is just and proper, having due regard to the public interest, that the term of the patent should be so extended, the Commissioner shall make a certificate upon the re-issue patent, renewing and extending the same to Voelter, his executors, administrators, or assigns for the term of seven years from the 29th day of August, 1877, which certificate shall be recorded in the Patent Office, and thereupon the patent shall have the same effect in law as though it had been originally granted for twenty-eight years.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is there a report?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is a report.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it be read.

Mr. WADLEIGH. It is long.

Mr. COCKRELL. That committee ought to make short reports.

Mr. WEST. It is evident, in view of the reading of that report and the discussion that will follow on this bill, that it cannot pass before the hour at which we are to take a recess; and as there are a number of executive communications on the table from the President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business up to the hour of recess.

Mr. WADLEIGH. Let me say that the moment this bill is understood there would be no discussion upon it and no opposition to it. It is the case of an invention wholly new, of immense value to this country, where the inventor has lost $33,000 as it stands to-day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Louisiana that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to.

ELECTORAL COMMISSION RECORDS.

Mr. ANTHONY. While the galleries are clearing I will offer the following resolution from the Committee on Printing and ask for its present consideration:

Resolved, That 500 additional copies of the report of the proceedings of the electoral commission be printed to replace 500 copies taken from the bound edition of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for the use of the electoral commission.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

The Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After three minutes spent in executive session the doors were re-opened; and (at five o'clock) the Senate took a recess until eight o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The Senate re-assembled at eight o'clock p. m.

CLAIM OF DOMINICAN REPUBLIC.

Mr. WINDOM, from the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the message of the President of the United States, communicating, in answer to a resolution of the Senate of February 27, 1877, information in relation to the demand for the payment of money claimed to be now due the Dominican government from the United States, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations; which was agreed to.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I am directed by the Committee on Foreign Relations to report to the Senate a provision to pay to the assignees of the Dominican Republic the sum of $71,400.80 for the occupation of the bay of Samana, with accompanying documents; and I move that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, who may present it as an amendment to the sundry civil bill.

The motion was agreed to.

HENRY VOELTER.

Mr. WADLEIGH. I call for the unfinished business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. MITCHELL in the chair.) The unfinished business is the bill (S. No. 1255) for the relief of Henry Voelter. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire, [Mr. WADLEIGH,] to proceed to the consideration of the bill. Is the Senate ready for the question?

Mr. DAVIS. Let the bill be read for information.

Mr. WADLEIGH. It is already before the Senate, as I understand.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be reported for information.

The Chief Clerk read the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on proceeding to the consideration of the bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INFRINGEMENT OF PATENTS.

Mr. WADLEIGH. I move to proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 3370) to amend the statutes in relation to damages for infringement of patents, and for other purposes, which was reported from the Committee on Patents with certain amendments.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I suggest to the Senator from New Hampshire that that is a bill of a good deal of importance, as I understand it. It ought to be fully considered, and in full Senate.

Mr. WADLEIGH. I will state for the information of the Senator from Massachusetts that the parties who desire the passage of this bill and the parties who oppose its passage had a long consultation, in which they agreed upon certain amendments to this bill which made the bill satisfactory to both sides.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Is it a bill relating to private rights?

Mr. WADLEIGH. It is a bill relating to private rights, to a certain extent.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Let it be read. I thought it was a bill for the alteration of public laws.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire to proceed to the consideration of the bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, before we enter upon this bill, I wish to say that I have, now that I learn what the bill is, remonstrances by telegraph and otherwise from many people, who insist that this bill is not what it should be by any means; and I trust that we shall not at this hour of the night take up a bill which covers so much of doubtful territory as is covered by this bill. For one, I want an opportunity to look at it and I want an opportunity to be heard upon it if the allegations made to me by letter and by telegram, by lawyers, by inventors, and by manufacturers, have any considerable thing to rest upon, and certainly we cannot have that now at this hour of the night and with the evening belonging to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. Mr. President——

Mr. WADLEIGH. One moment, if my friend pleases. If the Senator from New York had taken the trouble to ascertain what this bill as amended is I am sure he would interpose no objection to its passage. The bill as originally presented was the bill against which he received remonstrances, and numerous remonstrances against it came to the Committee on Patents, and a long hearing was had before that committee, on which eminent counsel appeared on both sides; and finally those counsel, comprising some of the most eminent patent lawyers in the country, upon both sides, agreed upon amendments to this bill, which made it satisfactory to all; and I venture to say that from no source whatever has there come any remonstrance against the bill as it is with these amendments; and I hope it will be considered, as it remedies certain well-known evils in reference to patent law and practice.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. That bill cannot go through. I ask the indulgence of the Senate to take up a bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator from Pennsylvania that this bill has already been taken up and is now in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I thought it was disposed of.

Mr. MORRILL. There is a report, I believe, that was not read in relation to this bill. I ask for the reading of the report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed by the Clerk that there is no report accompanying the bill. The bill is in Committee of the Whole, and upon the amendment.

Mr. CONKLING. Which bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill which was taken up before the Senator from New York obtained the floor.

Mr. CONKLING. The patent bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes, sir.

Mr. CONKLING. I want to be heard upon that. Mr. President, the Senator from New Hampshire expresses the opinion that no remonstrance has been made to this bill since it assumed the shape in which it now presents itself. As throwing some light upon the fact in that respect, I mention to the Senator from New Hampshire that yesterday when he presented a bill relating to the Patent Office, which is not this bill at all, and I interposed an inquiry, in consequence of which the bill went over, I received from those who supposed it was this bill as now reported messages, after the afternoon papers had been issued, thanking me for interposing and begging me to look at some of the features of the bill which, on reference to it, I found did not exist, but do exist in this bill. These dispatches came from people known to me in some instances, who are very apt to know what they are talking about; and opening this bill now at random, my eye falls upon the third section; and a few lines of that section I wish to read, to illustrate, if I can, to the Senate the sort of measure with which it is proposed now, at ten minutes after eight, to begin a change of the patent laws:

SEC. 3. That every patent, or any interest therein, shall be assignable in law by an instrument in writing; and the patentee, or his assigns or legal representatives, may, in like manner, grant and convey an exclusive right under the patent for the whole or any specified part of the United States, or may grant licenses under said patent, exclusive or otherwise, as the parties may agree. And when there are two or more joint owners, or owners in common, of any patent, a license from any one of said owners shall be good and valid in law, and shall vest in the licensee full right to the said invention, according to the terms of said license, unless the conveyance or other instrument creating such joint ownership, or ownership in common, shall provide that no license shall be valid unless executed by all of such owners, or a specified portion thereof in number or interest, or unless an agreement to that effect shall be made by said owners, and filed for record before the execution of said license.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. Let us take the question.

Mr. CONKLING. On what?

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I beg the Senator's pardon. I spoke in my seat without reflection.

Mr. CONKLING. But I did not hear my friend, and I am trying to hear him.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I am very anxious to get up a little bill to pay but a few hundred dollars to a disabled soldier.

Mr. CONKLING. I am going to occupy the floor for but a moment, and I think in aid of the Senator's wish. Addressing myself to any Senator who listens and who has had any experience in the trial of patent causes and the settlement of patent law I was going to consider for a moment what this section proposes, what it proposes in reference to existing cases, what it proposes in reference to other cases. For example, the Supreme Court said long ago, and has often repeated, that no interest in an invention is assignable at all until it has been brought into complete and effectual existence. In the language of the court, an invention in fieri is not assignable at all. Will any lawyer tell me what effect upon that principle of law this section is to have (I do not know from reading it twice) either as to existing cases or to other cases? Can it be that without an opportunity to examine this bill and to understand it, we should take up a measure as radical in its operation as that, which we know is objected to, to which, speaking for one, my attention has been repeatedly and earnestly called for the last two or three months? I had nomore idea that the consideration of the bill was to proceed now than I had that the Geneva award bill or any other important measure was to be taken up to-night, which I supposed was to be occupied by the Committee on Appropriations.

I beg to assure my friend from New Hampshire that the last thing I want to do is to interfere with his committee or the work of any committee of which I am not a member, and I would not interpose on this subject, if I had not received many letters from lawyers and others protesting against various provisions of this bill. Knowing what I do of the history of patent legislation for the last ten or fifteen years, and knowing something, as I do from others, of what occurs under the statutes as they stand now, in the courts and elsewhere, I do respectfully insist that a subject of this sort should be taken up when there is time to discuss it, time to understand it, and time to go sure-footed in attempting changes so radical as it seems to me are proposed by this bill.

I am with the Senator from Pennsylvania in getting up any bill which he wants to take up, and I shall be with the Senator from New Hampshire for taking up this bill whenever it can be taken up deliberately. Particularly if a little notice is given so that we may possess ourselves of it, I will assist him at any time in taking it up, but I hope the honorable Senator will not feel that he is bound, (although I know his desire is as that of every Senator ought to be to care for the measures which come from his committee,) to-night, with so thin a Senate, to summon us unexpectedly to take up a bill which I think every Senator ought to understand.

Mr. WADLEIGH. I will delay the Senate but a single moment. The Senator from New York has pointed out in this bill that portion of it to which he objects.

Mr. CONKLING. No, I beg the Senator's pardon. I opened the bill at random to read an illustration to show the character of the bill. I do not know that I do object to it, for I do not understand what the reasons are.

Mr. WADLEIGH. The bill simply provides that the owners of a patent right who own it as joint owners shall be partners therein, and that one of them may convey the rights of partners; and that is the rule now with reference to all species of personal property at common law. It introduces no new principle whatever, and so far as it applies to this subject it is correct and right. I will simply say that this bill has already passed the House as it was first introduced. Its passage at this session is demanded by a very large interest, and, as I said, numerous counsel appeared before the committee for the purpose of urging its passage. It attempts to remedy certain evils which if they continue to exist will render the patent law of no use to anybody, and so odious that it will fall of its own weight. I had hoped that this bill or some measure of relief would pass at this session. Of course if the Senate vote otherwise I cannot help it, but I should like to have the bill passed.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I should like to know from the Senator from New Hampshire in what particulars this bill would work changes in the existing laws?

Mr. WADLEIGH. The bill in the first place provides for a period of limitation within which suits may be brought after infringement. That period is four years. Now there is practically no limitation whatever, which is a great hardship to those who use patent rights.

Mr. CONKLING. Does the Senator say there is no limitation to the time in which damages for infringement may be recovered?

Mr. WADLEIGH. As I understand the latest decisions made within three months, and which were quoted to the committee, suits for infringement may be brought at any time within the life of the patent and within six years afterward, and perhaps forever afterward.

Mr. CONKLING. No doubt of it; but does the Senator say there is no period of limitation within which damages may be recovered?

Mr. WADLEIGH. That is not what I said.

Mr. CONKLING. But this bill limits that, if my friend will pardon me, as I read it:

Shall recover only for such damages for infringement as shall have occurred for and during the term of four years immediately preceding the commencement of such action or proceeding.

If my friend will pardon a further interruption, I beg to suggest to him that this bill makes two very important changes in the law. In the first place, the law is not now that there is no limitation of the period for which damages may be recovered. It changes that, but it makes two important changes. In the first place, it fixes four years as the whole term. It makes that four years the four years immediately antedating the suit. Suppose the person whose rights have been infringed is unable to obtain his evidence and his footing on which to commence his suit, and a period has intervened since the infringement. He is to recover only for the particular four years. I need not say to a patent lawyer as good as the Senator from New Hampshire that many cases occur, not in supposition merely but in practice, where virtually this would denude the party of his right altogether.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments reported from the Committee on Patents will be acted upon in their order. The first amendment of the comittee will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. The first amendment of the committee is in section 1, commencing in line 7, to strike out the following words:

One year immediately preceding the notice of infringement and after such notice shall be given and until the date of the judgment: Provided, That where no other notice of infringement shall be given, the commencement of a suit for such infringement shall be construed as notice.

And in lieu thereof to insert—

four years immediately preceding the commencement of such action or proceeding.

So that the first section of the bill will read:

That from and after the passage of this act, the plaintiff in any action at law or proceeding in equity, if found entitled in such proceeding or action to recover damages for infringement of any patent, shall recover only for such damages for infringement as shall have occurred for and during the term of four years immediately preceding the commencement of such action or proceeding.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I move to postpone the bill indefinitely, or, if the Senator from New Hampshire prefers, I will move to postpone it for the present. I have had, I think, a hundred letters on the subject of this bill, all from people interested in manufacturing and matters connected with patents in my State. I believe it would do them a great deal of wrong. I will move to postpone the bill until the first Monday in December, and for the reason that there is a great deal of interest taken in all these patent bills by everybody almost. Certainly there is not a township in all this country where there are not a great many people interested in everything that is pertaining to patents; and in all the letters to me on this subject it is said that this bill ought not to be passed. If it is not necessary, I shall not occupy more than a moment of time, because it is so near the end of the session, and I move now to postpone the bill until the first Monday in December.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania, to postpone the bill until the first Monday in December.

The motion was agreed to.

EDWIN MORGAN.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I move, and I beg the Senate to indulge me while I make the motion, the immediate consideration of a bill reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment. I move that the Senate take up the bill (H. R. No. 2019) for the relief of Edwin Morgan, late captain of Company G, Seventy-seventh Regiment, Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry. I hope it will be taken up now, because it will have to go to the other House on account of the amendments and be returned here. It is only a few hundred dollars.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Edwin Morgan, late captain of Company G, Seventy-seventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, the pay and allowances of a second lieutenant of infantry, in command of company, from the 19th day of June, 1864, to the 1st day of May, 1865, together with three months' pay proper, allowed to certain officers of the volunteer service under section 4 of act of Congress approved March 3, 1865, after deducting from the pay and allowances any sums of money heretofore paid him for his services for that time.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment in lines 8 and 9, to strike out "the 19th day of June" and insert "the 7th day of July."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. GEORGE M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 4691) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes; and

A bill (H. R. No. 4433) making appropriations for the payment of claims reported allowed by the commissioners of claims under the act of Congress of March 3, 1871.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 4691) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. SARGENT. I think, as the Committee on Appropriations have the sundry civil bill and several conferences on hand, they will hardly be able to take up the Army appropriation bill in committee before morning; and therefore I ask that it be printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be so ordered, if there be no objection. The Chair hears none.

The bill (H. R. No. 4433) making appropriations for the payment of claims reported allowed by the commissioners of claims under the act of Congress of March 3, 1871, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

CATHERINE HARRIS.

Mr. SPENCER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2606) for the relief of Catherine Harris.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Catherine Harris, widow of Matthias Harris, late a chaplain in the United States Army, the amount of pay and allowances due him as a chaplain of the Army from the 5th of February, 1864, to the 10th of October, 1864.

Mr. DAVIS. What is the amount involved?

Mr. SPENCER. It is about $200.

Mr. DAVIS. Let us hear what the bill says. I ask the Clerk to read the bill again.

The Chief Clerk read the bill.

Mr. DAVIS. Is there a report with the bill?

Mr. SPENCER. There is a report.

Mr. DAVIS. Let it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. SPENCER from the Committee on Military Affairs January 23:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2606) for the relief of Catherine Harris, respectfully report:

The following report accompanies the papers transmitted from the House, and is presumed to be the report of the House Committee on Military Affairs. It is a correct statement of the facts as shown by the proof, and warrants the recommendation that the act should pass. A critical examination, however, develops the fact that Chaplain Harris was never at any time during the period mentioned out of the service of the United States, nor could the order of the Secretary of War, Mr. Stanton, be legally construed so as to deprive him of his rank and pay. The order, however, having been revoked, no matter how arbitrarily it may have been construed or illegally interposed, the relief asked for is beyond question just and entitled to be granted. In fact, under the record herewith presented, the Pay Department was not justified in refusing to pay Chaplain Harris for the period provided for in the act. Your committee therefore recommend the passage of the act.

"Catherine Harris is the widow of the late Matthias Harris, who served over twenty years as a chaplain in the United States Army.

"In consequence of allegations that he gave utterance to disloyal sentiments in a sermon preached to the troops, the Adjutant-General of the Army, by letter, January 28, 1864, to Major-General Augur, commanding Department of Washington, informed him that 'The Secretary of War directs that you order the commanding officer at Fort Washington, Maryland, to discontinue the employment of Rev. M. Harris as chaplain at that post.' January 30, 1864, Major-General Augur, by letter, communicated this order to the commanding officer at Fort Washington, which was received and carried into effect February 5, 1864, on which date Chaplain Harris ceased his duties, and subsequently drew his pay as a chaplain in full to that date.

"It appears that the Secretary of War, (Hon. E. M. Stanton,) after personally investigating the matter, was satisfied that an injustice had been done, and by letter, October 8, 1864, he directed Major-General Augur 'that the order to discontinue the employment of Rev. M. Harris as chaplain at Fort Washington be revoked, and he will be assigned to duty at Fort Foote.'

"October 10, 1864, Major-General Augur communicated these orders, by letter, to the commanding officer at Fort Washington, and also inclosed to him the following order:

["Special Orders No. 253.]

"HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF WASHINGTON,
"TWENTY-SECOND ARMY CORPS,
"Washington, D. C., October 10, 1864."

"Chaplain Matthias Harris is hereby relieved from duty at Fort Washington, and will report to Brigadier-General Hardin, commanding division, for assignment to duty at Fort Foote.

"By command of Major-General Augur:

"C. H. RAYMOND,
"Assistant Adjutant-General."

"Chaplain Harris resumed his duties and drew his pay from October 10, 1864, until the time of his death. His widow claims that he was entitled to pay for the time between February 5, 1864, and October 10, 1864.

"From an examination of the official orders referred to, it is evident that their object, or at least their effect, was to place Chaplain Harris in the position of never having been relieved from duty. The letter of the Secretary of War, of October 8, 1864, was not to restore Chaplain Harris to duty, but it revoked the former order dismissing him. The effect of revocation was to place Chaplain Harris in the same position as if the original orders had never been written or issued. That such was the construction of Major-General Augur is evident from his Special Orders No. 253, which, before assigning Chaplain Harris to duty at Fort Foote, relieved him from duty at Fort Washington. If the purpose had been simply to restore Chaplain Harris to the Army, the original orders for his dismissal would not have been revoked; he would simply have been restored to duty and assigned to Fort Foote without the intervening formality of relieving him from duty at Fort Washington, which duty he could only be upon constructively. It would seem to have been the purpose of the Secretary of War to place Chaplain Harris in the position of never having been discontinued from service, and to obliterate from his record, so far as a revocation could do it, the fact.

"It appears, therefore, to your committee that Chaplain Harris must be considered as having been continuously an officer of the Army, and that, not having drawn his pay as such from February 5, 1864, to October 10, 1864, his widow is now justly entitled to the same.

"The committee report that the bill ought to pass."

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ALMERON E. CALKINS.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. I move that the Senate take up the bill (H. R. No. 559) for the relief of Almeron E. Calkins, late a second lieutenant in the Eighth Michigan Infantry.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It authorizes the Paymaster-General of the United States Army to pay Almeron E. Calkins, late a second lieutenant in the Eighth Regiment of Michigan Cavalry, the pay and allowances of a second lieutenant from the 22d of March, 1864, to the 23d of July, 1864, the date of his muster as such second lieutenant.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. This bill has met the unanimous approval of the Committee on Military Affairs in the House and also of the corresponding committee in the Senate. The whole substance of the bill is this: This man Calkins was a lieutenant and actually commanded a company in Sherman's march to the sea; yet he never had an opportunity of being mustered in as an officer, and he has been unable to obtain his pay. That is the whole substance of the case.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment; ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN S. MILLER.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 1130) for the relief of the executors of the estate of John S. Miller, deceased.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to credit Barbara Miller, John S. Miller, and William H. Miller, executors of the estate of John S. Miller, deceased, with the amount of $12,117.10, assessed against them for deficiency in the production of spirits at their distillery at Sterling, Illinois, during the months of April, May, and June, 1876; but the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall be satisfied that they have paid the legal tax upon all spirits produced at their distillery during those months.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is there a report in that case?

Mr. BOUTWELL. I can state the purpose of the bill in a moment.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is there a written report with the bill?

Mr. BOUTWELL. There is no written report with it by the Senate committee; but there was a report made to the House, I think, in the last Congress. I can state the facts briefly, which will be better probably.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to hear the report read, if there is a report with the bill?

Mr. BOUTWELL. I am not sure whether there is a report with the bill or not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that no report accompanies the bill.

Mr. BOUTWELL. But there was a report made in the House. This claim arose in this way: At a distillery in Illinois, as in every other distillery, the Department made an estimate of the capacity of the distillery at the rate of sixteen quarts, or four gallons, for every bushel of grain used in the distillery, fermentation being allowed for forty-eight hours. The law requires that such estimate shall be made, and that the distillery shall pay an amount of tax equal to 80 per cent. of that estimate, and shall pay also for whatever may be made in excess of the estimate. It turned out that during three months, the spring months of the year 1876, the estimate of the capacity of the distillery exceeded the actual product, so that the tax assessed was about $12,000 in excess of what it should have been upon the quantity produced. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue recommends the allowance of this tax against the assessment already existing. The bill was examined by the Committee on Finance, and their opinion was unanimous that this allowance should be made. These are the facts, and upon these facts the Senate can judge.

Mr. COCKRELL. It was because I anticipated the very statement which is made by the Senator from Massachusetts that I asked for an explanation or for the reading of the report. Now it would seem to be gross injustice that one committee of this Senate should report upon a similar state of facts adversely and another committee should report favorably, when both cases are based upon the same facts and upon the same principle. If I am not very much mistaken, the Committee on Claims only the past week considered a case of the very same character and nature as the case described by the Senator from Massachusetts and now under consideration, and that committee report adversely. I think it would be doing great injustice to let this bill pass.

This was a distiller. He made his estimate of the amount of whisky which would be made month by month, and because he failed to make that amount he comes in now and claims a deduction. You establish that principle and every distiller in the United States will be appealing at the doors of Congress for abatements. They know the capacity of their stills and they ought to be governed by the assessments that are made at that time by the ascertainment of the amounts. There has been a bill of this kind under consideration in the Committee on Claims, and, as I understand it, that committee have reported adversely. I do not think it would be right that the Senate should pass this bill under the circumstances.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. As the Senator from Missouri has remarked, a bill similar to this was referred to the Committee on Claims; the bill was referred by the Committee on Claims to the Treasury Department, and the Secretary of the Treasury, in response to an inquiry made of him, wrote us a lengthy communication in which he recommended that the bill do not pass, and we thought he made a very conclusive argument against it. Our own opinion agreeing with the opinion of the Secretary of the Treasury, we unanimously reported against the bill.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Well, Mr. President, I think the policy of the Government ought to be uniform in that respect, and under the circumstances I think that the passage of this bill ought not to be pressed. At some future time perhaps Congress will decide what should be done. I move that the further consideration of the bill be postponed until the first Monday of next December.

The motion was agreed to.

CLOTHING TO SOLDIERS.

Mr. CLAYTON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House joint resolution No. 175.

The motion was agreed to; and the joint resolution (H. R. No. 175) authorizing the issue of clothing to Company A, Second Regiment United States Cavalry, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It is an authority to the Secretary of War to issue to fifty enlisted men of Company A, Second Regiment United States Cavalry, clothing in lieu of and equal in amount to that lost by them at the fire which occurred in the camp of Company A, Second Cavalry, on the 16th day of July, 1874, as shown and recommended in the report of the board of survey convened under Special Orders No. 138, headquarters Fort Laramie, Wyoming Territory, of date of July 17, 1874.

Mr. DAVIS. Let us hear this matter explained.

Mr. CLAYTON. It explains itself. I will state that the barracks caught fire and the clothing of these soldiers was destroyed while they were trying to take care of Government property. It is based on a report of the Secretary of War. The bill is recommended by him. The ascertainment of the amount of clothing destroyed was the result of a board of survey called by the proper officers of the War Department. This resolution is to allow the War Department to re-issue clothing to these soldiers in lieu of what was destroyed while they were endeavoring to save the public property. There is no question whatever about it. It amounts to a very small matter anyhow.

Mr. DAVIS. The Senator says the resolution is based upon a recommendation of the Secretary of War. Let that be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The recommendation of the Secretary of War will be read.

Mr. WINDOM. Before that is read I wish to explain the delay in calling up the sundry civil bill. We expected it here at eight o'clock, but the printers were unable to have it ready before nine, as we are informed.

The Secretary read the following letter of the Secretary of War:

WAR DEPARTMENT, January 6, 1876.

The Secretary of War has the honor to transmit to the House of Representatives copy of the proceedings of a board of survey convened at Fort Laramie, Wyoming Territory, to inquire into and report upon the circumstances attending a fire which occurred in the camp of Company A, Second Regiment of United States Cavalry, on the 16th day of July, 1874, with the recommendation that an act be passed (draught inclosed) authorizing the issue of clothing to the fifty enlisted men of Company A, Second Cavalry, as mentioned in the proceedings of the board of survey, equal in amount to and in lieu of that lost by them at the said fire.

WM. W. BELKNAP,
Secretary of War.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FRANCIS HEGUER AND JOHN C. COLLINS.

Mr. CLAYTON. I have another joint resolution of similar character which I think had bettter be disposed of at once. I move to proceed to the consideration of House joint resolution No. 176.

The motion was agreed to, and the joint resolution (H. R. No. 176) authorizing the issue of clothing to private Francis Hegner, Company F, Seventh Cavalry, and private John C. Collins, Company G, Seventh Cavalry, was considered as in Committee on the Whole.

It authorizes the Secretary of War to issue to private Francis Hegner, Company F, Seventh United States Cavalry, and private John C. Collins, of Company G, Seventh United States Cavalry, clothing in lieu of and equal in amount to that lost by them respectively at the burning of the cavalry stable at Fort Abraham Lincoln, Dakota Territory, November 10, 1874, as shown and recommended in the report of the board of survey convened by Special Orders No. 213, headquarters Fort Abraham Lincoln, Dakota Territory, of the date November 11, 1874.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

W. W. VAN ANTWERP.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask leave to take up the bill (H. R. No. 2694) for the relief of W. W. Van Antwerp, late major of Fourth Michigan Cavalry. I move to take it up.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which provides for paying to—

W. W. Van Antwerp, a citizen of Jackson, Michigan, $160, being the value of a private horse, lost in action while Van Antwerp was in the strict line of his duty as a soldier.

Mr. COCKRELL. The bill provides for paying him $150 for a horse.

The Committee on Military Affairs reported the bill, with an amendment in line five, to strike out "sixty" and insert "fifty;" so as to read, "$150."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WEST submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. Mr. WEST. I ask for the adoption of the report.

Mr. STEVENSON. I should like to hear an explanation of some of those items. Nobody can understand them by merely hearing the Clerk read the numbers. The Senator from Louisiana has charge of the bill, and I should be glad to hear from him.

Mr. WEST. The conferees have only agreed upon matters of detail, and arranged and accommodated the respective sums, leaving open the main questions contained in the bill.

The report was concurred in.

Mr. WEST. I now move that the Senate insist upon its amendments upon which the conferees have not been able to agree and ask for a further conference upon the part of the House.

The motion was agreed to; and by unanimous consent the President pro tempore being authorized to appoint the committee on the part of the Senate, Messrs. WEST, DORSEY, and BOGY were appointed.

LAND CEDED BY TREATY OF 1842.

Mr. McMILLAN. I move to proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 186) to provide for compensation to the owners of certain lands ceded by the United States to Great Britain in and by the treaty of Washington of July 8, 1842.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The preamble recites that the United States, in and by the treaty of Washington of July 9, 1842, by adopting a conventional line "from the monument at the source of the river Saint Croix, running north, following the exploring-line run and marked by the surveyors of the two governments in the years 1817 and 1818," instead of a true line, did cede to the British Crown a strip of land commencing at an angle at said monument, and increasing to nearly one mile in width at the river Saint John, certain portions of which, amounting to 10,718 acres and 137 square rods, had been granted to citizens of the United States by the States of Maine and Massachusetts while the same were within the lines of the United States, and for which the United States received compensation in equivalents and concessions from the British Crown; and that the United States have made compensation to the States of Maine and Massachusetts for so much of the territory as was owned by them, respectively, and all citizens owning lands on the west of the exploring-line, which vested in British subjects by operation of the treaty under the act of July 12, 1862, and other acts, and have hitherto failed to make compensation to those citizens owning lands upon the strip and tract east of the exploring-line, which passed either to British subjects or to the British Crown by virtue of the exploring-line being adopted as the treaty-line between the two countries at that point, whereby those citizens became entitled to compensation for said lands so appropriated to public use.

The bill therefore directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to the parties entitled thereto compensation for the land taken from the State of Maine by the conventional line and included in the province of New Brunswick, not exceeding 10,718 acres and 137 square rods, appropriated by the United States, its value in money at the date of the appropriation, and also for all timber cut therefrom by British subjects during the suspension of jurisdiction by the respective governments preceding the treaty; but the whole amount of compensation so made shall not exceed an average compensation of $3 per acre, and the same shall be distributed and applied in proportion to the relative value of the lands when appropriated. All payments made under the act are to be in full of all compensation due by the United States for the lands so appropriated. In determining the amount and value of the land appropriated, and the amount of compensation to be made to any claimant, the Secretary of the Treasury may use any evidence heretofore taken in relation thereto by the Department of State or by the States of Maine and Massachusetts, and any and all official documents and correspondence pertaining thereto to carry the act into effect.

Mr. WHYTE. From what committee does this bill come? It is a very important bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Committee on Claims.

Mr. McMILLAN. It is reported from the Committee on Claims.

Mr. WHYTE. Is there a report?

Mr. McMILLAN. There is a report accompanying the bill.

Mr. WHYTE. I should like to hear it read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read.

Mr. McMILLAN. I call the attention of the Senate to the fact that the facts are stated in the preamble, which by the report are found to be true. I merely wish to call the attention of the Senate to that.

The Secretary read the following report submitted by Mr. WADLEIGH, from the Committee on Claims, on July 15, 1876:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 186) to provide for compensation to owners of certain lands ceded by the United States to Great Britain in and by the treaty of Washington of July 9, 1842, submit the following report:

They find that the recitals of the preamble to the bill are true.

The subject-matter was before the Forty-third Congress, upon the petition of James A. Drew and others, and the careful report made thereon by Mr. DUNNELL, of the Committee of Claims, which accompanies House bill No. 2873, of the first session of that Congress, sets forth fully and concisely the facts and conclusions that establish the validity of the claim of the beneficiaries under this bill for the indemnity it provides.

Under the treaty of 1783, the division line between the United States and the province of New Brunswick on the east was agreed to be a line drawn due north from the source of the Saint Croix River to the high lands that divide the waters flowing into the Gulf of Saint Lawrence from those which flow into the Atlantic Ocean. A dispute arose afterward in regard to the location of these highlands, which was not adjusted until the convention of 1842, which composed this and other vexed controversies. In 1794, the two governments determined the spot to be regarded as the source of the Saint Croix and identified it by a monument. No formal survey of this due-north line was ever made by the two governments in concert; but, by authority of the State of Massachusetts, the line was run from the monument by surveyors in 1804, and in 1840 by Major Graham, of the United States Topographical Engineers. That the line fixed by these explorations is the true treaty-line of 1783 was claimed as beyond question by our Government, and in effect conceded by Lord Ashburton in the negotiations that preceded the conclusion of the convention of 1842. Long prior to this latter convention, and before the territorial dispute arose, the State of Massachusetts made grants of lands, by townships, chiefly to educational institutions and soldiers distinguished for patriotic services, bounding easterly on this line. By the treaty of 1842, a new boundary was adopted, in place of the old, to meet commercial and political exigencies, for which the United States obtained valuable compensations in the settlement of other boundaries. As thus newly established, the boundary, commencing at the head of the Saint Croix, by the monument, was made to diverge some degrees westerly from due north. In consequence of this variation, and by operation of the treaty provisions, the title to an amount of land equal to ten thousand acres or more, lying between the two boundaries, was divested from the proprietors under the grants, and vested in British subjects; and it is to indemnify the proprietors for these lands taken by the sovereign power for a public use that the committee recommend the passage of the accompanying bill of relief.

In the year 1833, in consequence of the disagreement as to the boundary, it was arranged between the two governments, as appears from the diplomatic correspondence, that both governments should suspend the exercise of jurisdiction over the disputed territory (which included these lands) until a final adjustment of the controversy. This diplomatic understanding was adhered to until the convention of 1842 composed the troubles, with the exception that the authorities of Maine, in 1839, interfered by force to protect the valuable timber forests from depredations. During the period of suspended jurisdiction, principally from 1832 to 1839, and while the owners were powerless to protect their rights and interests, these lands were settled upon and the valuable growth of timber thereon removed by the subjects of Great Britain from the contiguous province. Under the operation of the fourth article of the treaty of 1842, these "squatters," who had been in actual possession for six years before the date of the treaty, were confirmed in their titles, to the exclusion of the proprietors, whose title was derived under their grants. Judicial determinations fully establish this construction, and give effect to it. (See Little vs. Watson, 32 Maine R., 214.)

The obligation of the Government to make this indemnity seems too clear for discussion, and is confessed by abundant precedent. In recognition of this obligation the Federal Government, by express provision of the treaty, allowed to the States of Maine and Massachusetts $300,000 for their public lands within the territorial cession.

By the act of July 12, 1862, Congress admitted and satisfied claims made for lands of individuals owners which fell within the jurisdiction of the United States upon the reconstruction of boundaries, but which the proprietors were dispossessed of under the fourth article of the treaty, and the title thereto vested in British subjects. The lands specified in this bill constituted a portion of the townships granted by Massachusetts, which, at the date of the grants, were indisputably a part of her public domain. By the establishment of the conventional line of 1842, a section of these townships remained, as before, within the Federal jurisdiction, and a section was transferred to the British Crown. As to the whole, the American owners were dispossessed. For the part which fell within the jurisdiction, the Federal Government, acknowledging its liability, has made compensation. For the part which passed to the foreign jurisdiction, the bill under consideration proposes indemnity. The right to compensation in the two cases seems identical. It is pertinent to recall that a pecuniary compensation was made to the States of Maine and Massachusetts for their public lands so transferred to the British government; and of the lands so paid for by the Federal Government, a part occupied the same relative position as those covered by the provisions of this bill. Surely, the right of the private proprietor to compensation should not be held less than the right of the State.

Exhaustive reports upon the various claims of this class, arising out of the treaty of 1842, have been submitted by committees of both branches of Congress, in former years, with concurrent unanimity sustaining their justice and validity. We refer particularly to reports—

In the Senate:

By Mr. Wade, third session Thirty-fourth Congress, (Report No. 323.)
By Mr. Clark, first session Thirty-fifth Congress, (Report No. 168.)

In the House:

By Mr. Maynard, first session Thirty-fifth Congress, (Report No. 394.)
By Mr. Walton, second session Thirty-seventh Congress, (Report No. 72.)
By Mr. DUNNELL, first session Forty-third Congress, (Report No. 386.)

The bill reported favorably from the Committee of Claims of the last House of Representatives passed the House, but failed to secure action in the Senate.

The States of Maine and Massachusetts have each taken action in aid of the claimants, urging the justice of the claim upon the attention of the Government. The governor and council of Maine, in 1869, in execution of a resolution of the Legislature, investigated the subject, and found that the territory in question embraced 10,718 acres and 137 rods, and its average value $3 an acre. The act of July 12, 1862, allowed compensation for contiguous lands of no greater value, inclusive of damage for timber removals while the exercise of jurisdiction was suspended, at the rate of $4 per acre.

The amendments reported by the Committee on Claims were in line 14, after the word "made" to insert "for said land and timber;" in line 17, after the word "appropriated" to insert the words "and timber when taken;" in line 20, after the word "appropriated" to insert the words "and the timber so taken;" and in line 22, after the word "appropriated" to insert the words "and the timber taken."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

RICHMOND FEMALE INSTITUTE.

Mr. WITHERS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill for the relief of the Richmond Female Institute, of Richmond, Virginia.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 780) for the relief of the Richmond Female Institute, of Richmond, Virginia, was read the second time and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to the treasurer of the Richmond Female Institute, of the city of Richmond, Virginia, $4,933.33, in full payment and satisfaction for the rent, use, and occupation of its buildings by the Army of the United States from October 1, 1865, to October 10, 1866, all claims for injuries or damages being satisfied by the acceptance of this sum.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ACCOMMODATIONS FOR CONGRESSIONAL LIBRARY.

Mr. MORRILL. I am instructed by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1235) to authorize the taking of certain parcels of land for the Congressional Library, and for other purposes, to report it back, and I ask for its present consideration.

The bill was read for information.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President, I should like to call the attention of the Senate to the provisions of this bill. It is a proposition to condemn land directly east of the Capitol, taking one tier of lots directly beyond the present limits of the Capitol. If Senators will look at the Congressional Directory they will see the boundaries of it are between B street north, B street south, and Second street east; that is to say, two whole squares on each side of East Capitol street, and the four triangular squares, with all the streets and avenues by which we would obtain more land in the avenues and streets than that which we shall be called upon to pay for in the several parcels or lots.

The bill is for the purpose of extending these grounds so as to furnish accommodation for the Congressional Library, and also at some future time for another large building, probably for the national museum. It will be obvious to any who have investigated the subject that this whole Capitol would not be more than sufficient to contain the books that will be accumulated in the Congressional Library in fifty or a hundred years hence, and it is almost indispensable that some action should be taken immediately for providing larger room for our national Congressional Library. I suppose there are at this moment not less than between fifty and sixty thousand volumes that are lying loose around on the floor and subject to great damage annually because it is not possible to have them shelved. I am aware that there is a diversity of opinion as to the location of the public library. It was suggested at one time that it should be moved down where the Botanic Garden now is, but upon investigation that is found to be a kind of foundation that would require to be piled. Whenever there is a large freshet the water runs into the doors of our conservatories there now, and it is a wholly unsuitable place for such a building. Besides, it would be destructive of the great park that now exists between here and the White House. Then, again, it has been suggested that it should be placed upon one side or the other of the Capitol; but any one can see at once, if it should be so placed, one end of the building would be three or four stories high, while the other would be but two or three. It would be like a Swiss cottage set upon the mountains, and therefore it would not be in that symmetry of form that is necessary for a public library.

Again, it has been suggested that the building should be upon Judiciary Square. The site where the present court-house is, is the finest one remaining in the hands of the United States at the present moment. It is a very beautiful site, but I hardly think that members of Congress of either House would be in favor of the removal of the library to so distant a spot, whereas if it is located where it has been proposed by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds it would be more accessible; and the rooms that we now have in the Capitol would also be maintained to preserve what might be called a working library, containing chiefly all the books that would be required by members of Congress and their families for immediate use. If this building should be located at the point indicated, just beyond the present boundaries of the Capitol grounds, of course it would be connected with the Capitol by a pneumatic tube and a book could be obtained or returned in two or three minutes.

This bill does not propose to appropriate money for the purchase of these lands, but it proposes that they shall be condemned by the 1st of January, 1878, and a report thereon made to Congress, and then that an appropriation shall be made therefor. I may say that now is a most opportune time for condemning any lands in the city of Washington. Never, perhaps, have they been so depressed in price as at the present moment. I know of parties who own a considerable number of lots here who would sell them at an immense sacrifice in order to be rid of them. I am sure that we should promote the public interest by securing the condemnation of these lands now. They are inevitably to be taken by the United States, and there never can be a better moment to do it than at the present time. I know that it has been sometimes proposed that we should extend the front on the west side, but according to the opinions of all the architects and artists who have been consulted in relation to the matter that could not be extended more than thirty feet without great mutilation of the plan of the Capitol. Then it has been proposed that we should extend it on the east side; but a building extended upon the east side, of this Grecian style of architecture, would be wholly incongruous; it would be making a cross, which would be unsuitable for a Government building, and ruin the beautiful facade that now presents itself to the eyes of all observers. Besides destroying the beauty of this magnificent Capitol, it would utterly mutilate the Capitol grounds which we have recently taken so much pains, at so much cost, to extend and beautify.

I hope, therefore, that the bill will receive the approbation I could wish, the unanimous approbation of the Senate. I am told that such a bill as this can pass the House, but that a bill appropriating money cannot pass the House. I therefore urge it upon the attention of the Senate at this time.

Mr. DAVIS. I should like to ask the Senator who has just addressed the Senate if he has made an estimate as to the probable cost (I know it can only be the probable cost) of the grounds and buildings proposed to be purchased? I will inquire as to the grounds taken separately.

Mr. MORRILL. I have not ascertained, so far as this ground is concerned, what it would cost, and have been unable to ascertain, but I know that it can be obtained at a very low price. As I have already stated, the avenues and streets form a larger portion of the ground than what we should be compelled to buy. A building placed in the centre of the left-hand side for a library would not need to occupy all, but yet it would present a very fine site for that building, leaving enough for a national museum; and I have no doubt, whenever the treasures that we now have on hand shall be displayed, and that within five years, or ten at the outside, we shall be compelled to build a national museum that will compete with anything there is in the world.

Mr. WITHERS. I understand, then, that the bill only contemplates the condemnation of this land.

Mr. MORRILL. That is all.

Mr. WITHERS. Before any appropriation is to be made, the value of the land will have to be reported to the Senate, and Congress will have an opportunity to pass upon it before the condemnation can be confirmed.

Mr. MORRILL. Yes, sir; that is all there is in the bill.

Mr. DAVIS. I understand that the award that may be made must be reported to Congress for its action; but at the same time before we enter upon an enlarged expenditure it would be well to know the probable cost. The Senator speaks of a national museum. I believe within a day or two we passed a bill appropriating $250,000 for a national museum, or something bordering on to that, to be attached to the Smithsonian Institution. I believe I am correct in that view.

Mr. MORRILL. Yes, sir.

Mr. DAVIS. Is it contemplated that both of these buildings will be necessary?

Mr. MORRILL. I will say to my friend from West Virginia that it is expected that the appropriation that we make now for the building on the Smithsonian grounds will last for some years; it will cover between two and three acres; but that is to be a very cheap building. Whenever we do build a national museum we shall have to build one that will be creditable to the Government, and of course it would cost somewhere probably between one and two million dollars or thereabouts.

Mr. DAVIS. I am disposed to be somewhat liberal in public buildings, especially where they are put up to last, and are not to be temporary. I do not want to do anything that would prevent a proper improvement around and about this city connected with public buildings. I believe this is always to be the capital of this country, and, believing that, I of course would feel a natural interest that whatever is done should be done on a scale that would be worthy of the country. Yet in entering upon an improvement I think we ought to have an approximation to the amount involved before we start. I regret somewhat that the Senator having charge of this bill cannot give some idea of the probable cost of the ground, for that is the first move, and we are now called upon to pass a bill to condemn ground for this purpose.

Mr. MORRILL. I can only say to the Senator from West Virginia that only a small part of this ground is covered by buildings. I agree with him that we ought to do whatever we do in a way that would be creditable to the Government. I will say that so far as the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds are concerned they have been extremely watchful in relation to these matters. I am aware that the Treasury building is partly built of granite and partly of sandstone; so is the Patent Office. The Capitol is built partly of sandstone and partly of marble. Two buildings, the Interior Department and the Post Office Department, are absolutely ruined in point of good taste by having no grounds round about them, no proper site. The object of this bill is to guard in season and to obtain a proper site for the Library. I have no doubt that those who will come here after us will secure this land at whatever cost. I believe that it can be done now cheaper than it can ever be done again. It is for that purpose, and that only, and because of the immediate necessity of a public library, that the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds have felt called upon to act in relation to this matter.

Mr. HOWE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair reminds Senators that the discussion is a little premature. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Vermont, that the Senate proceed to the consideration of this bill.

Mr. HOWE. I only rise to second it.

Mr. SARGENT. Cannot the question be taken without debate?

Mr. HOWE. I only rose to second the motion.

Mr. WINDOM. I wish to notify the Senate that the sundry civil bill is here and we are ready to proceed with it.

Mr. HOWE. Let us take the vote.

Mr. WINDOM. If a vote can be had without debate, I will wait.

Mr. MORRILL. I think there is no disposition to have further debate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Vermont, to proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 1235.

Mr. STEVENSON. I hope that will not be done. This bill must be discussed before it can be passed. I shall make my protest against Congress entering upon a blind contract for the purchase of grounds when the gentleman from Vermont cannot tell us even the estimated cost. If we passed the bill, these men would put up that ground to any price they pleased. Condemn it by the supreme court of the District, and you are compelled to take it. I protest against any such wild extravagant expenditure as that. This bill cannot get through without discussion, and I hope we shall go on with the regular business.

Mr. MORRILL. If the sundry civil bill is ready I feel bound not to be in the way. I withdraw my motion for the present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion to proceed to the consideration of the bill is withdrawn.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BLAINE, from the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 4691) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes, reported it back with an amendment in the nature of a substitute for the entire bill.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WINDOM. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 4680) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. WINDOM. It has been utterly impossible since the bill has been prepared to make an abstract so as to present briefly the action of the Committee on Appropriations in their amendments, and the committee will endeavor to explain them as the bill progresses. I move the application of the five-minute rule to the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. MITCHELL in the chair.) The Senator from Minnesota moves that the five-minute rule apply in the consideration of this bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no objection, the Senate will consider the amendments in their order as reported from the Committee on Appropriations. The Clerk will report the first amendment.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in line 28, after the word "dollars" to insert the words "for the supreme court of the District of Columbia, $3,000;" in line 41, after the word "States" to strike out the words "or in the Court of Claims of the United States," and in line 46, after the word "shall" to strike out the word "not" and insert "only;" so as to read:

For printing and binding for the State Department, $15,000; for the Treasury Department, $180,000; for the War Department, $72,000; for the Navy Department, $39,000; for the Interior Department, $135,000; for the Agricultural Department, $9,000; for the Department of Justice, $6,000; for the Post-Office, $105,000; for the Congressional Library, $15,000; for the Supreme Court of the United States, $20,000; for the supreme court of the District of Columbia, $3,000; for the Court of Claims, $10,000; and for printing and binding for Congress, including the proceedings and debates of Congress, $694,000; and of the sums hereby appropriated for the several Departments, the courts, and for printing and binding for Congress, including the proceedings and debates of Congress, there shall only be used for the several purposes herein provided the sums specified, and the unexpended balances shall not be used for any other purposes; and there shall be taxed against the losing party in each and every cause pending in the Supreme Court of the United States the cost of printing the record in such case, which shall be collected, except when the judgment is against the United States, by the clerks of said courts respectively, and paid into the Treasury of the United States; but this shall only apply to records printed after the 1st of October next.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was after line 47 to insert:

For printing and binding for the Library of Congress, $12,000; to be available immediately: Provided, That in the expenditure of the appropriations for public printing and binding herein made the Public Printer shall not pay any greater price than fifty-five cents per one thousand ems for composition, and forty-six cents per hour during a legal day's work to printers and binders.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out from line 54 to line 65, inclusive, in the following words:

That all public documents already printed or ordered to be printed by the present Congress shall be credited to the present members of said Congress and delegates, and subject to their order for the period of nine months after the expiration of their terms as members and delegates; and that public documents already printed or ordered to be printed may pass through the mails upon the frank of members and delegates of the present Congress, in compliance with laws now in force regarding transmission of public documents through the mails, during the said period of nine months after their terms as members and delegates.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

That all public documents already printed or which have been ordered to be printed by the present Congress shall be distributed among Senators in accordance with the usage of the Senate, and among the Representatives and Delegates of the said Congress, and subject to their respective orders, until the 1st day of January next; and that such of these documents as cannot under existing laws be transmitted through the mails free of postage may be so transmitted under the frank of such Senators, Representatives, and Delegates until the 1st day of January next, subject to such regulations as the Postmaster-General may prescribe; and all public documents which may be transmitted through the mails free of postage may be sent from the document and folding rooms of the two Houses of Congress, free of postage, to such Senators, Representatives, and Delegates until the 1st day of January next.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was under the head of "judiciary," in line 143, to increase the appropriation for defraying the expenses of the Supreme Court and circuit and district courts of the United States, including the District of Columbia, and also for jurors and witnesses' expenses, &c., from $2,500,000 to $2,800,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 158, to increase the appropriation for payment of the necessary expenses incurred in defending suits against the Secretary of the Treasury or his agents for the seizure of captured or abandoned property, and for the examination of witnesses, &c., from $25,000 to $40,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 193, after the word "seventy-five" to insert the words "and thereafter;" so as to read:

That the Secretary of the Treasury shall reserve of any of the revenues of the District of Columbia not required for the actual current expenses of schools, the police, and fire department, a sum sufficient to meet the interest accruing on the 3.65 bonds of the District during the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1877, and thereafter, and apply the same to that purpose; and in case there shall not be a sufficient sum of said revenues in the Treasury of the United States at such time as said interest may be due, then the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to advance, from any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, a sum sufficient to pay said interest; and the same shall be re-imbursed to the Treasury of the United States from time to time as said revenues may be paid into said Treasury, until the full amount shall have been refunded.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was after line 202, to insert:

To pay on behalf of the United States, as a portion of the general expenses of the District of Columbia, to be expended by the commissioners of said District, to be drawn only as needed, for immediate use, $500,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was after line 207, to insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be authorized and directed to advance to the commissioners of the District of Columbia $75,000 for support of the public schools of the District, to be available immediately; and said commissioners shall refund the amount so advanced out of any revenues of the District for the current fiscal year not required for its actual expenses.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was after line 228, to insert:

To pay Selmar Seibert for report of Court of Claims, May 1, 1860, $731.83.

Mr. SARGENT. Should not the word "for" be "per?"

Mr. WINDOM. It ought to be "per report of Court of Claims."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be so modified by unanimous consent.

The amendment, as modified, was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out the following clause after line 248:

That all sums herein appropriated, or that may be hereafter appropriated, for the support, in whole or in part, of any asylum, charitable or reformatory institution, or society in the District of Columbia, shall be expended under the authority and control of the commissioners of said District, who shall have power to make such regulations in respect thereto as they may deem expedient.

Mr. STEVENSON. I should like to ask why that is stricken out. Is there no head to direct these institutions? It seems to me the provision is a very proper one. Why should it be stricken out?

Mr. WINDOM. It was stricken out because the committee believed (and they wish to submit that question to the Senate) that it was inexpedient to place all these various benevolent institutions, such as the Deaf and Dumb Asylum and the Insane Asylum under the control of the local authorities of the District of Columbia. They are supported by the Government and should be under the control of the Government. Their accounts are settled by the accounting officers of the Government, and this is an innovation which the committee thought ought not to be made without more consideration than we were able to give it.

Mr. STEVENSON. Then the amendment ought to go a little further. Before that I see a provision that no indigent person can be received into one of these institutions, except upon executive order. What executive order? These commissioners, or who?

Mr. SARGENT. The Senator will observe that one-half the expense of indigent persons who may hereafter be admitted to the insane hospital from the District of Columbia, is to be paid from the treasury of the District, and as we require them to pay one-half, we also allow their authorities to have patients admitted; but the insane there are partly from the Army of United States, and from the naval service. The general purposes of the institution are quite broad; but we allow a certain number of indigent insane of the District to be admitted on executive order from the authorities of the District.

Mr. STEVENSON. It seems to me, if we have commissioners here whom we pay—gentlemen of high character, and whose business it is to supervise everything—that they ought to have some say in this matter. I think they ought to have control over all these institutions. I know of none of the States in which they have not some regular head to whom all such institutions look; and they have superintendents who report to him. I have great confidence in the gentlemen who are the commissioners of the District, and I cannot see why they should not have power in these matters. If there be any improper government in any of these institutions, to whom is appeal to be made except to these commissioners?

Mr. WINDOM. I will ask the Senator from Kentucky if he really believes that institutions which are supported almost exclusively by the Federal Government should be placed under the control of these local authorities?

Mr. STEVENSON. I do not think that giving them a supervising control would place them entirely under the control of the District authorities.

Mr. WINDOM. The clause which the committee have striken out gives them omnipotent control over all these institutions:

Shall be expended under the authority and control of the commissioners of said District, who shall have power to make such regulations in respect thereto as they may deem expedient.

There is absolutely no limit to the power of the commissioners in the House bill.

Mr. DAWES. I should like to call the attention of the Senator from Kentucky to the Deaf and Dumb Asylum, which has directors appointed by the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House, and all its funds are received from the Government here, and they account to the Secretary of the Interior, and the Secretary of the Interior reports to Congress. Why should the commissioners of the District have anything to do with controlling that?

Mr. STEVENSON. I did not mean that. I am very glad to hear the gentleman from Massachusetts give the explanation; it satisfies me entirely.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was under the head of "Columbia Institution for the Deaf and Dumb" in line 268, after the word "and" to strike out the word "forty-eight," and insert "fifty-eight;" so as to read:

For the support of the institution, including salaries and incidental expenses, the maintenance of the beneficiaries of the United States, and $500 for the books and illustrative apparatus, $48,000. And the accounting officers of the Treasury are hereby authorized, in the settlement of the accounts of the disbursing agent for the said institution, to give credit for voucher No. 5 in the first quarter of 1876, and for vouchers Nos. 41 and 48 in the second quarter of the same year; said vouchers being receipts for moneys paid for fuel for the use of said institution, if the said accounting officers shall find that said vouchers were for expenditures made for the benefit of said institution.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 277, to increase the appropriation "for the completion of the work on the erection, furnishing, and fitting up the buildings of the institution in accordance with plans heretofore submitted, and for repairs," &c., from $40,000 to $69,524.62.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was after line 279 to insert:

For inclosure, improvement, and care of grounds, $5,000.

Mr. STEVENSON. I desire to call for some explanation of this last amendment; and the reason I do it is, that I observe in the inclosures upon public grounds here great waste of public money. I do not know who is to blame for it, but I see that some of the finest iron inclosures that would last for ages, that have cost a great deal of money, have lately been taken down, and small chains and insignificant posts put in their places, over which stock can easily get, and by which trees and ornamental shrubs are liable to destruction. This I see daily; and I understand that further improvements of the same character are in contemplation. I enter my protest against such improvement as that; and I do hope that this committee will look thoroughly into that, and see who is to blame for it.

Mr. WITHERS. I will inform my friend that the committee are of his opinion, and have made provision in this very bill prohibiting the further removal of fences.

Mr. STEVENSON. I am very glad to hear it, and thank the committee for one.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was under the head of "Columbia Hospital for Women and Lying-in Asylum," in line 285, to increase the appropriation for the support of the hospital from $16,000 to $19,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 291, under the head of "Capitol extension," to increase the appropriation for "work on the Capitol and for general care and repair thereof," from $40,000 to $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was the following items, as lines 291 to 307:

For constructing terrace-wall on Capitol grounds, in accordance with the plans of Fred. Law Olmsted, $100,000.
For walks in west park of the Capitol grounds, $20,000.
For walks in east part of the Capitol grounds, $10,000.
For coping, $25.000.
For paving court east of the Capitol, $64,000.
For paving East Capitol street, $9,000.
For four new steam-boilers, waste-water pipes, and attachments, for the Senate wing of the Capitol, $15,000.
For annual repairs of the court-house in the city of Washington, $1,000.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to accept an amendment after line 302, in these words:

And all sums appropriated for the Capitol grounds shall be immediately available.

It will strike everybody at once that unless this is done, we shall lose the best working part of the season, May and June.

Mr. WINDOM. I think there is no objection to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. After line 305, I move to insert the words:

And the Architect of the Capitol is hereby directed to dispose of the old boilers at public auction.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in line 323, after the word "gas-fitters" to insert the words "superintendent of gas;" so as to read:

For lighting the Capitol, and grounds about the same, including Botanical Garden; for gas, pay of lamp-lighters, gas-fitters, superintendent of gas, plumbers and plumbing, lamps, lamp-posts, matches, materials for the electrical battery, and repairs of all kinds, $30,000; to be expended under the direction of the Architect of the Capitol.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 330, to increase the appropriation "for survey of the public lands and private land claims" from $150,000 to $450,000.

Mr. KERNAN. I should like to inquire as to that amendment changing $150,000 to $450,000 for the surveys of the public lands. That is a very large change.

Mr. WINDOM. It is a large change from the House bill and also a large change from former appropriations for that purpose. It is a large increase of the House bill and a very large reduction on the appropriations that have heretofore been made. In past years we have appropriated about six or seven hundred thousand dollars usually for that purpose. Last year the appropriation was $325,000. The House bill now is $150,000 and we make it $450,000 by this amendment. It is still $150,000 less than the usual amount, and less, a portion of the committee thought, than ought to be appropriated, but it was all we could hope to get at this time.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHAFFEE. I ask the chairman of the committee to allow an amendment in line 351, page 15, after the word "timbered" to insert "or mountainous."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That will be in order after the amendments reported by the committee have been agreed to, but it is not in order now.

Mr. CHAFFEE. I ask the chairman to accept it.

Mr. WINDOM. It can be moved afterward.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was to strike out lines 353 to 369, in the following words:

That an accurate account shall be kept by each surveyor-general of the cost of surveying and platting every private land claim, to be reported to the General Land Office with the map of such claim; and that a patent shall not issue nor shall any copy of any such survey be furnished for any such private claim until the cost of survey and platting shall have been paid into the Treasury of the United States by the party or parties in interest in said grant, or by any other party: And provided further, That before any land granted to any railroad company by the United States shall be conveyed to such company, or any persons entitled thereto under any of the acts incorporating or relating to said company, unless such company is exempted by law from the payment of such cost, there shall first be paid into the Treasury of the United States the cost of surveying, selecting, and conveying the same by the said company or persons in interest.

Mr. STEVENSON. I should like the chairman of the committee to give me some explanation of that. I cannot very well conceive what practical objection can exist to having a regular account kept by each surveyor-general of the cost of surveying and platting every private land claim, to be reported to the General Land Office, with a map of such claim.

Mr. WEST. I will explain to the Senator from Kentucky, as a member of the committee, that those are the exact words that were incorporated in the act of last session, and they are the law of the country at the present time. The committee deemed that there was no necessity for repeating the statute over again, and struck out the words with a view, if the committee of conference should give any explanation of the matter, that they might be re-instated. But it is the law now without re-enacting it.

Mr. STEVENSON. That is entirely satisfactory, if it is the law now.

Mr. WEST. That is so now.

Mr. WINDOM. That is as the committee understand it.

Mr. STEVENSON. I think there ought to be no mistake about it, and I reserve for myself the right if, on looking into the law I find it is not as here reported, to move to re-instate these words.

Mr. WINDOM. I think the Senator will find by reading the statute of last year that this is an exact copy of it.

Mr. STEVENSON. I do not pretend to doubt. I only want information.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in line 372, to strike out after the word "the" the words "one hundred and fourth meridian of longitude west from Greenwich" and insert "twenty-seventh meridian of longitude west from Washington;" so as to read:

For survey of eastern boundary of Wyoming Territory, estimated length, one hundred and thirty-nine miles, being that part of the twenty-seventh meridian of longitude west from Washington lying between the forty-third and forty-fifth degrees of north latitude, and being the boundary between the Territories of Wyoming and Dakota, $7,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 397, to increase the appropriation "for rent of office of surveyor-general of California, fuel, books, stationery," &c., from $2,000 to $3,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 429, after the word "at" to strike out the word "ninety-eight" and insert "ninety-nine;" and in line 430, after the word "and" to strike out the words "$65,483.21" and insert "$80,000;" so as to make the clause read:

For salaries and commissions of registers of land offices and receivers of public moneys at ninety-nine land offices, $380,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 436, to increase the appropriation "for expenses of depositing money received from the sale of public lands" from $10,000 to $13,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 449, after the word "dollars" to insert:

And the unexpended balance, not exceeding $6,000, of the appropriation made by the act for sundry civil expenses for the fiscal year 1876 for the national association for the relief of the colored women and children of the District of Columbia is hereby re-appropriated and made available for said purposes; and the accounting officers of the Treasury Department are hereby authorized to allow and credit the treasurer of the national association for the relief of the colored women and children of the District of Columbia the sum of $535.75, paid for the purchase of land for the institution, and for recording a deed of the same, during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875, and to allow and credit said treasurer for payments during the same year, for proper purchases of supplies made during the year preceding, for the support of said institution, the sum of $855.12.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DORSEY. I wish to reserve that amendment.

Mr. WINDOM. The amendment should include the striking out of the words "ten thousand dollars" in line 449. It is not designed to appropriate the two sums, but by an error in the print it does so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be considered as modified in that form.

Mr. SARGENT. And the word "and" should be stricken out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be so modified.

Mr. MORRILL. So that it will read:

For the national association for the relief of the colored women and children of the District of Columbia, the unexpended balance, not exceeding $6,000, &c.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will so stand.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was after the word "subsistence," to strike out "$18,000; salaries and compensation, as follows: Of surgeon, $1,400; of one surgeon and dispensary clerk, $1,000; of engineer, $720; matron, $216; nurses and cooks, $1,800; fuel and light, $3,000; clothing, $3,500; rent of hospital buildings, $2,000; medicines and medical supplies, $2,500; and miscellaneous expenses, $1,000: in all, $35,636;" and in lieu thereof to insert "salaries and compensation, fuel and light, clothing, rent of hospital buildings, medicines and medical supplies, forage and transportation, and miscellaneous expenses, $45,000;" so as to make the clause read:

For the Freedman's Hospital and Asylum in Washington, District of Columbia, namely: For subsistence, salaries, and compensation, fuel and light, clothing, rent of hospital buildings, medicines and medical supplies, forage and transportation, and miscellaneous expenses, $45,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 486, under the head of "Smithsonian Institution" to increase the appropriation "for preservation and care of the collections of the national museum" from $13,000 to $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was after line 487 to insert:

For expenses of making up into sets for distribution to colleges and academies the duplicate ores, minerals, and objects of natural history now belonging to the United States or in the collections of the international exposition presented to it by foreign governments, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was after line 492 to insert:

For a fire-proof building for the use of the national museum, three hundred feet square, to be erected under the direction and supervision of the Regents of the Smithsonian Institution, in accordance with the plan of Maj r-General M. C. Meigs, now on file with the Joint Committee of Public Buildings and Grounds, on the southwest corner of the grounds of the Smithsonian Institution, the sum of $250,000 is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated; said building to be placed west of the Smithsonian Institution, leaving a roadway between it and the latter of not less than thirty feet, with its north front on a line parallel with the north face of the buildings of the Agricultural Department and of the Smithsonian Institution; and all expenditures for the purposes herein mentioned, not including anything for architectural plans, shall be audited by the proper officers of the Treasury Department.

Mr. SARGENT. On line 500, after the word "dollars," I move to strike out the words "is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The next amendment was after line 516, to insert in the items of appropriation for the Botanic Garden:

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was after line 543, to insert for the subtreasury and post-office at Boston:

For continuation of building, $100,00.

Mr. DAWES. I desire to add an amendment there to make the sum immediately available.

Mr. WINDOM. There is no objection to that.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 546, to increase the appropriation for continuation of custom-house and post-office building at Cincinnati, Ohio, from $400,000 to $500,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was after line 576 to insert:

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was after line 608 to insert:

For a suitable building, with fire-proof vault extending to each story, at Utica, New York, for the accommodation of the post-office, United States circuit and district courts, and internal-revenue offices, to be erected upon the site purchased by the United States under the act of May 31, 1872, the sum of $100,000, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall cause proper plans and estimates to be made, so that no expenditure shall be made or authorized for the full completion of said building beyond the sum of $225,000.

Mr. WHYTE. I have made no objection to the increased appropriations proposed by the committee on the part of the Senate for the completion of public buildings now being erected; but I observe that this amendment and the two succeeding amendments contemplate the commencement of new buildings and therefore they are but wedges for new expenditures, and I hope the Senate will not agree to them. Any buildings that are now under or in the course of erection, I think it proper that the appropriation should be made to continue; but I do not think at this time we ought to commence new public buildings, and therefore I hope these amendments will not be agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to say to the Senator from Maryland, as I think he was not present when this matter was considered in the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, that an expenditure has already been made at Utica in relation to this building of a considerable amount four years ago, and it is the same in relation to Topeka, only not so long ago. The site was authorized to be purchased, but there was no appropriation made for the building.

Mr. DAVIS. Do I understand the Senator from Vermont that the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds recommend this appropriation?

Mr. MORRILL. They do.

Mr. CONKLING. Perhaps it is unnecessary, but I beg to say one word about this matter. I shall claim the support of the Senator from Maryland with some confidence after hearing me as I understand this amendment to be exactly in the line of his conviction in this regard.

A site was purchased for this building. There was an unexpended balance, which under the statute, with which the Senate is familiar, was covered back into the Treasury. The time has come when there is no post-office, no internal-revenue accommodation, no accommodation for the judges. I have here letters sent to me by the marshal of the district, appealing to me to know what he can do to get chambers for the United States circuit judge and circuit court, he being a resident there. The time has come when absolutely from necessity the Government must either rent here or there expensively, as will be the case, and at the same time lose the interest and the use of the site which has been purchased, or that site must be utilized. In other words, to state it briefly, this is a work of absolute necessity, to complete a building ordered long ago, and in a very clear case, which building has been in abeyance for the want of an appropriation although the site has been paid for, and the public service is absolutely suffering for lack of accommodations of any sort whatever.

The building now occupied as a post-office, for reasons which I will not detain the Senate by stating, is no longer available. The post-office must be moved; it must go somewhere. It is a very large and important office, this being the geographical center of the State. This is believed to be by everybody, I think, whose attention has been given to it, altogether the economical and judicious mode of carrying on the public service; and therefore, as the Senator from Maryland has said, under the principle which he lays down, it seems to me that this is one of the excepted cases.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was after line 620, to insert:

For a suitable building, with fire-proof vault extending to each story, at the city of Topeka, Kansas, for the accommodation of the United States circuit and district courts, post-office, pension agency, land offices, and other Government offices in said city, to be erected upon the site purchased by the United States under the act of March 3, 1875, the sum of $50,000; to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall cause proper plans and estimates to be made, so that no expenditure shall be made or authorized for the full completion of said building beyond the amount of $225,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was after line 633, to insert:

For a suitable building, with fire-proof vault extending to each story, at the city of Harrisburgh, Pennsylvania, for the accommodation of the post-office and other Government offices in said city, to be erected upon the site purchased by the United States under the act of March 3, 1875, the sum of $50,000; to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall cause proper plans and estimates to be made, so that no expenditure shall be made or authorized for the full completion of said building beyond the amount of $300,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 675, to increase the appropriation for supplies of light-houses on the Atlantic, Gulf, Lake, and Pacific coasts from $50,000 to $80,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 685, to increase the appropriation for maintenance of lights on the Mississippi, Ohio, and Missouri Rivers, and such buoys as may be necessary, from $125,000 to $150,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 702, to increase the appropriation for commencing the construction of a light-house at Staunard's Rock, Lake Superior, Michigan, from $25,000 to $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was under the head of "Bureau of Engraving and Printing," in line 743, after the word "Department" to strike out the words "And provided further, That it can be done as cheaply, as perfectly, and as safely;" so as to read:

For labor and expenses of engraving and printing, namely: For labor, (by the day, piece, or contract,) including labor of workmen skilled in engraving, transferring, plate printing, and other specialties necessary for carrying on the work of engraving and printing notes, bonds, and other securities of the United States, the pay for such labor to be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury at rates not exceeding the rates usually paid for such work; and for other expenses of engraving and printing notes, bonds, and other securities of the United States; for paper for notes, bonds, and other securities of the United States, including mill expenses, boxing, and transportation; for materials other than paper required in the work of engraving and printing; for purchase of engravers' tools, dies, rolls, and plates, and for machinery and repairs of the same, and for expenses of operating macerating machines for the destruction of the United States notes, bonds, national-bank notes, and other obligations of the United States authorized to be destroyed, $800,000: Provided, The work be performed at the Treasury Department.

Mr. KERNAN. I should like to inquire why that clause is proposed to be stricken out. It seems to me it is a very reasonable provision that the work shall not be done in the Government establishment unless it can be done there as cheaply and as well as elsewhere.

Mr. WINDOM. The clause was stricken out for two reasons. One is that the words "provided that it can be done as cheaply, as perfectly, and as safely" seem to render the entire provision nugatory, leaving the discretion wholly to decide whether it can be done complying with all these conditions. The other reason is that in the judgment of the committee this work ought to be done in the Department. The question is submitted to the Senate. We have stricken out that clause in order that their attention may be called to it. We believe the work ought to be done in the Department, and if not, that there ought to be some provision better than that in order to give any authority or any direction by which it should go anywhere else, if that be desirable.

Mr. SARGENT. I should like to ask the chairman whether any contracts are now existing? There may be contracts now existing there which this would violate.

Mr. WINDOM. I am not aware of any; but if there were, the proviso which we strike out would not help it.

Mr. SARGENT. But ought we not to add words which would protect existing contracts if they exist?

Mr. WINDOM. I am not aware of any, but the words we strike out would not protect them.

Mr. SARGENT. I am aware of that; but as a matter of precaution, would it not be well to provide for the protection of any existing contracts?

Mr. WINDOM. I am informed by the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. BOUTWELL,] who knows better than any one of us about what the facts are, that probably there are no contracts without former appropriations to meet them.

Mr. WEST. If there are the subject is now within the jurisdiction of the committee of conference.

Mr. KERNAN. The Senator from Massachusetts has had experience, and I should like to inquire whether he believes we should keep building up larger and larger this printing bureau. It is becoming a very extraordinary Government business.

Mr. BOUTWELL. As I am appealed to, I will say that I have no doubt the work can be better done and more economically performed by the Government when you consider the quality of the work than it could be obtained of outside parties; but, on the other hand, the public may think that there is better security by having one imprint upon every security made by an outside party. As a matter of fact, there probably is no additional security obtained in that way. I should myself rather prefer to leave it with the Secretary of the Treasury to decide from time to time what portion, if any, of the work should be done by other parties and what done by the Government directly. My experience leads to the conclusion that the work done by the Government is better work, and that is all-important in engraving and printing the public securities.

Mr. BLAINE. I understand that some of this work has been contracted for. I do not know whether that is so or not, but it will do no harm to put in a proviso that all contracts made shall be carried out. I move that amendment.

Mr. WEST. Make it "except in cases where contracts exist."

Mr. BLAINE. I move this amendment:

Provided, further, That all contracts already made shall be faithfully carried out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Maine to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was to strike out lines 747 to 763 in the following words:

Survey of the Atlantic, Pacific, and Gulf coasts: For every purpose and object necessary for and incident to the continuation of the survey of the Atlantic and Gulf coasts and the western coast of the United States and the Mississippi River to the head of ship navigation, with soundings and observations of deep-sea temperatures in the Gulf Stream and the Gulf of Mexico, and observations of currents along the same coasts, the continuation of the survey of the Pacific coasts of the United States, with soundings and observations of deep-sea temperatures in the branch of the Japan Stream off, and observations of other currents along, the same coasts, and the preparation, engraving, lithographing, and issuing of charts, the preparation and publication of the Coast Pilot and other results of the coast survey, the purchase of materials therefor, and including compensation of civilians engaged in the work, and pay and subsistence of engineers for the steamers engaged on those coasts, $350,000.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was after line 871, to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That of any appropriations for the service of the United States Fish Commission a sum not to exceed $1,000 per annum be allowed for rent and other necessary office expenses, beginning with the 1st day of January, 1876.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 889, to increase the appropriation "for heating, ventilating, and hoisting apparatus, and repairs of same, for all public buildings under control of the Treasury Department" from $50,000 to $100,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 898, to increase the appropriation "for photographing, engraving, and printing plans for all public buildings under control of the Treasury Department" from $1,000 to $3,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was after line 948, to insert:

For experiments in testing iron, steel, and other metals, with a view to ascertain their strength and value and to determine their constitution and characteristics, $40,000. And the board authorized by section 4 of the act "making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1875, is hereby continued for this purpose for the next fiscal year.

Mr. STEVENSON. I should like to ask what use there is in that. I believe this has been done for a great many years. I have received a great many letters from my constituents asking for information, and I have been unable to furnish them with any relative to the results of such appropriations. I should like to have a little information for their benefit.

Mr. WINDOM. I think this board has not been in existence very many years.

Mr. STEVENSON. Three or four years, I think.

Mr. WINDOM. The last appropriation enabled them to prepare a very expensive machine for the purpose of testing iron and steel. That machine was only prepared very recently, and the tests have not been made. We suspended the appropriation about the time we got ready to make the tests. Certain inferior modes had been used. I will say to the Senator in reference to the advantages of this that we have very voluminous letters on the subject, from officers of the Army and various other interests not connected with or interested directly in this thing at all, showing that it is of very great value, especially to the iron and steel interests and all the interests growing out of the manufacture of these materials. The committee were thoroughly convinced of its value.

Mr. STEVENSON. Where is this test proposed to be made and how is it proposed to be made? That is to say, at what point and under what circumstances are these preparations for the testing of iron and steel?

Mr. WINDOM. At Watertown arsenal, in the State of New York, where the machine is prepared. I cannot tell the Senator how, for I am not sufficiently scientific to understand just how the tests are made.

Mr. STEVENSON. My information is that there was an appropriation three or four years ago, and while in New York on one occasion I took upon myself some trouble, at the request of some iron-founders in Louisville, to try and ascertain what was being done. I was told that these parties had been then engaged in preparations, but had been delayed. Now, I should like to know from the chairman whether any report of a practical nature has ever been had from any appropriations like this, as to testing the strength and value of iron.

Mr. WINDOM. I am informed that there have been reports, but I have not been sufficiently interested in the subject myself to read them, and cannot speak of their merit.

Mr. STEVENSON. I hope the item will not be inserted.

Mr. ANTHONY. There has been a report, and a very valuable report. This commission is rendering very excellent service in informing the country and the world of the quality of different kinds of iron and of the kinds of strain it will bear, whether lateral or vertical.

Mr. STEVENSON. May I ask the Senator from Rhode Island when this report was made and where I can find it; because I am honestly seeking information in this line. I have been seeking it for some time but have never found it.

Mr. ANTHONY. I think the report was made at this session, communicated by the President of the United States.

Mr. STEVENSON. That may be. It has been more than a year since I inquired.

Mr. ANTHONY. The results of the investigations of this commission have been very valuable indeed in deciding upon the best qualities of iron for ships, for bridges, for supports, for cables, and for various forms in which iron is used. The iron that is best for cables is not the best for pillars or supports or for the bottoms of ships. Different kinds of work require different qualities of material, and this commission detects and makes public the peculiar qualities of the different kinds of iron adapted to peculiar uses.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was after line 957 to insert:

For retracing and conspicuously marking the boundary line between the State of Arkansas and the Indian Territory, at a rate not exceeding $50 per linear mile, (estimated distance one hundred and ninety-eight miles,) in accordance with the act of March 3, 1875, $9,900; and $10 each for one hundred and ninety-eight iron boundary mile-posts, $1,980; in all, $11,880, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was after line 967 to insert:

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was after line 979 to insert:

For printing and binding the codified laws of Dakota Territory, $6,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was after line 999 to insert:

For the purchase from B. Lewis Blackford of one hundred sets of the Annals and Debates of Congress from 1789 to 1824, each set containing forty-two volumes, fifty sets for the library and the committee-rooms of the Senate and fifty sets for the library and the committee-rooms of the House of Representatives, at $1 a volume, $4,200.

For compensation of three commissioners, clerk, and stenographer, office expenses, surveying and drafting, labor, &c., as provided for in statute relating to the disposition of the Hot Springs reservation, approved ——— —, 1877, $27,500: Provided, That the sum above mentioned shall be repaid to the Treasury of the United States from the fund arising from the sale of the Hot Springs reservation.

Mr. DAVIS. I think I shall have to ask for an explanation of that. I do not see why this expenditure is to take place there. I think the Senator from Arkansas probably can explain more fully than the chairman of the committee.

Mr. WINDOM. The chairman is much obliged to the Senator from West Virginia, and is very glad to be excused.

Mr. DORSEY. We passed a bill a few days since providing for the appointment of three commissioners and requiring the commissioners to employ a clerk, and a stenographer, and engineers, and draughtsmen, to survey and lay out the Hot Springs reservation. That bill provides for the compensation of all the employés, and that that compensation and the expense of surveying is included in this item, and nothing more. It is all to be refunded from the money raised from the sale of the lands.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was after line 1020 to insert:

For Bartholdi's fountain, exhibited at the international exhibition in 1876, the sum of $6,000.

Mr. STEVENSON. I should like to have the chairman explain to me about Bartholdi's fountain.

Mr. WINDOM. I think the same suggestion made by the Senator from West Virginia might apply very well to this case, for the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] can make a better explanation than the chairman of the committee; and therefore it is referred to him.

Mr. STEVENSON. I am willing to get light from any quarter.

Mr. MORRILL. I will say to the Senator from Kentucky that Bartholdi's fountain was brought over here for exhibition at the centennial exhibition. It is a bronze fountain about thirty feet high, containing a great many figures, and is a very beautiful work of art, as I am informed. I have never seen it, but I have a picture of it here, and it appears to be a very beautiful thing. The author of the work brought it to this country after having had it made at an expense of about $12,000. Rather than take it back to France he has offered to sell it to the Government for $6,000; and those with whom I have consulted have advised that it is a very cheap article at that price, and one that the Government ought to avail itself of.

Mr. STEVENSON. It is for the purchase of the fountain, not for its exhibition?

Mr. MORRILL. No, sir.

Mr. WINDOM. I was appealed to, and I have one item of information that the Senator from Vermont has not. I have seen it, and it is a very beautiful fountain.

Mr. STEVENSON and Mr. SARGENT. Why not say "for the purchase of?"

Mr. MORRILL. It ought to say that.

Mr. WINDOM. I move to insert "for the purchase of" before "Bartholdi's."

Mr. STEVENSON. If those words had been in I should not have asked the question.

Mr. ALLISON. I think this work ought to be done by a civil engineer, and I offer an amendment to cover that point, to be added to the amendment of the committee:

Provided, That the Commissioner of the General Land Office shall enter into a contract for the execution of said survey with a competent civil engineer only.

Mr. WITHERS. Why?

Mr. ALLISON. It is a very important work; the boundary lies between the State of Colorado and the Territory of Utah.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 1336, to change the name of "Broadstreet" to "Bradstreet."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out from line 1405 to line 1420, inclusive, in the following words:

"That the sum of $375,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be appropriated to pay the amount due to mail contractors for mail service performed in the States of Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Kentucky, Louisiana, Mississippi, Missouri, North Carolina, South Carolina, Texas, Tennessee, Virginia, and West Virginia, the years 1859, 1860, 1861, and before said States respectively engaged in war against the United States; and the provisions of section 3480 of the Revised Statutes of the United States shall not be applicable to the payments herein authorized: Provided, That any such claims which have been paid by the Confederate States government shall not be again paid.

Mr. MAXEY. I hope the Senate will not agree to the amendment. The purpose of the provision as it came from the House was to pay mail contractors in the States named for services rendered anterior to the war under contract with the Post-Office Department. All these accounts are audited. Every contract for the payment of which appropriation is here made has been audited and approved by the Post-Office Department, and is only awaiting an appropriation. As I understand it the war suspended these claims but could not extinguish them. This is a debt for services performed for the United States under a contract, and it is just and fair and in my judgment it ought to be allowed. I trust the Senate will not agree to the amendment striking out this provision.

Mr. DAVIS. I fully agree with the Senator from Texas.

Mr. MAXEY. I will add, if the Senator will excuse me, what I was about to omit. Section 3480 of the Revised Statutes prohibits the officers of the Government from paying accounts which accrued prior to April 13, 1861, until the payment is authorized by a statute, and the purpose of the provision is to authorize the payment of these audited claims.

Mr. DAVIS. I fully concur with the Senator from Texas as to the justice of this claim. I take it there is no Senator here who will not acknowledge that the Government owes this money and that it is to be paid at some day, soon if not now. It ought to have been paid long since. Recollect that the labor was performed for which this money is to be appropriated sixteen or eighteen years ago, and these people have been waiting all this time without pay. I think there is no more just claim against the Government anywhere, and I hope there will be no objection to retaining the provision in the bill as it came from the House.

Mr. WINDOM. It struck me, Mr. President, and I think that was the impression of the committee, that this was quite too old a claim and quite too complicated in all its bearings to justify us in agreeing to the proposition of the House of Representatives on this subject. It contains in itself legislation which I think should be very carefully considered:

The provisions of 3480 of the Revised Statutes of the United States shall not be applicable to the payments herein authorized.

I will read the clause in the Revised Statutes which is suspended for the purpose of letting in this batch of old claims, which I have a distinct recollection have been before Congress during the last twelve or fifteen years I do not know how often.

Mr. NORWOOD. I should like to know from the Senator from Minnesota, when he thinks these claims will be any younger?

Mr. WINDOM. Before I vote for them they will be a good deal older. Section 3480 provides:

It shall be unlawful for any officer to pay any account, claim, or demand against the United States which accrued or existed prior to the 13th day of April, 1861, in favor of any person who promoted, encouraged, or in any manner sustained the late rebellion, or in favor of any person who during such rebellion was not known to be opposed thereto, and distinctly in favor of its suppression; and no pardon heretofore granted or hereafter to be granted shall authorize the payment of such account, claim, or demand, until this section is modified or repealed.

Now, Mr. President, we have recently in the history of this country heard a great deal about the intention to open up upon the Treasury the vast flood of claims that were supposed to be prevented by this section of the statutes. I regard this as simply lifting the curtain a little for the present, opening the door but a small way, a little crack to let this in; but let the door once be opened, let this act be suspended for this purpose, and I tell you, Mr. President, that the flood of claims which will pour in here was not exaggerated during the last six months by any body who spoke on the subject.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I do not think the claims provided for in this section are of the dangerous class which has been mentioned by the Senator from Minnesota. These are claims founded in every instance upon an express contract with the Government. In nearly every case the contracts have been fulfilled. The honor of the Government is at stake. The men to whom this money is due have just as good a right to look to the Government for the payment of it as the individual who holds the written promise of the Government. These claims grew out of contracts made with citizens of the South previous to the war. I ask the Senator from Minnesota what difference there is in law or in morals between a claim founded on contracts of this kind and that which arises out of the printed obligation of the Government, which may be in the hands of the same party? The services have been performed. The individuals spent their money in fulfilling these contracts. There is no pretense for saying that there have been any laches upon their part. It is true that the war intervened and prevented the fulfillment of them; but is that any plea to interpose against the payment even at this day? They are not like claims arising out of the ravages of war, as damages to property from the marching and countermarching of armies. Those are a class of claims which it is not the intention of anybody in the South to bring up here; but these claims, as I have said, arise out of express contracts with the Government; and the words proposed to be stricken out provide the money to enable the proper department of the Government to liquidate the sum due upon those contracts.

If a person in the South should hold a promissory note or the bond of the Government what would Senators say if he came here and demanded payment? Would it be pretended that because he happened to be a citizen of that section he should be refused payment, when he held the obligation of the Government? In this case he holds its contract. After having fulfilled it, years have elapsed, and no provision has been made for the payment of the money. If the claims are old, it is not the fault of those to whom the money is due. I do not think that these claims ought to be put upon the same footing with that large and dangerous class of claims to which the Senator from Minnesota has alluded.

Mr. WITHERS. I want to say a word or two in connection with this matter. It will be remembered that this provides for a class of claims which have been audited and allowed by the Government. The amount of money appropriated in this section stands to-day upon the books of the Treasury of the United States to the credit of these contractors. The service was rendered which they contracted to render; the amount of money is due them, and it is admitted to be due them by the Government. This or a similar provision has passed the Lower House three times, twice when that body was republican largely and once when it was democratic; but the payment has been stopped in the Senate. If the Senate of the United States choose to take the ground that they will repudiate the contracts of the Government and refuse to pay the amount justly due the contractors, as admitted by Government officials themselves, solely because at a period subsequent to the performance of the contracts the parties were engaged in rebellion, they have the power, I admit, to do so; but I respectfully submit that it would not be to the credit of this Government, that they would neither maintain its honor nor add to its estimation in the minds of honorable men, when this amount is due contractors for services rendered, if from any cause they refuse to pay those contractors. It makes no difference of what crime they may have been guilty subsequent to the performance of their contract, the Government is in duty bound to comply with this obligation and pay these contractors.

Mr. LOGAN. I should like to ask the Senator a question in reference to these contracts. I do not know very much about them, I am sure, but when he says the accounts were audited and these men were contractors, did they continue as contractors after that time?

Mr. WITHERS. Not that I am aware of.

Mr. STEVENSON. The services were performed before.

Mr. WITHERS. The services were performed before the war.

Mr. LOGAN. I understand that. I ask if they were in the service in which they were under contract with the Government at the time the war broke out?

Mr. WITHERS. I presume the contractors fulfilled their services for the conveyance of the mails for a certain limited time.

Mr. MAXEY. A proclamation was issued by the President preventing the carrying of the mails any further from a certain date.

Mr. LOGAN. But the Senators do not seem to understand the point, or if they do they do not answer my question. Were these contractors, whom it is proposed to pay, contractors of the Government at the time the war broke out? That is the question.

Mr. WITHERS. Some of them probably were and some of them were not.

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator says some were and some were not. Why not specify them so that we may know who is to be paid and who is not to be paid.

Mr. WITHERS. I suppose it makes very little difference as to what proportion, and I am unable to designate the exact number who had completed their contracts and those who had not at the time the war commenced; but the Postmaster-General directed that after a certain date no further contract should be recognized, and these allowances were made up to that time.

Mr. LOGAN. What I wanted to get at was this: If these men were contractors with the Government at the time, the war broke out and if they had their contracts audited prior to that time, what disposition did they make of the property of the Government at the time the rebellion began? Did they continue to keep it for the benefit of the Confederate States, or did they return it back to the Government

Mr. WITHERS. What property did they have?

Mr. LOGAN. If they were contractors they had some property of the Government in their possession.

Mr. WITHERS. The contractors for carrying the mails use their own property; they have vehicles of their own and horses of their own.

Mr. LOGAN. I beg the Senator's pardon; they had pouches and locks and all that. Did they keep them?

Mr. JOHNSTON. The postmasters were responsible for those articles.

Mr. LOGAN. I beg the Senator's pardon; that is not the case.

Mr. WITHERS. I thought the Senator asked for information.

Mr. LOGAN. I think I understand this question as well as the Senator does. The contractors had certain property of the Government. The question is, did they return that property to the Government or did they turn it over to the confederacy.

Mr. NORWOOD. The Senator says they had property. What property did they have?

Mr. LOGAN. They had that character of property.

Mr. NORWOOD. The postmasters had possession of that.

Mr. LOGAN. The postmasters had possession of it to distribute the mails and hand back to the contractor. When he is filling his contract and has the carrying of the mails the contractor has it in his possession. Did they make any attempt to return to the Government either through the postmasters or in any other way that property? That is what I ask.

Mr. WITHERS. I presume, if the Senator will permit me, that if the Government had any claim upon these contractors for the property of the Government in their possession it certainly would have asserted that claim and deducted it from the amount due by it to the contractor.

Mr. LOGAN. Yes, they would have gone down there and asserted the claim of the Government very easily! It was a very easy thing to do! I have this to say in reference to these claims, the same as any other claims coming up from men of this character, every one of the contractors employed by the Government at that time, and the Senators know it if they know anything about the records of the Post-Office Department, continued to assist the confederacy and used whatever they had in their possession from the Government for the benefit of the confederacy. The contractors and postmasters robbed the Government of every mail-pouch, and every lock, and everything connected with the mails, for the purpose of carrying on the postal service of the Confederate States, and these are the gentlemen who come forward and ask for this payment. That was the question I wanted to put to the Senators. When gentlemen come to a government the same as they would go to their neighbor and ask for a thing of this kind, let them clean their hands first.

Mr. WITHERS. The gentleman will find the property of the Government as clean in the hands of these gentlemen as he will nearer home.

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator certainly understood me. I mean in this case where gentlemen take property of the Government and use it for purposes against the Government they have no right to make a claim against the Government. That is what I mean; hence I say they should clean their hands. If they intend that the Government should pay the amount due them they should have returned to the Government everything they had; and if they went into the rebellion they should have gone into it with clean hands. I cast no reflection upon the Senator or any of his constituents; and he certainly understood it, for he is a man of very fair understanding indeed.

Mr. CLAYTON. If I understood the provision which is proposed to be stricken out, I shall vote to retain it. These services were actually performed; and there is no proposition here to pay except for services actually performed.

Mr. WITHERS. None whatever.

Mr. CLAYTON. If these services were performed before the rebellion by these mail contractors under their contracts, and the money was due them for the service, I cannot see why it should be withheld. It seems to me to be indirectly fining those men for what they afterward did in going into the rebellion. If you are going to hold men responsible pecuniarily for the rebellion, we had better make a general provision to that effect.

So far as the argument made by the Senator from Illinois is concerned, if these contractors had Government property in their possession, there is no question but what it was charged to them. The Government always holds all its officials and contractors responsible for the property that is placed in their possession. If, as the Senator intimates, this property was used for some other purpose and was not turned over to the Government, I have no doubt the Government charged those men with the value of the property in every case. But whether that be so or not, even if it were true that they used this property afterward for some other purpose, I have no doubt that the Government charged them for the use of it. I cannot see, with the light that is before me, why we should withhold from these people moneys which were due them, which were theirs, which they had the right to demand. If we can do that, then we ought to go one step farther and equalize this thing by fining every one engaged in the rebellion, because to refuse this payment would be indirectly doing that.

Mr. ALCORN. I desire to state, Mr. President, that I think the Senator from Illinois was a little broad in his statement when he asserted that all these mail carriers appropriated to themselves or for the use of the confederate government the property of the United States that was in their possession. It happens that I am able to speak understandingly of one or two cases that came under my immediate observation, one in which the mail carrier was ejected on account of his want of loyalty to the confederate government, from his position as a mail carrier, and not permitted to carry the mail at all.

These persons performed the service under the direction of the Postmaster-General. There were attempts made in some of the Southern States to suspend the carrying of the mails in those States after the secession ordinances had been passed. While not now able to lay my hand upon that order I know very well that an order was issued to them stating the fact that the Government of the United States did not recognize the ordinances of secession and requiring of the mail contractors the regular delivery of the mails. They did go on and deliver the mails, where they were not interrupted and disturbed in doing so, up to the time of the proclamation of the Postmaster-General declaring that the time had ceased when the mail should be carried by them. The contractors have no property of the Government charged to them. If they did have anything charged to them, that stands to their charge, and the account is credited simply by the amount due, less the amount of public property charged to their account. The amount has already been audited on the books and stands there to the credit of these men for work, as has already been stated, that has been performed; and is the Government now to come here and undertake to plead that because these men afterward went into the rebellion they shall not be paid.

Many of them did not go into the rebellion; many of them were loyal people; and yet they are not paid. If a rebellion should be started in any portion of the Government to-day, with equal justice might you deny to the holder of the bonds of the United States the payment of that bond because he happened to be in the rebellion. I have in my pocket now, given me by a servant of the Government before the war, two warrants amounting to about $500, that were issued but mislaid by some means and not presented; and because the time has expired, the man is denied any redress by the Government, although the paper properly certified with a seal attached is here ready to be presented.

The honorable Senator from Minnesota said that if we should now enact this provision the flood-gate would be opened and all the claims of which we have heard so much would be rushed into Congress, and the Government would be bankrupted. His idea is that there can be no just plea to the payment of the claims now because of the fear of what might be done hereafter. The honorable Senator stated that the apprehension of claims had not been magnified in the last canvass at all, that the amount had not been understated. My judgment is that in that the Senator is mistaken, and that the apprehensions of the people of the North with regard to the magnitude of the claims that might be presented by the South, even with the consent of the southern people, are greatly magnified.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. WEST in the chair.) The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. ALCORN. I move to strike out the word "and."

Mr. SPENCER. I will yield to the Senator from Mississippi five minutes of my time.

Mr. ALCORN. I only want two minutes and a half.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair accords to the Senator from Mississippi the time of the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. ALCORN. I am very much obliged to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. President, do you suppose that you would find in the Southern States a majority of the people who, for example, would be willing to pay for the slaves that were liberated? I apprehend not. Would the 850,000 people in the State of Mississippi, for example, be ready to pay the 25,000 slaveholders in that State for the property that was emancipated by reason of the proclamation of the President and the amendment to the Constitution subsequent thereto? There were only 300,000 slaveholders in all the South; and it is well known to the people who resided there that there was some degree of jealousy always felt between the two classes. There was even an "irrepressible conflict" between those who held slaves and those who did not hold them. I undertake to say that if the question were left to the Southern States themselves, to the white people alone, there could not be found a tithe of the people who would be able, ready, or willing to vote for the payment of the emancipated slaves.

Then, again, with regard to the confederate debt. It was stated that the southern people would be in favor of paying the confederate debt. Really I have maintained, and I believe correctly, that even if the confederate government had succeeded, the people of the South would have repudiated that debt. I heard it stated, again and again, before the close of the war, that they never calculated on paying that debt, and I do not believe to-day that one-tenth portion of the population, confining it to the white people of the South, would be in favor of paying that debt, if you would submit a proposition of the kind to them.

I come back again to the mail contractors and to the subject that is under discussion. From these men I have received numerous letters stating the fact that they have always been loyal, that they hold the claims against the Government of the United States, and that they never did go into the rebellion. Many of these contractors were old men, too old to go into the rebellion. Some of them continued to be loyal to the Government. I am told by my honorable friend to my right [Mr. CLAYTON] that he is acquainted with a number of cases of that character in the Southern States. I am acquainted with one or two myself. I am familiar with a case that came under my observation in which a mail contractor was stopped in his service, and the property of the Government wrested from him, because of the fact that he was himself disloyal to the confederate government; and yet he is not paid. He here is refused because of the fact that he is presumed to be disloyal, residing as it is said in a disloyal State.

Mr. BLAINE. I desire to emphasize the distinction between this claim and the large class of claims to which the Senator from Minnesota has referred. It has been alluded to by almost every gentleman who has spoken, and it ought to be kept clearly in view. It is that this has nothing whatever to do with the class of claims which has been the subject of political agitation. These are claims based upon services performed prior to the war. I suppose every Army officer and every Navy officer who went into the war on the side of the Confederate States was paid on his pay-roll up to the date of his resigning. By retaining this provision in the bill, we shall be treating the men who carried the mails precisely as officers of the Army and Navy were treated who went into the rebellion against the Government.

Mr. LOGAN. Will the Senator allow me to ask him if he can give any instance of an Army officer who went into the rebellion without having drawn his pay before he went, and who received any pay after that time?

Mr. BLAINE. I do not imagine any of them went into the rebellion without drawing their pay.

Mr. LOGAN. Some of them did.

Mr. BLAINE. I never heard of any one who made any reclamation after doing that.

Mr. SPENCER. They drew their pay up to the day when they resigned.

Mr. BLAINE. The statute quoted by the Senator from Minnesota is a very simple statute. It was founded on an apprehension as to what might be done by the Departments to keep them from going pell-mell into paying claims from the Southern States. It is no limitation upon the discretion of Congress whatever. Congress simply said, in effect, "until we pass upon these matters you shall not audit and pay them in the Departments;" that is all. Here this case is on its equities, and as I voted for it twice in another branch of Congress I do not see how very consistently I can refuse to vote for it here.

Mr. JOHNSTON. This claim does not stand on any different footing from the claims of marshals who took the census in the year 1860. The balance stood in their favor upon the books of the Treasury, and since the war, by a law of Congress, those census-takers or marshals have been paid. The claim for taking the census of 1860 stands exactly, according to my idea, upon the same footing as these mail contracts. But this is not a claim; it is a debt. It is not to be put in the category of unsettled claims which are to be adjudged and adjudicated.

Mr. WINDOM. I think I have a few minutes of my five minutes left, if I do not violate the rule. I do not wish to violate it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The present occupant of the Chair was not here when the Senator spoke last.

Mr. MORRILL. I will yield to the Senator from Minnesota two minutes of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That meets the case. The Chair will recognize the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. WINDOM. I believe I am one of the most liberal, so far as these matters are concerned, in the Senate or anywhere else, but really I have heard so much of these claims in the last eight or ten years that I am not willing to act upon them at this late day in the session without some examination. The discussion which has taken place shows that there may be a very different claim on the part of some of these men to what exists on the part of others. The argument that it is just the same as the payment of a bond does not strike me as sound; it is specious. The same argument precisely which the Senator from Mississippi has made, and which was made by the Senator from Florida, would open up every one of these claims that I referred to in the remarks made a moment ago. It is said that this is a contract, and consequently we are just as much bound as if these parties held our bond. Therefore, if you took a man's horse or cow during the rebellion, you took his property, and you are just as much bound to pay for it as if you made a contract for it.

Mr. WITHERS. There would be no contract in that case.

Mr. CLAYTON. The comparison will not apply to property taken during the war.

Mr. WINDOM. You might pay the owner of the property on the same principle exactly that you would pay the other claim, in my judgment. These claims ought to be considered by the Department; they ought to be acted upon by a committee of this body, and not brought in, as they have been, when we have not time to consider them.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is under the impression that the Senator from West Virginia has already consumed his time on this subject.

Mr. DAVIS. I think the Chair is mistaken.

Several SENATORS. Let us vote.

Mr. WHYTE. So far from this act of Congress, section 3480 of the Revised Statutes, operating against the payment of this claim, it is really in favor of the payment of the claim. It is an act which merely suspended the claims until Congress should modify the statutes. It expressly provides, not that it is to be a repudiation of these claims, but that the claims are not to be paid by any officer of the Treasury until Congress modifies this provision of law, and it is perfectly proper, right, and honorable in Congress at this time to modify the law and pay these people their claims.

Mr. WITHERS. Before the vote is taken I wish to offer a slight amendment to meet the difficulty which has been suggested by some of our friends on the other side. I know it will satisfy their minds, and nobody will have any objection to it. I would add to the clause a proviso:

Provided, That in any case where these contractors were in possession of any property belonging to the Government it shall be deducted from the amounts due them under their contracts.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. With that amendment I am unable to see the least objection to the provision as in the bill originally, and I shall support it and vote against the amendment of the committee.

Mr. LOGAN. I should like to make a suggestion to the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois has already occupied the floor, the five-minute rule prevailing.

Mr. LOGAN. I do not think I occupied the floor five minutes.

Mr. CONKLING. I have not been heard on this amendment. Am I entitled to the floor?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois says he has not consumed his time.

Mr. CONKLING. If I am entitled to the floor I should like to yield my time to the Senator from Illinois. That I believe I have the right to do.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois will proceed.

Mr. LOGAN. The rule upon which I object to this payment seems to me to be a correct one, that persons in the condition these people were in, having in their possession means by which they could advance the interest of a contending party against the Government, forfeited what rights they had to their claims under their existing contracts. I put a case to the Senator from Michigan. He says if the Government will deduct the value of the property they may have had in their hands he sees no objection to the provision. Suppose I were a Government contractor, and had some explosive material in my hands belonging to the Government, and should blow up a ship and destroy the property of the Government with it, and when my contract would expire with the Government they should pay me less the value of this torpedo which I used against the Government. Is that the principle upon which the gentleman presumes these men are entitled to receive their pay? They had in their possession the property of the Government, and used it for the Confederate States. They became contractors under the Confederate States, and used that which the Government had furnished them, as did the postmasters, in order to facilitate the postal service in the Confederate States. That is the condition of these claims; and it is a different theory from any I ever heard before in reference to the payment of claims.

While I am up I wish to say one word in reference to the remarks of the Senator from Mississippi, [Mr. ALCORN.] The Senator from Mississippi, in his peculiar manner, which is of a very friendly character, suggested that you might accuse persons of claiming to recover for the loss of slaves. The question of payment for slaves has nothing to do with this proposition, nor has the confederate debt. I say to Senators now that the confederate debt and the question of the payment for slaves are not a bugaboo to the northern people or to any persons who represent them. They are not alarmed by any such talk as that; because we understand the amendments to the Constitution about as well as other Senators, and we know that those amendments preclude any such payment. It is not necessary to throw in that argument always when a question of this kind comes before the Senate.

But I object to the payment of these claims on another ground, that if they are legitimate and proper for the Government to pay, let them be examined. Let us pass a law giving the Court of Claims a right to examine them, if you desire to do so, and suspend the statute of limitations as applicable to them, or let them be examined by a commission or a committee, or by the Department officers, and let us have a report in reference to them. It certainly would be far better than to place them upon a bill of this kind for the purpose of forcing them through in order that the bill may be signed. If it were a separate bill, it might be vetoed; but on a bill of this character, it must be signed or else the appropriations will fall. This is the character of legislation that is inaugurated for the purpose of paying claim after claim; and I do not believe there is any law for it or any justice in it.

For those reasons, in what little time I shall remain in the Senate, which is very short, I shall not agree to pay any claims of this kind unless they have been properly investigated and properly reported to the Senate by an authority having examined them to see whether or not they are a character of claim that ought to be paid, and whether each individual making his claim has a right under the law to make the claim.

Mr. SARGENT. I shall vote for the House provision for several reasons. In the first place, if I am not in error, these are audited accounts. These are accounts which the accounting officers of the Treasury have found to be due, and they would be paid if there were an appropriation, unless the provision of the Revised Statutes or the law upon which the contracts were based prevented them. They stand upon a very different basis from claims for mere destruction of property, or use of property, or damages arising from any cause. I shall vote for retaining the provision, for I think the time has come when we can well remove the obstruction to the payment of demands arising out of contracts. We are far enough removed from the war to be able to do it.

I shall vote for retaining the provision for a third reason—a reason which has a very powerful influence upon my mind. I recognize the fact that in the recent conflict through which we have passed during the last month a very considerable number of Senators and Members representing Southern States have not been carried away by passion or by prejudice and induced to violate the honor which was pledged at the time they cast their votes for the electoral tribunal, but that they stood with conservative men and with republicans from other portions of the Union in favor of carrying out in good faith the compact which at that time was made. I do not know that there is any extraordinary virtue in doing that. As a republican I should have felt bound by that law, and should have yielded a cheerful assent in case the tribunal had otherwise decided; and I believe that would have been done by all republicans. It would have been praiseworthy in the republicans to yield their assent to the consequences. I am willing to accord praise to those who have enabled the result which was there determined to be carried out. That consideration has a very powerful influence upon my mind, and I base my principal reason for voting to retain this provision upon that ground.

Mr. WITHERS. I withdraw my amendment for a reason suggested to me, and which was brought more clearly to my mind by the remarks of the gentleman who last spoke. These claims having been already audited, that is a settlement of the business. They are admitted by the Government; the accounts are due, and any charge that would probably go against these contractors has already been adjusted in the allowance of the claims.

Mr. WINDOM. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Before assigning the floor to the Senator from Minnesota the Chair would suggest that he is violating his own rule.

Mr. WINDOM. I am not rising to debate the question, but simply to remark that it is very apparent from the course of Senators here that there was either a clerical or typographical error in striking out the provision in the House bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations striking out from line 1406 to line 1420.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. I was asked a question a few minutes since by the Senator from Illinois, to which I did not reply. I wish to say here that this is a simple matter of debtor and creditor, and not a question of torpedoes; and that, while a war suspends the obligation of a contract during its continuance, it does not extinguish it. That is the only reply I wish to make.

Mr. MORRILL. At this time of night I do not propose to consume any time in the discussion of this amendment. I will only say that the only reluctance that I have to vote against this provision is because I do not know the precise amount of these claims that may be existing against the Government. The Committee on Finance have heretofore recognized the principle involved in the provision, and they have reported in favor of paying collectors of internal revenue where they could not take the test oath. That was reported year after year.

Mr. MAXEY. If the Senator will permit me, my information from members of the House is that this amount was made up from a letter of the Postmaster-General, stating officially the amount of claims audited, which amount is the amount named in the bill.

Mr. MORRILL. Therefore I regard the principle as having been settled here by the Senate and by the House years ago in favor of paying claims of this character. The deduction of the amount of property in the hands of these contractors must be very small; it cannot extend beyond the mail-bags that were used by the contractors in carrying the mail. If I were satisfied that this amount of $375,000 would liquidate the whole of the claims I should very cheerfully vote for it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment, striking out the clause.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. WINDOM. I will not ask for a division, for I am afraid I shall not have any votes.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. GEORGE M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had concurred in the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 4187) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes; that it further insisted upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the said bill, numbered 12, 13, 32, 33, 34, and 35; that it agreed to the further conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that it had appointed Mr. WILLIAM S. HOLMAN of Indiana, Mr. HIESTER CLYMER of Pennsylvania, and Mr. CHARLES FOSTER of Ohio managers at the conference on the part of the House.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. No. 256) for the relief of Herman Hulman, of Terre Haute, Indiana;

A bill (H. R. No. 1016) for the relief of Virginia E. White, of Ohio County, West Virginia;

A bill (H. R. No. 1253) granting to the State of Missouri all lands therein selected as swamp and overflowed lands;

A bill (H. R. No. 2229) for the relief of Chancy J. Poore, late a private in Battery G, First New York Light Artillery; and

A bill (H. R. No. 3117) for the relief of Colonel Frank L. Woolford, late of the First Kentucky Cavalry Volunteers, of certain disabilities.

SALE OF DESERT LANDS.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 4261) to provide for the sale of desert lands in certain States and Territories, asked a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. JOHN K. LUTTRELL of California, Mr. LA FAYETTE LANE of Oregon, and Mr. LORENZO CROUNSE of Nebraska managers at the conference on its part.

Mr. SARGENT. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments and agree to the conference asked by the House.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the committee on the part of the Senate; and Messrs. SARGENT, OGLESBY, and KELLY were appointed.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 4680) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in line 1431, after the word "of," to strike out "this" and insert "the;" and after the word "House," to insert the words "of Representatives."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out lines 1442 to 1449, in the following words:

> The accounting officers of the Treasury are hereby authorized to settle the accounts arising out of the appointment, on June 24, and July 14, 1875, by the Secretary of the Interior, of commissioners to investigate affairs at the Red Cloud agency; such accounts to be paid out of moneys appropriated for the Sioux Indians for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1876.

Mr. ALLISON. This is also a typographical error. I think this clause ought really to remain in the bill. When it was disagreed to it was disagreed to for the reason that the committee was not quite familiar with the effect of the provision.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. WEST in the chair.) Does the Chair understand that the Senator from Iowa, from the Committee on Appropriations, withdraws the amendment?

Mr. ALLISON. I have no authority to withdraw the amendment on account of the Committee on Appropriations. I was endeavoring, in a very feeble way of course, to satisfy the Senate that this amendment ought to be disagreed to. The money provided for in this item has already been paid to the parties to whom it was due; the parties have already received the money; but the Treasury officers are not able to settle the accounts with the proper officers in the Indian Bureau; and this is more for the adjustment of the accounts. The whole matter was carefully considered by the Committee on Appropriations of the House, and the Committee on Indian Affairs of the Senate have full statements from the Secretary of the Interior in reference to it. I therefore ask that this amendment of the Committee on Appropriations be disagreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments reported by the Committee on Appropriations are disposed of.

Mr. WINDOM. The committee have one or two amendments that are not printed with the bill. On page 46, after line 1102, I am instructed by the committee to offer the following:

> To protect the piers at the draw of the bridge across the Mississippi River at Rock Island, Illinois, owned by the United States, by the erection of booms, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War, $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WINDOM. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] appeals to me to allow him to offer an amendment; I will yield.

Mr. MORRILL. There was an amendment sent to the Committee on Appropriations from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, where the words "at Albany, New York" were accidentally omitted, and therefore I offer the following amendment to supply the place, to come in on page 25, after line 590:

For the custom-house, post-office, United States circuit and district courts, and internal-revenue offices at Albany, New York, on the site purchased in 1872, $100,000; and the limitation fixed by the law on this cost of the building is hereby amended and fixed at a sum not exceeding $500,000.

I desire to say that the inhabitants of Albany have paid about as much as the Government has for the site. An appropriation was made and the limit of the cost of the building at Albany, the capital of the State of New York, a city of about one hundred thousand inhabitants, was fixed at $350,000; and the act provided that it should be a fire-proof building. The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds was informed by the Secretary of the Treasury, who obtains his information from the Architect, of course, that a fire-proof building there of the size required for a post-office, custom-house, United States circuit and district court-rooms and internal-revenue offices, cannot be made for $350,000; therefore, the committee have recommended $500,000, although the Architect desired to have it fixed at $750,000. I think there will be no objection to the proposition.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WINDOM. I am instructed by the Committee on Appropriations informally to offer the following, to come in after line 1102:

To pay to the assignee of the Dominican Republic the sum of $71,486.62, rent for the occupation of the Bay and Peninsula of Samana until December 1871, by the United States as a coaling-station, pursuant to a convention between the United States and said Dominican Republic of 1869.

Mr. MORRILL. I should like to have some member of the committee explain this amendment. I have never understood that the Government of the United States were holden for this amount.

Mr. WINDOM. The Committee on Foreign Relations requested the Committee on Appropriations to act upon this matter, and believing it to be a claim that ought to be paid, the Committee on Appropriations, I believe unanimously, at least so far as they could be consulted, instructed me to report it. I think the Committee on Foreign Relations can make a more perfect explanation of it than I can, and if any of them are present I would ask them to do so. I had it explained to me to my entire satisfaction, but I have not had the papers. Perhaps the Senator from New York, who is a member of that committee, may be able to make the explanation.

Mr. CONKLING. This amendment is one which was considered very carefully and fully by the Committee on Foreign Relations, and reported favorably and referred to the Committee on Appropriations. The matter arises thus: The United States some years ago, in November 1869, by a convention with the Dominican Republic, entered into a lease of the Peninsula and Bay of Samana. I have before me the convention and the lease. I would read it, except that we are under the five minutes' rule. The Government undertook to pay for that peninsula and bay, as rent, $150,000 a year. The occupation was for two years as a coaling-station. The rent of the first year was paid in the language of the letter which lies here from the Navy Department "out of moneys under control of the State Department." When the second payment came to be made, there was no fund deemed applicable to it; and here is—I would also be glad to read it if time permitted—a letter from the Comptroller of the Treasury and other officers stating how it was that under the statutes as they stood there was no fund applicable to paying this rent at that time and no fund applicable afterward to paying it when the circumstances which I will state arose; and the Comptroller of the Treasury, Dr. Brodhead, and others thought it was the appropriate subject of a specific appropriation by Congress.

Mr. BAYARD. Under treaty stipulation?

Mr. CONKLING. Under treaty stipulation. Pending this condition of things certain citizens came forward and advanced in payment upon this lease, to save it from falling, $50,000 and something more, in gold; and before the committee were the papers authenticated by the Dominican Republic, a power of attorney, an assignment, an order, everything which they could execute to enable them at once to realize this money. It was paid by them.

In one sense this is a claim by the citizens who advanced the money upon the Government; but meanwhile these citizens said to the Dominican Republic "You must refund us." The Dominican Republic said "We would if we could. We will do everything we can to induce your Government, we having had the money, to re-imburse you." Accordingly there was sent here an agent, an envoy of some sort—I do not know how to describe him although his name and title appear here—who came and made a formal demand of this money, and the amendment is in response to that demand, the money in equity being not due to the Dominican Republic but due to the citizens of this Republic who from motives of patriotism, upon learning of the condition of things and the importance of continuing this lease and making the payment at once advanced in gold the money which made the payment. As the Committee on Foreign Relations were advised and as far as I have ever been advised in the much that I have heard on this subject, there is no escape from the fact that this is a debt due in every sense of equity and law.

I have heard it said that the President of the United States, although authorized by and with the advice and consent of the Senate to negotiate treaties, could not by proposing a convention bind the United States as by an assumpsit. I assume for the sake of the argument that that is true; but the implied assumpsit is the difficulty here. The Government of the United States occupied this bay and peninsula as a coaling station. Time after time reports came here which apprised both Houses of Congress of the fact. One of them is now in my hand. The facts were perfectly open and notorious that we were occupying all this property, and the reports stated how valuable it was. Owing to the condition of the appropriations at the time, it was deemed necessary to anticipate the ordinary time when an appropriation would be made applicable to this object. Thereupon, as volunteers in one sense, no doubt, these men stepped forward and parted with their money in gold and it paid this obligation of the Government. In technical language it was money paid for the use of the United States, and by its privity, and therefore, in legal language again, at the instance of the United States; and I can see no mode in which we who have been the tenants of this property under a treaty stipulation and a lease, and have occupied and enjoyed it, can turn around and say we will not pay the quantum vaebat or the sum nominated in the lease and in the treaty, there being as I understand no dispute whatever about the equity of the claim.

If I could say another word I would, but I do not wish to transgress the rule.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's five minutes have expired.

Mr. WHYTE. I should like to ask the Senator from New York whether the gentlemen who paid this money and now expect to get it back from the Government of the United States were not engaged as a company and corporation in making a speculation on the Dominican government; and the Government of the United States not having entered into the contract, as they supposed it would, whether they are not now seeking to be refunded what they paid in a forlorn speculation?

Mr. CONKLING. My honorable friend is referring to persons who have no sort of connection with this amendment, and no opportunity to receive anything under it. This money was advanced by citizens who had no connection whatever with San Domingo, with the Bay of Samana, with any corporation or with anything else except that as patriotic citizens they most unwisely (as I thought at the time and as I ventured to advise although it was too late) listened to the suggestions made by the commissioners who had been sent to Samana and made by other persons still nearer to the Government and under circumstances susceptible to no suspicion, they came forward to execute the contract of the Government and to protect its honor and its interest, for in both forms it was put to them, and advanced this money which was paid upon the lease and extinguished the debt of the United States; and to this day the United States has never paid one farthing. Attempts have been made heretofore, not very well directed, usually in the last hours of the session, and being everybody's business it was nobody's business, and it has fallen through. At last it came before the Committee on Foreign Relations and that committee went over it very fully and could find no answer to the plain facts of the case.

So I can assure the Senator from Maryland that there is nothing in it suggestive of the idea which he presents, although I think I can name the parties to whom he possibly refers and they are not the parties directly or indirectly that have anything to do with this claim.

Mr. MORRILL. I would not offer the least obstruction to the payment of this sum if it were equitably due from the United States, although it is well known perhaps to most of the Senators that I was very decidedly opposed to the purchase or the lease of Samana Bay. I had an impression that the only forfeiture that the United States would be liable to under any possibility was the payment of the $150,000 for the lease of that bay, and that when the treaty was not ratified by the United States we could not by any possibility become liable to any further sum. Although I have not refreshed my memory by the terms of the lease or of the treaty, that is my present impression.

Mr. CONKLING. Will my friend allow me one moment? Here is the lease specifying the terms: here is the letter from the Secretary of the Navy addressed to the President stating the precise length of occupation, the exact amount of money paid, and this deficit unquestionably exists as certified by all these papers.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. McCREERY. I call for the yeas and nays on this question. The President has the right, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to make treaties. What right he has to send commissioners to lease foreign bays and islands I do not understand.

Mr. CONKLING. The commissioners never leased it.

Mr. McCREERY. Who did lease it?

Mr. CONKLING. I will read, if my friend will allow me in his time:

Convention celebrated between the United States of America and the Dominican Republic for a lease of the bay and peninsula of Samana.

For this purpose the President of the United States has invested with full powers Mr. Raymond H. Perry, commercial agent of the United States to the Dominican Republic, and the President of the Dominican Republic has invested with full powers Mr. Manuel Maria Gautier, secretary of state of the Dominican Republic, who, after exchanging their said full powers, found in good and due form, have agreed upon, concluded, and signed the following articles:

ARTICLE I.

The Dominican Republic grants immediate possession and occupation, in the form of a lease, to the United States of America, of all the territory comprised in the peninsula and Bay of Samana, extending, &c.

I omit the boundary.

The United States shall possess and occupy the above described territory during a period of fifty years from this date, &c. * * *

ARTICLE II.

During the above-named term of occupation of the said territory the United States shall pay as an annual rent to the Dominican Republic, on the 1st day of January of each year, in Washington, D. C., or in the city of New York, the sum of $150,000 in gold coin of the United States. The Dominican Republic hereby acknowledges to have received the sum of $147,229.91 on account of the first payment under this convention.

Here are the letters from the Department showing that after the expiration of that year, for a series of months, to-wit: until December, or, exactly speaking, the last of November of that year, lacking one month of the full year, they continued to occupy and enjoy under this lease, and not until then was the possession surrendered.

Mr. BAYARD. This is the continued pro rata payment?

Mr. CONKLING. Yes, sir.

Mr. NORWOOD. I should like to ask the Senator from New York if the amount advanced was $50,000 why the amount asked for now is $71,000?

Mr. CONKLING. Being the exact amount paid, with simple interest at 7 per cent. uncompounded, although the agreement was originally that these men were to receive 10 per cent. It was thought we had no right except to allow the legal interest without rest and without compounding.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kentucky insist on his demand for the yeas and nays?

Mr. McCREERY. I do.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 34, nays 7; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Anthony, Barnum, Bayard, Blaine, Booth, Bontwell, Chaffee, Christiancy, Clayton, Conkling, Conover, Dennis, Dorsey, Eaton, Gordon, Hamlin, Harvey, Howe, Ingalls, Jones of Florida, Jones of Nevada, Kelly, Logan, McDonald, Maxey, Norwood, Oglesby, Paddock, Sargent, Spencer, West, Windom, and Withers—34.

NAYS—Messrs. Bailey, Cooper, McCreery, Morrill, Ransom, Stevenson, and Whyte—7.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Bogy, Bruce, Burnside, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Cameron of Wisconsin, Cockrell, Cragin, Davis, Dawes, Edmunds, Ferry, Frelinghuysen, Goldthwaite, Hamilton, Hereford, Hitchcock, Johnston, Kernan, McMillan, Merrimon, Mitchell, Morton, Patterson, Randolph, Robertson, Saulsbury, Sharon, Sherman, Teller, Thurman, Wadleigh, Wallace, and Wright—34.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. On page 8, after line 172, I move the following amendment from the Committee on the District of Columbia:

For the purchase of the remainder of the Peters farm, $10,000.

I desire to say that this is recommended by the Attorney-General, under whose supervision this institution, the Reform School, is; it has been favorably acted on by the Committee on the District of Columbia, and I believe it is a very meritorious and wise appropriation. I trust the Committee on Appropriations will not object to it.

Mr. WINDOM. The Committee on Appropriations had that matter referred to them and were of the opinion that it was not advisable to make the purchase now. I hope we may have a vote.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. DAVIS. I make the point of order, if the yeas and nays are called for taking up time here—or perhaps I had better move to lay it on the table.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The amendment is in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia withdraws the point of order and moves to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I hope the Senator will not press that motion.

Mr. DAVIS. If the Senator wishes to speak I will not press the motion.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I wish to say a word.

Mr. DAVIS. I withdraw the motion.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I have been for six years a member of the District Committee, and I am somewhat familiar with the appropriations which have been made in the name of charity to this District; and I believe of all the appropriations made there are none that have produced more beneficent results from a small expenditure than the appropriations which we have annually made for the Reform School. They have out there to-day a farm of one hundred and fifty acres. There are about two hundred boys kept on that farm at a very small expense. They need more land. They need more land in order to employ the boys wisely and well. They need this land particularly for other reasons. They need it in order that they may get a front upon the East Branch, so that they may obtain ice. They need it to prevent neighbors, who will interfere with the welfare of the boys; getting possession of the land. This is an appropriation to buy one hundred acres of land at $100 an acre only, a reasonable proposition; and it has been recommended for two successive years by the Department earnestly. I will read from the report of the Attorney-General on this subject very briefly. He says:

Second. Purchase of the remainder of the Peters farm. More land suitable for cultivation is necessary to enable the school to raise all the vegetables, grain, &c., required on the premises.

The greater part of the land now belonging to the school is not available for this purpose, being thin, poor, and not susceptible to much improvement through the agency of fertilizers, and therefore not suitable for the purpose of high cultivation. It is, however, available for the cultivation of fruit and grapes, and part of it for grass, which is being put down as fast as the force and means at our command will permit.

The remainder of the Peters farm adjoins the school, being part of the adjoining tract of which the school land is a part, and it is desirable to obtain it for several reasons: Because it lies adjacent to and adjoining the school, and it is desirable to prevent it from falling into the hands of persons who would not be desirable neighbors, and who might have a bad influence upon the boys; because it is well adapted to raising vegetables and the smaller fruits for the supply of the school and for sale, from which quite a revenue could be derived, besides giving the boys an opportunity of learning by experience the business of market gardening, which they could in after life follow as a useful and profitable occupation; because, if this land goes out from under the control of the trustees of the school, those who purchase it will have the right of way along the whole southern line of our present site, and if it should be occupied by persons whom it might be disadvantageous to have brought in contact with the boys, their close proximity and daily contact would be highly injurious to the good management and discipline which now obtain.

In view of these facts, we hope Congress will look favorably upon this estimate.

I believe the proposition of the amendment is meritorious, and I hope it will prevail.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I move, from the Committee on Appropriations, to insert after line 942 the following:

To pay John R. Lynch, of Mississippi, expenses in contested-election case, $500; and C. B. Darrall, of Louisiana, expenses in contested-election case, $400.

These amounts were agreed to by the Committee on Appropriations, but in the hurry of the preparation of this bill were not inserted in the print. They are recommended by the Committee on Elections in the House of Representatives.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOWE. I move an amendment, to insert after line 513:

To enable the Librarian of Congress to employ sufficient help to complete the index to the debates and documents of Congress, $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McDONALD. I offer an amendment, to insert after line 990:

Six thousand and four dollars and forty-eight cents to pay John W. Dodd & Co. for grading, paving, and curbing the sidewalk bordering the gutters on the north side of Michigan street, from the west side of the United States arsenal grounds to the east line of said grounds in the city of Indianapolis and State of Indiana.

Mr. WINDOM. I must raise the point of order that this is a private claim and not appropriate on this bill.

Mr. McDONALD. This is for work already done upon an account approved by the officer in charge of the arsenal grounds.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair decides that the point of order made by the Senator from Minnesota is well taken and that the amendment is not admissible.

Mr. OGLESBY. I offer an amendment to come in after line 532.

Mr. WINDOM. Is that reported by the Committee on Public Lands?

Mr. OGLESBY. Yes, sir.

Mr. WINDOM. I cannot make the point of order, then, but I know what it is, and before it is read I desire to say that the Committee on Appropriations considered it and rejected it with a great many other propositions that might be meritorious if we had not already too much on the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 22, after line 532, it is proposed to insert:

For the erection of monuments at the geodetic points established by the geological and geographical survey of the Rocky Mountains region, which points may be used as starting points for the surveys of the public lands, $25,000.

Mr. WHYTE. Unless we desire an extra session of Congress—I think that all these amendments are running in that direction—we had better not adopt them.

Mr. WINDOM. I think we have quite enough on the bill now.

Mr. WHYTE. There is no use in sending the bill to the other House with all these amendments.

Mr. OGLESBY. I thought I had the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois.

Mr. OGLESBY. I have been assisting the Committee on Appropriations all I could, and various other gentlemen, in getting various very proper amendments in this bill. I believe this is the first one I ever offered in the Senate in my life for an appropriation out of the national Treasury, and it is a subject that I think a good deal of. I do not know whether the Committee on Appropriations gave much attention to it or not; perhaps they did give some attention.

I have had a notion for some time that surveys continued over these desert lands are very expensive to the Government, and if they keep on from year to year the expense will continue for surveying desert lands. This amendment provides that the true meridian shall be ascertained west of the Observatory here by telegraph and by astronomical observation until the exact point is found a thousand miles or two thousand miles or any other distance west on the desert. When the exact point is found, another line is run from that, ten miles, and then by what is termed triangulation they establish points, and there put an iron monument which will stand for a thousand years, and then make another point from that without surveying. Having these prominent points over the desert, then from these iron monuments that are fixed and stand forever, if there be any timber land or mineral land or irrigable land, you can run to that land and make a survey as to that particular land without surveying the whole desert to get to it. That is all there is in it, and it is a very sensible amendment and ought to be adopted.

Mr. PADDOCK. And it is in the interest of economy.

Mr. OGLESBY. Certainly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Illinois.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. ANTHONY. I offer an amendment from the Committee on Printing which I presume the Committee on Appropriations will accept; it is to come in after line 47:

For printing the Agricultural Report for 1876, $120,000.

The Senate ordered this work to be done against my advice and remonstrance, but if it is to be done we must have the money to do it with.

Mr. WINDOM. Of course we cannot resist that. If Congress has made the order we must pay for its execution.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SPENCER. I move, on page 39, after line 48, to insert:

The above appropriations for contestants and contestees shall be immediately available.

Mr. WINDOM. This is simply making available the appropriation for the contestants and contestees of the House. There can be no objection to it.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LOGAN. I offer House bill No. 58 as an additional section to this bill; it is what is known as the bounty bill.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the amendment, but was interrupted by——

Mr. WINDOM. I raise the point of order that that is legislation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair decides——

Mr. LOGAN. Before the Chair decides I desire to appeal to my friend not to raise the point of order on this measure to-night. I notice that I was about the only one almost who refused to vote for an appropriation of $375,000 to pay mail contractors on the ground that they had performed service for the Government as it was said; and even the patriotism of gentlemen was appealed to to vote for that. My honorable friend from California gave as a reason, which was sufficient for him as a matter of course, that he voted for that on the ground that some of our friends had been patriotic in the last few days. That is according to his notion.

Mr. SARGENT. One ground.

Mr. LOGAN. One ground.

Mr. PADDOCK. A pretty fair ground, too.

Mr. LOGAN. I am not objecting to the ground, if my honorable friend from Nebraska will allow me; but, inasmuch as you put it on the ground that other gentlemen voted as the Senator from California did, and, therefore, it was patriotism, I now ask the patriotism of this Senate to allow what is due to soldiers who have certainly performed service for this Government that no man and no person can deny, who have been deprived of that which the Government owes them under the law for over ten years. They only ask that which is honestly due them. It has passed through the House of Representatives five different times, and just that many times appeals have been made to the Senate. If mail contractors must be paid and other contractors must be paid because they have performed service for the country, in God's name, I ask, why it is that the soldiers of the country should not be permitted to have the little pittance which is due to them by the laws of this land? This is the only opportunity there will be to get a vote on this measure, and I hope the Senate will allow it to be attached, as an amendment, to this bill. It is just as legitimate as many other things that have been offered and have been adopted by the Senate.

Mr. WINDOM. I ask for the ruling.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the exception taken by the Senator from Minnesota the Chair rules under Rule 29 that the amendment is not in order.

Mr. LOGAN. It is never in order for a soldier to get anything here!

Mr. CHAFFEE. I move, on page 15, line 351, after the word "timbered," to insert "or mountainous;" so as to allow $13 a mile for surveys in mountainous country the same as in timbered country. I also move to make the appropriations for the surveys of public lands available immediately.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is a distinct amendment, and the Senator will be kind enough to reserve that until the first amendment is acted on. The first amendment of the Senator from Colorado is to insert after "timbered," in line 351, the words "or mountainous."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHAFFEE. Now I offer the further amendment.

Mr. WINDOM. The motion made by the Senator from Colorado has reminded me that an error has occurred in printing the bill. The committee recommended the striking out of all after the words "private land claims" in line 345 to the end of line 352. It is a mistake in printing. I move that those words be stricken out.

The Chief Clerk read the words proposed to be stricken out, as follows:

The cost of such surveys shall not exceed $10 per mile for standard lines, (and the starting point for said survey may be established by triangulation,) $7 for township and $6 for section lines, except that the Commissioner of the General Land Office may allow for the survey of standard lines in heavily timbered or mountainous land a sum not exceeding $13 per mile.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHAFFEE. Now I move to make the appropriation for surveys of public lands available immediately, because the summer is half over before surveys can be commenced.

Mr. WINDOM. I think there can be no objection to that.

Mr. DAVIS. Do we not make regular appropriations for surveys? Last year we made appropriations, and now this appropriation for next year is to be made available at once. It is just crowding two years into one. I hope the amendment will not be pressed. I think it wrong.

Mr. PADDOCK. I hope I may be allowed to say to the Senator from West Virginia that the idea is that if the appropriation is made available immediately these surveys may be made much earlier in the season, before the commencement of the next fiscal year, and be made much more economically to the Government and much more efficiently and effectively than if delayed.

Mr. DAVIS. And then next year there will be a deficiency. They will say it was used up this year, when it belonged to next year.

Mr. WINDOM. I speak only for myself, not for the committee; but it occurs to me that it is better to commence these surveys in the spring and that the appropriations should be made immediately available every year.

Mr. PADDOCK. The whole experience of the Government leads to that conclusion.

Mr. DAVIS. Then why have a fiscal year at all? Why not, when the bills pass, let the Departments go to work at once and spend the money? We know that we passed within a few days deficiency bills amounting to one-half as much as the original appropriations. This is a step in that direction. I withdraw my objection and submit if the chairman of the committee says it is right; but it is against my judgment.

Mr. WINDOM. I am willing to take the vote upon it.

Mr. CHAFFEE. I desire to state that no surveyor can get into the field before the month of July if this amendment be not made; and in a mountainous country like Colorado the snows become so deep by the 1st of December that the contractor cannot do the work well. My object is simply to allow the surveyors to go into the field a month or two earlier. That is all there is of it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. DAVIS. I know that the Senator from Colorado made the motion, but I submitted to the chairman of the committee, and now I submit again; if the chairman of the committee desires it, then I, of course, withdraw my objection; otherwise I cannot.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. HARVEY. The amendment of the Senator from Colorado is certainly correct in this: as he stated, it is impossible for contractors to get ready and go into the field any earlier than the time he stated; and until this money is made available the surveyor-general cannot even make a contract, so that the contractors do not know who is to go into the field, and until after the 1st of July a contract cannot be made. It throws the surveys into the winter and imposes hardship upon the contractor and is of no benefit to the public.

Mr. DAVIS. I understand we pay so much a rod or mile and it does not make any difference to the Government whether it is winter or summer.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Colorado.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLAINE. I offer the following amendment, with the permission of the commitee.

That the claimants against the Great and Little Osage Indians for the alleged balence that remains of a national debt of said Osages, as fixed and limited by resolution of their national councils, passed July 26, 1873, are hereby given the right to test the legality and equity of their claims by a suit in the Court of Claims against the United States as the trustee of the funds of said Osages: Provided, That nothing shall be be paid under any judgment of said court until the assent thereafter, formally expressed, by the national councils of the said Osages.

Mr. WHYTE. This is legislation not appropriate to this bill.

Mr. BLAINE. It was referred, and the committee gave permission to offer it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would state to the Senator from Maryland that it is legislation relating to a special subject. The clause in the rule applies to general legislation.

Mr. WHYTE. That does not make any distinction, I presume, whether it is general or special legislation. The rule applies to legislation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will read the rule:

No amendment which proposes general legislation shall be received to any general appropriation bill.

If the Senator from Maryland insists on his point the Chair will submit the question to the Senate.

Mr. WHYTE. It occurs to me that this legislation.

Mr. WRIGHT. I should like to know how this claim originated and what it is for; what services have been rendered and how it is that this claim originates that we should send it into the Court of Claims by a provision on this bill?

Mr. BLAINE. It is a matter that has been a good while in dispute, and has been vexing the committees of Congress and both branches of Congress, and it will continue to do it, and possibly if it is an improper claim it will slip through some time. Now it is proposed to have it tested by the rules of evidence in the Court of Claims, and thereafter, if the Court of Claims shall give judgment in favor of it, that nothing shall be paid on it until the award is confirmed by the national council of the Indians. It is giving it two tests to run instead of having it put through Congress some time when it may not be noticed or may not be known. I do not think that any injustice can be done by this. The United States have their solicitor; the Interior Department have cognizance of it as trustee immediately for the Government; and how any harm can come of it I do not see. I think all claims that are worthy of any recognition at all ought to go there instead of pestering the halls of Congress, so that some sort of legal tests and the laws of evidence may be applied to them.

Mr. WRIGHT. Upon the same principle every single claim that is made against the Government, whether it has any foundation or not, ought to be sent to the Court of Claims. A man comes to Congress, and as soon as he gets here we should say "We will not take the trouble to look into it; just let it go to the Court of Claims and be done with it." That would be an easy way to get rid of them and put that course on the ground that the thing may some time slip through Congress.

Mr. BLAINE. I think it will be a very fortunate day when no claim shall be presented to Congress for passage. I hope to live to see the day when such a thing as a claim to be voted on by either branch of Congress will be unknown.

Mr. WRIGHT. I hope we shall watch and scrutinize every claim that gets to the Court of Claims. When claims get there they often get through the court by some means or other, and that is the end of them, because then the argument is, "Here is a judgment and the Government is bound to pay it." I should like to know something about this claim, what it is for, before I vote to send it to the Court of Claims. The language of the amendment is of such a character that I cannot tell what it is for, and I should like to have some explanation of it before I consent to have any claim go before the Court of Claims.

Mr. CONKLING. Can the Senator from Iowa tell me what would be the issue in the Court of Claims under that proposition?

Mr. WRIGHT. I do not see how we could make up any issue upon it.

Mr. BLAINE. It refers to the Osage resolution of a certain date.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Maine.

Mr. CONKLING. On the amendment or on the question of order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On the amendment. The Chair decides that it is in order.

Mr. CONKLING. In voting upon this amendment I cannot overlook a question suggested to me by the words midway the amendment as I caught them, that the Court of Claims shall ascertain whether the claim is legal or equitable, and I wish the Secretary to read those words again.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Are hereby given the right to contest the legality and equity of their claim by a suit in the Court of Claims against the United States as the trustee of the funds of said Osages.

Mr. CONKLING. Experience has taught us that when we refer a claim to the Court of Claims, that being a special tribunal which could have no jurisdiction except by an express enabling act, there goes with the reference what I think I may call a presumption or intendment that there is a claim and that the court is to proceed to see what it is and how much it is. I do not mean that the court never decides that there is no claim; I only mean that when Congress refers a specific matter to the court, the reference to it carries a certain presumption with it.

It has been thought therefore in the Senate important to guard these resolutions, the joint resolutions as they used to be, bills as more recently they have come to be, against any misapprehension on this point. It strikes me that this amendment is unusually open to the criticism heretofore made in this respect. The parties are authorized to test in the court whether legally or equitably there is a claim. It may very well be that these parties have no legal claim and yet under this the court may feel at liberty to say, "Why there is an equitable right here," and to base a judgment upon that finding. The claim in question is an old one; it has been before the committees of the Senate several times; I think once or twice before a committee of which I had the honor to be a member. My recollection is that there has never been a favorable report upon it in the Senate since I have been here. I dare not assert that positively because I am not full enough in my recollection about it, but that is my impression, and if the claim be the one which I think it is it is certainly questionable, to say the least.

As the Senator from Iowa has said, the amendment is somewhat vague in its statement, and, as I think it suggests, the Court of Claims might go pretty much at large without much regard to the rules of law and possibly without a great deal of regard to the rules of evidence if that tribunal was satisfied that equitably treated there was a claim between these parties. I suggest if it is to be done it should be made more definite in that respect. I think, as some Senators have suggested, that the concurrence of Congress specifically ought in a case of this sort to be required. Otherwise, as the Senator from Iowa says, the office of Congress in regard to it is merely perfunctory; a judgment comes here from the Court of Claims and prima facie it is right and no attention is paid to it. If this is to be done, I think there ought expressly to be a reservation requiring Congress affirmatively to approve any judgment that may be rendered.

Mr. DAVIS. The Senator made some inquiry as to whether there had been favorable reports. I understand that the substance of this amendment has passed the House once, perhaps twice; and I read very recently a very favorable report made by the House committee on this subject. I understand further that it was submitted to Ex-Attorney-General Pierrepont, who reported in favor of it, and said it was a proper or legal claim. I understand further that it comes out of the Indians' money, and by their consent.

Mr. CONKLING. That is the very reason why we ought to be careful.

Mr. DAVIS. And at their request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Maine.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move to add "and the Congress of the United States," so as to require the assent of Congress also.

Mr. BLAINE. Very well, I accept the modification.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be so modified.

Mr. BLAINE. The whole matter is now left in the hands of Congress.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment as modified.

A division was called for.

Mr. BLAINE. I fear it may defeat a quorum; and, if so, I will not insist on it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. BLAINE. If there is any trouble to arise from disclosing the lack of a quorum, I should rather have it withdrawn. If in the judgment of the Chair there is a quorum present, I would rather have it voted on.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of opinion that there is a quorum present.

Mr. BLAINE. Then I ask for a vote.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 17, noes 16; no quorum voting.

Mr. BLAINE. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. SARGENT. There will be a very great necessity for the committee of conference to unload this bill.

Mr. BLAINE. I have withdrawn the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. SARGENT. I do not think it can be withdrawn to prevent my making a speech. I say there will be great necessity——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is nothing before the Senate.

Mr. SARGENT. The amendment was before the Senate at the time I began to speak, and no one has the floor to withdraw it. I believe I understand my rights. I say, and now repeat again, that it will be the duty of the committee of conference, especially of the conferees on the part of the Senate, to unload a great deal on this bill. I believe the last straw has been piled on. Already the camel's back is broken. The bill is getting to be a public monstrosity, and there is no possibility of passing it and avoiding an extra session provided the conferees of the Senate insist on a tithe even of the amendments put upon it against the recommendation of the committee.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. GEORGE M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. No. 628) for the relief of John J. Anderson, surviving copartner of the firm of Anderson & White.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 2694) for the relief of W. W. Van Antwerp, late major of Fourth Michigan Cavalry.

The message further announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 4476) to provide for the appointment of an official short-hand reporter for the United States courts in and for the district of California, asked a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. GEORGE W. MCCRARY of Iowa, Mr. P. D. WIGGINTON of California, and Mr. BERNARD G. CAULFIELD of Illinois, managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House further insisted on its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 4616) making appropriations for the naval service for the year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes, asked for a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. JAMES H. BLOUNT of Georgia, Mr. JOHN T. HARRIS of Virginia, and Mr. EUGENE HALE of Maine, managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House had concurred in the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 4554) for the support of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolutions; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. No. 559) for the relief of Almeron E. Calkins, late a second lieutenant in the Eighth Michigan Cavalry;

A bill (H. R. No. 1611) authorizing the changing of the name of the sloop Addie Parker, of New Bedford, Massachusetts;

A bill (H. R. No. 1765) respecting the limit of reservations for town sites upon the public domain;

A bill (H. R. No. 1824) to change the name of the pleasure-yacht Hiram B. to Iola;

A bill (H. R. No. 2606) for the relief of Catherine Harris;

A bill (H. R. No. 3574) for the relief of Marshal P. Thatcher;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 175) authorizing the issue of clothing to Company A, Second Regiment United States Cavalry; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 176) authorizing the issue of clothing to private Francis Hegner, Company F, Seventh Cavalry, and private John C. Collins, Company G, Seventh Cavalry.

DISTRICT TAX BILL.

Mr. SPENCER submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 4554) for the support of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes, having met, after a full and free conferences have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

The Senate recedes from its amendments numbered 2, 9, 10, 12, 13, 14, 17, and 19.

The House recedes from its disagreement to the amendments numbered 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 11, and 16; and agree to the same.

The Senate recedes from its amendment numbered 1, and agrees to the same with an amendment as follows:

On page 1, line 5 of the bill, strike out "$1" and insert "$1.25."

And the House agree to the same.

The Senate recedes from its amendment numbered 15, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

On page 8, line 18 of the bill, after the words "United States" strike out the words "other than those for the government of the District of Columbia."

And the House agree to the same.

The Senate recedes from its amendment numbered 18, and agrees to the same with an amendment as follows:

In line 10 of the said amendment strike out "five" and insert "four."

And the House agree to the same.

GEO. E. SPENCER,
S. W. DORSEY,
WM. H. BARNUM,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
LAWRENCE T. NEAL,
WM. W. CRAPO,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was concurred in.

Mr. McMILLAN. Does the conference report leave a distinction between property in the city of Washington and property outside of it, a difference of twenty-five cents per $100 in the taxation of lands?

Mr. SPENCER. I will explain to the Senator from Minnesota. The bill as it passed the House taxes the property in the county at 1 per cent., while it taxes the property in the city at 1½ per cent. The Senate amended that so that it taxed property alike. The conference committee split the difference, so that city property is taxed at 1¼ per cent., and the county property is taxed at 1¼ per cent.

Mr. McMILLAN. I can see no reason for any distinction of that kind, and I shall not support the report of the conference committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. WEST in the chair.) The Chair has announced that the report is adopted.

Mr. McMILLAN. I ask for a division on that question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator can enter a motion to reconsider. The report is adopted.

Mr. McMILLAN. I withdraw the motion.

REPORTERS FOR UNITED STATES COURTS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 4476) to provide for the appointment of an official short-hand reporter for the United States courts in and for the district of California.

Mr. WRIGHT. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the House.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the committee on the part of the Senate; and Mr. WRIGHT, Mr. HOWE, and Mr. COOPER were appointed.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 4680) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes.

Mr. DORSEY. I offer the following amendment to come in after line 917:

To pay W. W. Wilshire, contestee in the contest of Gunter vs. Wilshire, third district Arkansas, $2,000.

Mr. WINDOM. That matter was before the Committee on Appropriations with several others of a similar character. The committee decided that they could not recommend appropriations for any contestants in the House where the committee of the House itself had not acted. There has been no action on the part of the committee of the House, and I think we ought not to assume to judge this matter for them.

Mr. DORSEY. I do not quite agree with the chairman of the committee that there were several other items of this sort. I only remember two others, and they have been put on the bill, being submitted by the Senator from Iowa. Now, the fact is that almost every case of this kind has been provided for in this bill. This is a just case. I know all the facts connected with it. The contestant who secured this seat was paid $3,000 for expenses, and this man who was ousted after a contest of six months has not been paid a cent.

Mr. CLAYTON. I thought such a bill had passed at one time. It certainly passed one House. I ask my colleague if it did not.

Mr. DORSEY. I think that two years ago it passed the House but failed here.

Mr. CLAYTON. That is my recollection.

Mr. DAVIS. Then the amendment is clearly out of order, and I raise the point of order. We must get along.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. WEST in the chair.) What is the point of order?

Mr. DAVIS. It is a private claim and does not come from any committee.

Mr. WITHERS. The committee reported adversely.

Mr. DORSEY. If this is a claim, here are four or five pages of the bill covered by just such claims.

Mr. DAVIS. They were recommended by the committee. The Senator is a member of the Appropriation Committee, and he knows very well that we must get on with the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will rule the point of order to be well taken.

Mr. CONOVER. I have a little amendment to offer which I think will occupy but a moment's time:

For an agent to protect the naval reserved timber lands in the State of Florida.

Mr. WINDOM. I regret to raise the point of order on my friend from Florida, but it is too late in the day or night to entertain such an amendment.

Mr. CONOVER. I think if the chairman of the committee will allow me to have this letter read he will withdraw his objection.

Mr. WINDOM. I cannot withdraw it. The amendment has not been reported by any committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair decides the point of order to be well taken. The amendment is out of order.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

Mr. DAVIS. I want to reserve three amendments—perhaps an explanation of them can be given very readily—on pages 32 and 33.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. They will be considered as reserved.

Mr. ALLISON. What are they?

Mr. WITHERS. The Coast Survey amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question will be on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole except those reserved by the Senator from West Virginia.

The amendments not excepted were concurred in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reserved amendments will be read.

Mr. DAVIS. It is not necessary to read them; I do not want to take time. I have no doubt the chairman of the committee can explain them.

Here are amendments appropriating, one $300,000 and another $200,000 for the Coast Survey, one on the Atlantic and the other on the Pacific. I was not in committee when they were considered. I happened to be out at the time. The amount is very large when it is borne in mind there are $450,000 for the ordinary surveys elsewhere.

Mr. WINDOM. The amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations striking out the provision of the House bill simply conformed to the appropriation for the current year, and the reason for changing the form is that if we do not make the appropriation in the form we have been accustomed to do, it changes the accounts and confuses the accounts at the Department, as we are informed. Hence, we have changed the form to make it as it has been heretofore. As to the amount, it is precisely the same as the current year, and the current year is a good deal of a reduction over former years. The House bill this session reduces the amount for the Coast Survey very much.

Mr. DAVIS. I think there is an advance, however, over the appropriation of the House of perhaps $200,000.

Mr. WINDOM. The House omitted to make that appropriation which has been made heretofore. We simply conform to the present law, making the same appropriation that was made for this year.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the reserved amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. DAVIS. With the explanation I am satisfied.

The amendments were concurred in.

Mr. SARGENT. I move to strike out three words on page 21, line 499. I move to strike out the words "the sum of." They are unnecessary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is a mere verbal correction, and will be made by the Clerk, if there be no objection. The Chair hears none.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WINDOM. I ask consent that this bill may be printed as passed by the Senate, with the amendments numbered, so as to facilitate the conference committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection that order will be made.

TERRITORY OF BLACK HILLS.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 1048) to establish the Territory of the Black Hills, and to provide a temporary government therefor.

Mr. DORSEY. I ask the Senator to withdraw the motion for a moment.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It will take but a moment, I think.

Mr. WINDOM. I move that the Senate adjourn until eleven o'clock to-morrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota moves that the Senate adjourn until eleven o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. SPENCER. I want to make an inquiry. I want to inquire if this motion prevails whether the bill of the Senator from Nebraska will be the unfinished business to-morrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state not, unless it is taken up.

Mr. SPENCER. Let it be taken up so as to be the unfinished business. It is a matter of national importance.

Mr. McMILLAN. Is the motion to adjourn debatable?

Mr. SPENCER. I thought the motion was withdrawn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion was withdrawn, the Chair understood.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think at this period of the session it is perfectly clear that no extended debate can be had on this or any other bill. This is one of the simplest and shortest ordinary forms of bill for the organization of a new territorial government.

Mr. WINDOM. I have not withdrawn the motion to adjourn.

Mr. SPENCER. Well, do withdraw it.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. If I may be allowed a single moment, I wish to state that I think if we can reach a vote on the bill no Senator can particularly object to its passage through the Senate. It will gratify me exceedingly if it can be passed through the Senate at least, at the close of my term of service as a Senator. I do not suppose anybody will think it is in immediate danger of passing the House; but I believe it is a very important matter to the country, of great interest to the people of the Northwest, and I believe there is really an urgent necessity that the bill should pass at the present time. It will gratify me exceedingly at least if it can pass the Senate at the present session.

Mr. WINDOM. I renew my motion to adjourn until eleven o'clock to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at twelve o'clock and fifty-two minutes a. m., Friday, March 3) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, March 2, 1877.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. I. L. TOWNSEND.

READING OF THE JOURNAL.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I understand that the journal clerk is ill and that the Journal is not wholly made up. I move to dispense with the reading of the Journal.

Mr. WALLING. I object.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Then I will move to suspend the rules for that purpose.

Mr. WALLING. I raise the question of a quorum.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I think we have certainly had enough of the gentleman from Ohio in that particular line. He should now allow us to finish the business of the House. There are bounds beyond which gentlemen should not go.

Mr. MORRISON. Gentlemen will judge of that for themselves.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I judge for myself.

Mr. WALLING. I am the judge, sir, of my duty on this floor.

Mr. GLOVER. I desire to ask unanimous consent——

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot now recognize a request for unanimous consent. The Journal will be read as far as made up.

The Clerk proceeded to read the Journal as far as made up. When the Clerk ceased reading,

Mr. WALLING said: Is the Journal concluded?

The SPEAKER. It is not.

Mr. WALLING. I demand that the Journal be completed, and read.

The SPEAKER. The journal clerk who makes up the Journal has been taken ill, and it is impossible for the Journal to be completed at present.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I press my motion to suspend the rules so as to dispense with the further reading of the Journal.

Mr. WALLING. I demand a call of the House to ascertain whether there is a quorum here.

The SPEAKER. The vote on the motion of the gentleman from Iowa will develop whether there is a quorum. It answers the same purpose.

Mr. WALLING. I claim the right as a member on this floor to demand a call of the House.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. The gentleman has not that right while a motion to suspend the rules is pending.

The SPEAKER. The motion to suspend the rules does away with the rule under which the gentleman from Ohio claims his right.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, to suspend the rules, on a division by sound, the Speaker stated that in the opinion of the Chair the ayes had it.

Mr. WALLING. I call for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 88, no 1.

Mr. WALLING. A quorum has not voted.

The SPEAKER. Is the question of a quorum raised?

Mr. WALLING. It is.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will order the Clerk to call the roll.

The Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. WALLING, (interrupting.) I will withdraw the call upon the assurance that the House shall proceed to the consideration of the pension bills.

Mr. RUSK. I ask that by unanimous consent the House proceed to the consideration of pension bills until there is a quorum present.

Mr. WALLING. I will not withdraw the call except on that assurance.

Mr. CLYMER. I rise to make a privileged report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio cannot make any such conditional arrangement as that.

Mr. WALLING. I understand that unanimous consent is not given to take up the pension bills. I therefore insist on the call being proceeded with.

The SPEAKER. The call of the roll will proceed.

The roll being called, the following members failed to answer to their names:

Messers. Anderson, George A. Bagley, Banks, Bass, Beebe, Belford, Blair, Bland, Blount, Burleigh, Cabell, William P. Caldwell, Carr, Caswell, Caulfield, John B. Clarke of Kentucky, Crounse, Culberson, Davy, De Bolt, Durand, Faulkner, Fort, Gibson, Goodin, Hamilton, Hays, Henkle, Goldsmith W. Hewitt, Hoar, Hoge, Hoskins, Humphreys, Hunton, Hurlbut, Hyman, Jenks, Frank Jones, Thomas L. Jones, Kasson, King, Franklin Landers, Lane, Levy, Lewis, Lord, Mackey, Maish, Metcalfe, Milliken, Money, Monroe, Mutchler, Nash, Norton, Phelps, John F. Philips, Piper, Plaisted, Poppleton, Powell, Purman, Rea, James B. Reilly, Rice, Sobieski Ross, Savage, Sayler, Scales, Sheakley, Sinnickson, Slemons, Sparks, Stephens, Stowell, Charles C. B. Walker, John W. Wallace, Warner, Watterson, G. Wiley Wells, Wheeler, Wilshire, Alan Wood, jr., Fernando Wood, Woodworth, and Yeates.

During the roll-call,

Mr. GOODE stated that his colleagues, Mr. HUNTON and Mr. CABELL, were detained from the House by sickness.

The SPEAKER. The calling of the roll has developed the presence of a quorum, two hundred and four gentlemen having answered to their names.

WILLIAM H. PENN.

Mr. DOUGLAS, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That William H. Penn, one of the assistant doorkeepers of this House, be paid out of the contingent fund of the House the sum of $2 per day from the 11th day of January, 1877, to the 4th day of March ensuing.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. RIDDLE. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD, some remarks on the presidential question.

There was no objection.

By unanimous consent, a similar permission was granted to Mr. WHITE, Mr. COX, Mr. LUTTRELL, Mr. MEADE, Mr. YOUNG, Mr. BANNING, Mr. HOLMAN, Mr. A. S. WILLIAMS, Mr. VANCE of North Carolina, Mr. HARDENBERGH, Mr. WILLIAMS of Alabama, and Mr. J. H. BAGLEY, jr.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendments bills of the House of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. No. 256) for the relief of Herman Holman, of Terre Haute, Indiana;

A bill (H. R. No. 1016) for the relief of Virginia E. White, of Ohio County, West Virginia; and

A bill (H. R. No. 4117) for the relief of Colonel Frank L. Woolford, late of the First Kentucky Cavalry Volunteers, of certain disabilities.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House:

A bill (S. No. 1243) to repeal the statute forbidding appointments and promotions in the staff of the Army; and

A bill (S. No. 1284) for the relief of William L. Hickman, of Missouri.

The message further announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 4559) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, and prior years, and for other purposes.

The message further announced that the Senate had concurred in the following resolutions of the House:

A resolution to print extra copies of the Report of the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries for the years 1873, 1874, and 1875;

A resolution for printing extra copies of the Report of the Smithsonian Institution for the year 1876; and

A resolution for printing the report of R. W. Raymond on mining statistics for the year 1875.

PAY OF PAGES.

Mr. HANCOCK. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, That the sum of $1,300, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be paid out of the contingent fund of the House to pay the following pages not provided for who have served during this session, namely: William B. Hester, session; C. S. Henry, session; Frank Sebring, session; G. W. Webber, session; Joseph Callahan, session, and to George B. Wilton, F. M. Schultus, and Eden E. Finley for the time served by them; and the Committee of Accounts is hereby directed to audit the claims of said pages upon the facts of the service rendered by the aforesaid persons.

Mr. HOLMAN. I insist that it should go to the Committee of Accounts. We know nothing about this matter.

Mr. HANCOCK. I move that the rules be suspended and the resolution adopted.

Mr. WHITE. Is it in order to offer an amendment?

The SPEAKER. A motion to suspend the rules is not amendable.

Mr. HOLMAN. I insist that the resolution should go to the Committee of Accounts.

Mr. HANCOCK. Is debate in order?

The SPEAKER. It is not.

Mr. HANCOCK. If it were I would like to make a statement.

The question was taken on Mr. HANCOCK's motion to suspend the rules and pass the resolution; and on a division there were—ayes 100, noes 35.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is not a quorum, and this legislation is fearful, and we ought not to begin upon it.

Mr. HANCOCK. These boys have served all winter as pages and have not received one dollar.

Mr. ROBERTS. I desire to make a statement in regard to this matter.

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order.

Mr. ROBERTS. I ask unanimous consent to make a statement.

No objection was made.

Mr. HOLMAN. I insist that during the balance of this session the privilege of the floor ought to be confined to the members of the House and I ask that the rule in relation to the subject be read.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not aware of the presence of anybody except such as have a right to the floor under the rule. If the gentleman will indicate anybody who has not the right the Chair will see that he is removed from the floor.

Mr. HOLMAN. There are a large number of persons on the floor.

The SPEAKER. The officers of the House will see that the lobbies are vacated by gentlemen who are not entitled to the privilege of the floor, but the Chair would suggest that there are quite a number of the members of the next Congress present, and that accounts for the large number upon the floor.

Mr. ROBERTS. I do not think that the House can in justice to itself make this allowance, in view of the fact that we have already under the rule twenty-eight pages and in addition thereto when the sundry civil bill was before the House a provision was made for six additional pages, making thirty-four in all. It is now proposed, as I understand by this resolution, to add five additional pages. I say that this is all wrong in every possible and conceivable aspect of the case and that this House cannot in justice to itself undertake to make this allowance. I only desire to make this statement because the Committee of Accounts, of which I am chairman, have given full consideration to this subject and have allowed all that should be allowed when we added six to the number provided for by the rules.

Mr. HOOKER. Allow me to say a single word. This amendment had its origin from the fact that one or two pages who were known to the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. HANCOCK,] as well as to myself, had been in constant attendance last session, having been borne on the rolls and regularly compensated last session. They came here at the beginning of this session and they have been here upon the floor discharging their duties. They have rendered the services. I speak in reference to two or three of them who have certainly rendered the services and not received a dollar of pay. They have been kept here the whole time and I think it would be false economy to deny to those boys pay for their services. I would say to the chairman of the Committee of Accounts that his committee will not be responsible for this. I trust the responsibility will be taken by the House and the House will declare that this act of justice shall be done to these boys.

Mr. ROBERTS. I do not desire to debate the question at all, but I do desire to say simply that if there be any more pages here upon this floor than the six additional ones allowed they were notified long since at my instance that they would be discharged.

Tellers were ordered on the motion of Mr. HANCOCK; and Mr. ROBERTS and Mr. HANCOCK were appointed.

Mr. HANCOCK. I would like to make a brief statement.

Mr. WALLING. I object to further debate upon this question.

The House divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 121, noes 34.

Before the result of the vote was announced,

Mr. COCHRANE called for the yeas and nays.

Mr. MILLS. O, no; do not do that.

Mr. COCHRANE. I insist upon the yeas and nays.

The question was taken upon ordering the yeas and nays; and upon a division there were—ayes 19, noes 120.

Mr. COCHRANE. No quorum has voted, and I call for a further count.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. HANCOCK and Mr. COCHRANE were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 16, noes 135.

So (one-fifth not voting in the affirmative) the yeas and nays were not ordered.

Accordingly (two-thirds voting in the affirmative) the rules were suspended and the resolution was adopted.

LOUISIANA RETURNING BOARD.

Mr. WADDELL. I move that the rules be suspended and the preamble and resolution passed which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas J. Madison Wells, L. M. Kenner, G. Casanave, and T. C. Anderson, now held in custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms of this House for contempt in refusing to answer questions and deliver books and papers, are in the judgment of this House the peers of the majority of the electoral commission, who have completed the work of said Wells, Kenner, Casanave, and Anderson with greater contempt for and defiance of this House and the public opinion of the country than was exhibited by them;

And whereas justice demands that each of the said returning boards should occupy the same position, and this House has no power to confine the majority of the electoral commission: Therefore,

Resolved, That the said Wells, Kenner, Casanave, and Anderson be forthwith discharged and set at liberty, in order that they may assist the said majority of the electoral commission in inaugurating the person whom they have jointly counted into the office of the President of the United States over the votes of a large majority of the legal voters of the country.

Mr. CONGER. I rise to a point of order. If it is necessary for members to exhibit such a specimen of their spite as this——

Mr. WADDELL. I call the previous question.

The SPEAKER. It is not necessary.

The question was taken upon suspending the rules and passing the preamble and resolution; and upon a division there were—ayes 75, noes 73.

Before the result of this vote was announced,

Mr. WALLING called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SAMPSON. Is it in order to ask for a division of the question and that a vote be taken upon the preamble separately?

The SPEAKER. It is not; the motion is to suspend the rules, including the one giving the right for a division of the question.

Mr. TUCKER. Would it be in order to offer a substitute for the resolution?

The SPEAKER. It would not.

Mr. ATKINS. Would it be in order for me to ask the gentleman who offered this resolution to allow it to be passed over for the present?

Mr. CONGER. I object to anything but to the call of the roll.

Mr. WELLS, of Missouri. I desire to state that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ATKINS] is quite unwell and wishes to leave the House; but before doing so he wants to report the Army appropriation bill.

Cries of "Regular order!"

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the call of the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 21, nays 115, not voting 154: as follows:

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WALDRON submitted the following report; which was read by the Clerk:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 4559) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, and for prior years, and for other purposes, having met after full and free conference have agreed to recommend, and do recommend to their respective Houses, as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 4 and agree to the same, with an amendment, as follows: Strike out of said amendment these words "to H. F. Hutchinson $259.25," "to Andrew Carnes $147.60," "to Louis Delano $313.04," and strike out in lines 12 and 13, the words "nine hundred and thirteen dollars and sixty-eight," and insert in lieu thereof "one hundred and ninety-three dollars and seventy-nine;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 5, with an amendment substituting the words "Treasury Department" for "Internal Revenue Office;" and the House agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 14, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: In line 5 of said amendment strike out "three hundred and seventy" and insert "and fifty-three;" in lines 6 and 7 strike out "five hundred and twenty-four" and insert "two hundred and seven;" and add at the end of the amendment the following, "and no part of this sum shall be used for payment of postage or purchase of postage stamps;" and the Senate agree to the same.

J. D. C. ATKINS,
HENRY WALDRON,
ROB. HAMILTON,
Managers on the part of the House.

A. A. SARGENT,
WM. WINDOM.
R. E. WITHERS,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WALDRON] will explain the principal concessions made in this bill.

Mr. WALDRON. The additions made by the Senate to this bill amounted to $2,068,676. In the conference the Senate yields of that amount $1,088,445, and the House recedes from its disagreement to $1,152,576. The bill is therefore increased in the aggregate $1,152,576 over and above the amount which it contained when it originally passed the House. Two items make up the bulk of this $1,152,000. One is an item of $500,000 for a deficiency in the pay of the Navy; and another an item of $300,000 for deficiency in the Department of Justice for the current year and for prior years. The other amounts are made up of a number of small items—surveying the public lands, Indian deficiencies, &c., which I can explain if the House should desire it. If no gentleman wishes to discuss the matter I call for the previous question.

Mr. ATKINS. As a member of the committee of conference I wish to make only this remark: The large deficiency in the Navy is not for this year alone, but for this year and previous years.

The report was adopted.

Mr. WALDRON moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MILITARY ACADEMY BILL.

Mr. CLYMER submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill of the House No. 4306, making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 10, 12, 13, 14, 16, 21, and 22.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 9, 11, 15, 17, 18, 19, 20, and 23.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 8 and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out "eleven thousand" and insert in lieu thereof "eight thousand nine hundred and ninety-nine;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 24, with an amendment as follows: Strike out of said amendment the words "nine hundred," and the Senate agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 25, and agree to the clause proposed to be stricken out, with an amendment as follows: After the word "than" insert "for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878," and the House agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 26 with an amendment striking out all of the amended matter after the word "Army," in line 20, page 6, of the bill; and the House agree to the same.

HIESTER CLYMER,
JAMES H. BLOUNT,
EUGENE HALE,
Managers on the part of the House.

WILLIAM B. ALLISON,
JAMES A. LOGAN,
WILLIAM A. WALLACE,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. CLYMER. I demand the previous question.

Mr. WALLING. I ask for the reading of the bill as it will be if amended.

The SPEAKER. That is not in order.

Mr. CLYMER. The conference report alone is to be read.

Mr. WALLING. I ask you, sir, when a bill is demanded to be read on this floor where amendment is proposed, whether the House can proceed to business until that is done?

Mr. CLYMER. I desire to say——

Mr. WALLING. I raise that point of order.

Mr. CLYMER. The conference report alone is before the House, and the bill has been read as it heretofore passed the House.

Mr. WALLING. This is not the bill passed by the House.

Mr. CLYMER. The conference report alone is before the House. We have read in the conference report all that has not heretofore passed the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. The practice has been uniform that, by unanimous consent, any given amendment may be read in connection with the bill. Inasmuch as the bill has been passed, the conference report alone is now before the House. While, by unanimous consent, the practice always has been for gentlemen to ask the portion of the bill in connection with a given amendment may be read, so as to ascertain the sense of the proposition, I have never known in my experience any call upon the Speaker to have the bill read as it would be if amended. Ordinarily that would be impossible.

The SPEAKER. The Chair finds no rule which gives the right to a member to call for the reading of the bill. The conference report is the only business before the House.

The conference report was adopted.

Mr. CLYMER moved to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

REBEL RAID ON HENDERSON, TENNESSEE.

Mr. ATKINS obtained the floor.

Mr. EDEN. I ask the gentleman to yield to me.

Mr. WALLING. I demand the regular order of business, which is the morning hour.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee has been recognized.

Mr. ATKINS. I yield for a moment to the gentleman from Missouri to make a report.

Mr. GLOVER. Mr. Speaker, I am instructed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred a resolution to inquire what assessments were made upon the citizens of Henderson, Tennessee, and its vicinity in reference to the rebel raid upon that place in 1862, what amount of money was collected, and what disposition made of it—which sum was intended to re-imburse the citizens and Government for losses sustained, but which instead was turned over to the quartermaster and provost marshal of that department, and used for the Army to the extent of $23,320—to submit a report and accompanying testimony; and I move they be laid upon the table and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WALLING. I ask for the reading of the report and testimony.

Mr. GLOVER. I hope not, as I only ask the report and accompanying testimony be laid upon the table and ordered to be printed.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman demands the reading of the report, it will be read.

Mr. ATKINS. I hope the gentleman will not insist on that.

Mr. WALLING. I withdraw my demand for the reading of the report.

The SPEAKER. The reading of papers is a question to be submitted to the House.

Mr. WALLING. I have the right to demand the reading of the report.

The SPEAKER. Not as an individual right.

Mr. WALLING. I withdraw the demand.

The report and accompanying testimony were laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

ENROLLED BILLS.

Mr. HARRIS, of Georgia, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled, bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, informed the House that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. No. 1010) for the relief of Julius S. Bohrer, master in the United States Navy;

A bill (S. No. 1019) to provide for the reprint of the resolves, ordinances, and acts passed by the Continental Congress and the Congress of the Confederation; and

A bill (S. No. 1288) to remove the political disabilities of P. J. Quattlebaum.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. No. 1253) granting to the State of Missouri all lands therein selected as swamp and overflowed lands.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ATKINS. I rise for the purpose of making a privileged motion, and ask the attention of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ATKINS] calls up the Army appropriation bill.

Mr. ATKINS. Mr. Speaker, there are two inquiries which it becomes this House to make.

First. Do the revenue now coming in and the estimates based thereupon demand still further retrenchment?

Second. Whether the public service will bear any reductions in expenditures; and if so, what branches of the service will best warrant the reduction.

Our revenue, both of customs and internal revenue, for the last six months has been steadily diminishing.

The following will show the falling off of customs: The Treasury received from customs for the year ending 30th of June, 1876, $148,071,987.61; and for the year ending June 30th, 1877, first quarter, $37,554,728.53; estimate for three quarters, $89,445,271.47; total, $127,000,000, or a falling off of $21,071,987.61 over last year.

And the following exhibits the decrease in internal revenue: The Government had received from internal revenue for the year ending June 30th, 1876, $116,700,732.03; the first quarter of the year ending 30th June, 1877, the internal revenue was, $28,813,336.37; the estimates for the remaining three quarters amount to $91,511,663.63, or an increase of $3,624,267.97 over last year; or a net falling off of revenue from both customs and internal revenue of $17,447,716.64.

With this unfavorable exhibit, will any member of this House deny that there is necessity to cut down the expenditures of the whole service so as to accommodate our diminished and diminishing receipts? Or will they ask for the raising of taxes, or supply the deficiency by a Government loan? Now it is obvious that one of the three expedients must be resorted to.

We must either reduce below the present rate of expenditures, or borrow money by the sale of bonds, or raise taxes. Of the two latter propositions I frankly say I prefer the last one. I admit that the people are in no condition, at this perilous juncture of public affairs and in the midst of a great commercial crisis which like a maelstrom threatens to swallow up every interest in the land, to bear an increase of taxation. But would it not be the sounder policy in the long run to impose additional taxation rather than increase the national debt, thus postponing the evil to another day?

But is not either expedient less desirable than the reduction of expenditures?

John Stuart Mill says:

> Honest public financiering is neither more complex nor difficult than honest private management of debts and credits. The central motto which should govern both is, "live within your means." When this is adhered to, the rest is a very simple matter of keeping and collecting accounts, which duties may be performed by any competent clerk.

The inquiry then which presses itself upon the legislation of this hour is can we further reduce expenditures so as to meet our failing revenue? I am confident that it is within the power of Congress to bring our expenditures within the limits of the revenues of the Government.

Each year the expenditures should grow less instead of greater.

A comparison of the last fiscal year with this demonstrates that proposition. When the Committee on Appropriations, with the trenchant blade wielded by the late chairman, cut off nearly $30,000,000, republican orators on this floor protested in the name of a crippled and ruined service, and declared that the deficiency bills of this session would be largely increased, thus asserting the reductions to be inopportune and inexpedient. But what is the fact to-day? The usual deficiencies under the lead of a democratic House and its officers prove to be less this first year of democratic rule than they have been for several years past. This fact attests the wisdom and sound economy of our action at the last session.

For instance, in 1874 the deficiency was $4,083,914.26; in 1875 the deficiency was $4,703,699.18; in 1876 it was $2,908,171.09; while for 1877 the deficiencies are only $632,315.07, being about one-fourth of last year and about one-eighth of former years. This speaks well for democratic economy or badly for republican extravagance. The lesson taught us by these facts is, that it is within the power of the heads of departments and bureaus, by a close scrutiny into their respective duties and by a sincere desire to co-operate with this House in every possible economy, to bring our annual budget within $100,000,000 for the current ordinary expenditures. This most desirable result may be attained without the slightest injury to the machinery of Government, including the diplomatic, military, and naval service.

The want of this voluntary and cordial co-operation of cabinet officers and heads of bureaus with the friends of retrenchment in this House is a serious drawback to a successful result in that direction. With the most competent and economical chiefs in the departments the task of just and intelligent reduction and retrenchment is difficult and perplexing. But where extravagance seems to be the settled policy of executive and administrative officers the labor of the legislative bodies in ascertaining the simple requirements of the service becomes herculean, and well-nigh impossible of accomplishment.

In reviewing the work of the last session there are a few instances in which the knife was used perhaps too freely, while in many others it was not used enough and very frequently not at all, although it should have been.

If we expect to bring our net ordinary expenditures down below one hundred millions per annum the rule of reduction must be rigidly applied. The sum is made of parts, the whole of fractions, and many little items in the end amount to large reductions.

The principal saving proposed by this bill consists in the reduction of the number of enlisted men from 27,500 to 17,000. I will mention a few other small items of reduction. By allowing the Army, as proposed by this bill, to reduce by natural causes until it reaches 17,000 enlisted men, the item for recruiting, which is estimated at $125,000, is left at $20,000. In addition to that, a heavy saving may be made in transportation of the military forces by stationing the troops in defense of the frontier settlements, where they are most needed; and, as the General of the Army has suggested, and his opinion is supported by other high military authority, that infantry is more effective against the Indians than cavalry, a large reduction of expenditure might be made by adopting in the main the former instead of the latter arm of the service, as is provided in the bill.

An additional saving, as well as a great convenience, may be effected by repealing the act of February 13, 1870, which provides for the separation of the various items of appropriation, and allowing them, as formerly, to be made in bulk, thus saving large sums of interest on idle capital, clerical hire, and other expenses. This is especially recommended by the Quartermaster-General.

This bill does not touch the salaries of officers, with two exceptions, to wit, the General and Lieutenant-General. It reduces the salary of the General of the Army from $13,500, with fuel, quarters, &c., amounting to $5,000 more; making in all $18,500. When the office was created the salary was $4,800 and other allowances amounting to $11,704 per annum in all. The Lieutenant-General is reduced from $11,000 to $9,000.

The proposed reduction of the Army from the basis of 25,000 enlisted men to 17,000 in the matter of economy is important. And further, the bill makes no appropriation for the additional and extra number of cavalry which was hurried through Congress to meet the threatening raids of the Sioux tribe of Indians, and about which there has been no little political scandal, and connected with which a dark and bloody tragedy has been enacted.

It will be remembered that the reduction made for the support of the Army at the last session were vigorously opposed by the Senate, and that the proposition for a joint committee of both Houses and the Secretary of War to draw up a plan for the re-organization of the Army was originated and urged as a substitute for the proposed reductions of the House of Representatives. That joint commission was to sit during the vacation, and was under the terms of the law to report to Congress by the first of last December. But it is now the close of the Forty-fourth Congress, and no report has been made.

The House, therefore, it seems to me, in the absence of the report for the re-organization of the Army promised us at the last session as a reason why our bill should not be urged at the time, is now fully justified in again submitting proportionate reductions proposed in the bill which passed that body last year. And I will add that in the main we have endeavored to conform the pending bill to that one.

In the appropriations for the Army, as in every other department of the Government, the expenditures for the present fiscal year are materially less than former years, while the next fiscal year promises still more flattering results to the friends of economy. As late as 1874 the amount appropriated for the Army was $31,796,801.08, while the sum appropriated for this present fiscal year ending 30th of June, 1877, is $25,987,167.90, being less than the appropriation of 1874 by $5,809,633.18.

The estimates submitted to Congress by the War Department on the 1st of December last for the next fiscal year were $31,984,975.90, exclusive of the Military Academy. This estimate was based upon a basis of 27,500 fighting men. Upon being requested by the Committee on Appropriations to furnish estimates upon the basis of 22,000 enlisted men, the sum was reduced to $26,229,388.30, being $4,555,879.90 less than the estimates of the 1st of last December. The sum proposed by this bill is $22,139,000, which is $9,845,975 less than the original estimate, owing in part to the large reduction in the force.

This House remembers the extraordinary efforts of the War Department at the last session of Congress, just about the beginning of the presidential campaign, to induce Congress—in which it finally succeeded, but not by my consent—to increase the Army by providing for the recruiting of twenty-five hundred cavalry, avowedly to be employed in what was grandiloquently styled the Sioux war, but which no doubt were intended to supply the places of infantry troops which were withdrawn from the Territories and sent into the Southern States to control elections. Gentlemen also remember that so soon as the Army was increased the savage Sioux army, which but yesterday, as it were, was reported by semi-authentic sources to number ten thousand strong, dwindled into flying detachments of plundering robbers, and scattered over the broad expanse of the uninhabited plains and mountains of the outlying Territories. And that was the end of the organized Sioux war. But the Government still retains the increased force in the field, and desires its continuance at least for, the balance of the year, to hunt those maraunding bands of savages; that is, the Sioux war is still raging and peace is not declared, and hence the Army must be kept up to the full standard of 27,500 enlisted men.

The time has come when this Government should get on a business footing. It has been on a grand tourney of extravagant display long enough. The time has come when all supernumeraries should be dispensed with, and all superfluous and unnecessary offices and bureaus and expenses and unnecessary commissions should be left off; and let the Representatives of the people, who are charged with the duty of levying and collecting taxes off of the people, and paying them out to an Army, both military and civil, see to it, that these extraneous and unnecessary avenues of the public expenditures are closed up. Let us simplify the machinery of Government, and trust the people to govern themselves, remembering that the worst form of government is that which governs too much. Let us have less routine and less red tape, fewer and more competent and more honest officers; let the Government and the people come nearer together; let the Government spend less, and thereby let the people have more of their own earnings. In other words, let us have a frugal Government, and a well-to-do people, instead of a splendid rich Government and a spoliated poor people. Let the reforms so happily inaugurated by the majority in the House be continued until this auspicious result is attained. Then shall we deserve and receive the plaudits of a patriotic, enlightened, and relieved constituency.

There is a practical moral and political benefit in the reduction of the force, in the assertion of the principle which is thereby set up and maintained, which is that the Army as an adjunct of civil government is wholly unnecessary and actually hurtful.

This leads me to the consideration of the necessity and use of a large standing army in this country.

Why should we have a large standing army? The physical impregnability of the United States against foreign invasion renders a standing army for that purpose entirely useless. Every war in which as a nation we have been engaged, from the revolution of 1776 to the present time, demonstrates the practical feasibility of relying upon citizen soldiery for all purposes of defense.

When we look upon the map of this country and see that our territory is bounded on the north principally by the great lakes, and on all other sides by ocean fronts, we take in at a glance how impregnable against foreign assault nature has made our frontiers. In Europe, where the territorial limits are separated from their neighboring nations by mere imaginary lines and where the population is much more compact and greater to the square mile; where a much larger proportion of the people are living within the limits of great cities, and are more dependent and under greater need of physical restraint, it is considered necessary that large standing armies be kept up to overawe the people and preserve order and maintain the supremacy of the laws. Another incentive stimulates European governments to maintain large standing armies: to keep their people in subjection to hated forms of government, built upon the broken hearts and crushed hopes of the toiling millions, for the benefit and support in royal magnificence and splendor of crowned princes and their long retinue of courtiers and dependents. But the greatest necessity now seems to exist to maintain large standing armies, with the most expensive armaments, by all of the first-class and many of the second-class powers of Europe, for self-defense. Each nation is jealous and distrustful of the power and good faith of all the rest; hence, for centuries Europe has been little better than a grand military camp.

The amount of money which has been spent in the life-time of this republic by European powers to carry on their wars, and maintain their armies in time of peace up to the standard of a war footing, had it been properly and equally distributed, would have educated every child born as their subject, and abolished every almshouse within their borders, and placed every one within the reach of a competency. Instead of that pleasing picture of European society, continued wars and standing armies have wasted the resources of the common people, diverted the minds of the masses from habits of frugal economy, blinded the youth with the glare and pomp of military adventure, made the masses tenants at the will of a bonded and landed aristocracy upheld by standing armies made insolent and tyrannical through pampering and the lavish expenditure of gold. Who can fathom the depths of human woe, calculate the losses, morally and materially, inflicted upon society, or properly estimate the repressive influence upon the world's general progress, which are the resultant forces of large standing armies, whether of invasion or occupation, or even of defense?

The idea is un-American and antirepublican; it is of European and monarchical growth. The structure of their forms of government—based upon force instead of upon the consent of the governed, as in this country—the maintenance of order, and the preservation of peace and the execution of the laws are only compelled by the presence of the army. Even the very police duty of those countries is performed by detachments from the army, while in this country, under our admirable dual system of Federal and State governments, each moving in concentric circles, always paralled yet never conflicting, the regulation of public order is left to home government or local authority, all based upon the consent of the people. At least such is our theory, and for long, long years such was our practice. And if we have wandered away from that sensible, just, and economical mode of government and fallen into the European idea of preserving public order by the army, the sooner it is abandoned the better. If there has ever been since the first few months following upon the close of the late war between the States any necessity for the intervention of the Army to secure the execution of the laws made in pursuance of the Constitution of the States and of the United States, I have yet to learn of the instance. Had the people been allowed without Federal coercion to manage their own affairs since the war, they would have done so much more justly to all concerned and with far greater satisfaction to a very large majority of the people even of the Northern States. The disrupted condition of society which the war left among other evils as a heritage to the South, and which almost always follows civil wars from necessity, afforded a pretext for the use of the Army in those States. And as the dominant party determined to tear down the old State governments and also the new ones which were set up by President Johnson and enter upon its famous and ill-advised reconstruction policy—and I only speak of it now for the purpose of a historical illustration—and to do this were compelled to inaugurate the rotten borough or carpet-bag system of representation and government, which required, or they supposed it did, the presence of the Army to make it successful, time, partial success, and habit have rendered the use of the Army in the Southern States a seeming necessity to the ruling authorities at Washington. It is to this use of the Army that I object. It is degrading to the dignity of an American soldier to make a policeman of him; it is insulting to his chivalry and patriotism, it is dwarfing his noble profession to the ignoble level of a Turkish Janizary, who never tasted the sweet waters of liberty, but was born and bred beneath the frowning shadows of despotism and thinks it an honor to lick the hand of his master or but touch the hem of his garment or die for his defense.

American soldiers policemen! Insult if true, and slander if pretended to cover up the tyrannical and unconstitutional use of the Army by protecting and keeping in power tyrants whom the people have not elected; and but for Federal military protection their governments would fall at the first breath of popular expression. The hollow insincerity and circumlocution which have attended every step of the unconstitutional use of the United States Army deserve the scorching denunciation of every true soldier and of every lover of his country and of its Constitution.

The process has been to first stifle the lawful will of the people and set up in power these minions of despotism. This has been done by driving at the point of the bayonet the legally elected legislators and officers of those States from power. United States district judges have been invoked to violate the law and issue orders wholly illegal and unconstitutional, under which pretended judicial authority these unpardonable outrages upon civil liberty have been committed. In this manner these pretenders becoming the de facto governments, the President then virtuously and patriotically responds to their call for troops to protect them in their infamous assumption of authority. When this point is reached the law-abiding Executive, full of devotion to the Constitution and with a heart always yearning for peace, panoplied with magisterial power, recurs to the fourth section of the fourth article of the Constitution with infinite satisfaction, and forthwith military aid is afforded the men whom he, in violation of the Constitution, first created with his own usurping hand. Such has been the process.

The last section of this bill seems to me to be a very salutary one. It provides that no part of the money appropriated by it shall be used in any State to maintain the political power of any State government, but to leave the people of a State perfectly free to regulate their own affairs in their own way, subject to the Constitution of the United States.

The Federal Constitution provides that the United States shall guarantee to every State a republican form of government. The language is that the United States shall guarantee, &c., not that the President shall do so. Is the President considered the United States? Or does the political power reside in Congress, restricted by the limitations of the Constitution? Now, I grant that the President is made by the Constitution the Commander-in-Chief of the land and naval forces of the United States, but he is subject to laws and regulations made by Congress.

Congress alone has power to raise and equip armies and to provide laws and regulations for their government.

Congress in its discretion can refuse to vote supplies to the Army and can actually repeal all laws authorizing its existence. It can disband the Army. Congress alone has the right to declare war; that is, to say whether the Army shall fight or remain idle. If Congress has the power to refuse to allow the Army to enter into active hostilities with a public or foreign enemy, surely it has the right to say that it shall not be used to destroy the sovereignty of a State, to bind it hand and foot, and hand it over to the torture of the oppressor.

If Congress has the right and power alone to appropriate money for the support of the Army, it surely can impose a condition or regulations upon the particular use that the money is applied to. Because if it has not that power, then, sir, has the Executive the power over both the purse and the sword.

Gentlemen have not forgotten surely that such a restriction was placed upon the Army appropriation bill in the Thirty-fourth Congress in reference to the use of the Army in the Territory of Kansas; that it was introduced by Mr. Barbour, of Illinois, a republican, and was voted for by the whole party in the House, and sustained by all of the republican Senators. We are then in this country not without a precedent in this respect. I may add, too, that similar instances are cited in English history in the contests for liberty between the Commons and the Crown. But in free America, as gentlemen on this floor often boast, the doctrine that the people through Congress should control the purse and sword is heretical, I suppose.

The effect of the unlawful use of the Army in the States to overturn one State government and set up another has progressed to such an extent as seriously to alarm the friends of constitutional government of all parties.

When the President of the United States undertook to overturn the present State government of Arkansas, and in a brief and soldier-like message to Congress, and which has no parallel in American history, announced that intention, no further blow was needed, had he executed his threat, to have effectually destroyed and eliminated from our system the principle of self-government by the States as members of the American Union. When I look back two brief years and remember how narrowly that splendid State escaped the hand of the political executioner, and contemplate the ruin which would surely have overtaken the other States of the South and eventually of the whole sisterhood, I wonder that such acts should longer meet the approval of the masses of the people in the North, or even be tolerated by them. But yet we see this potent agency, the Army, scattered throughout the Southern States in a presidential election year with the evident approval of the majority of the people of the northern States. We see, too, within less than two months a corporal of the guard of the Army seating and unseating the legislators of a State. We see the halls of legislation of one of the original thirteen States—the home of the revolutionary heroes Marion and Sumter—barricaded by usurpers, and they protected by the mailed hand of the central Government.

The events which have been for the last three months and are now transpiring within this Capitol, to my mind furnish a strong argument for the decrease of the Army.

Within this time the country has witnessed the remarkable spectacle of two defeated pretenders claiming the governorship of two States which had repudiated them at the ballot-box and elected others, being upheld and protected in their forcible usurpation of the State-house of each Commonwealth by the military arm of the General Government directed by the Executive. Coupled with that outrage upon popular liberty, the voice of the people of two States in their choice of President has been smothered by self-perpetuating and corrupt returning boards, ready to sell the rights of the people for gold; and when the majority of this House was beginning to despair of a fair adjustment in counting the electoral vote for President, and gave indications that it intended to make an election, which it surely would have done, regardless of personal consequences, should the Senate arbitrarily attempt the same without its co-operation—under these interesting circumstances and grave responsibilities we all remember the Executive threat came floating around and into this very Hall to arrest the democratic members of this House and imprison them in Fort Monroe by the military which had been gathering here for weeks from remote sections of the country. This Executive threat appeared day after day in the columns of the republican newspaper of Washington, the accredited organ of the President and his Cabinet, and never was rebuked or denied.

The advantage and power of an army of twenty-five thousand men, even in a great country like this, is not to be despised when brought against the people, however righteous their cause, wholly unorganized and without equipments and armaments. But suppose we had had an army of one hundred thousand men? Would the soldier at the head of the Government, who is said to have made these threats, and which have not been authoritatively denied and cannot be in my opinion, and who no doubt, as did his courtiers and confidants, dream in daylight of the necessity being forced upon him of cutting the Gordian knot of our political troubles and holding over in the teeth of the Constitution—would the difference between an army of twenty-five thousand and one hundred thousand men have added anything to his boldness or increased the temptation to wrest power from the people by either inaugurating the defeated candidate of "his own party," or seizing the helmet of state himself by a coup d'état after the style of Louis Napoleon? Instead of detachments of the Army hovering around this Capitol to be held in readiness for the butchery of liberty, if they are not needed to defend the frontiers let them be disbanded and return to civil pursuits at once, and the burden of their support, which is not less than $1,000 for each soldier, on an average, be taken off the public Treasury.

The plea which a usurping Executive offers for these flagrant outrages of quartering troops upon the people in time of peace is that of preserving the peace within the States. It will not bear the test of examination and of criticism. Where did the Executive derive his authority to send troops to Arkansas after that people had recognized their government and elected a new set of State officers? Neither Governor Garland or the Legislature applied for military re-enforcements to suppress insurrection or repel invasion. And it was only the minion of Federal power, and not the legally elected governor or Legislature, that asked for troops to be sent to Louisiana. Nor did the "Old Dominion," where repose the ashes of four of the most renowned Ex-Presidents, including the Father of his Country and the immortal author of the Declaration of American Independence and the chief patron of the Constitution itself, ask for troops, when only last year a company was arbitrarily quartered in the city of Petersburgh as a menace to the citizens of that Commonwealth of the Revolution.

Now, sir, as one of the untrammeled Representatives upon this floor, I declare here to-day, and now, that it is time the American Congress should stamp the seal of condemnation upon this unlawful use of the American Army lest it be accepted hereafter by some ambitious and wicked President as a precedent. It is time that the iron hand of the soldier was taken from the throat of the prostrate and bleeding form of liberty. If we have no further and better use for the Army let it be disbanded at once and the civilization of the age will rejoice for the deliverance; the desolated form of constitutional freedom will again rise up in those downtrodden States and smile upon a contented people, trained in the arts of government, liberty, and law.

Every argument has been made to induce the republican party to change its policy of vengeance and remorseless hate toward the conquered South. In vain have the people South borne uncomplainingly the overthrow of their rights of self-government, submitted to military governments, succeeded by the still more rotten borough system of carpet-bag rule, which has eaten up their substance and prostrated every industrial interest, swelled the lists of tax assessments and collections upon realty to the point of confiscation, and bankrupted both government and people. Every argument suggested either by human reason or human sympathy has been exhausted, and yet no relief has been granted. Our people have witnessed the flagrant infractions upon the Constitution with scarcely a murmur, while a cry of denunciation in the North has rung out even in notes of warning. We have cultivated the sentiment of patriotism and nationality, no matter whatever indignation and oppressions have been heaped upon us by an unforgiving party, until really that virtue shines more resplendently in southern than in northern hearts; for it is not an infrequent event that the Government falls under the bitter animadversion of northern speakers and writers; those times when never a word escaped the lips or slipped the pen of a southerner. Even now many northern writers and statesmen laugh at the Constitution, and deride the Union which admits to its embrace the Southern States. And yet more than half of the northern people either regard us, or affect to regard us, with suspicion.

Rumor floats to-day about this Hall that the Executive will or has recognized the Nicholls government in Louisiana. Why not recognize Governor Hampton as well? Has he still a hope of keeping South Carolina in the republican fold, and therefore declines to recognize that gallant and patriotic southern leader, while he despairs longer of holding Louisiana in the radical camp? Or does he think that Louisiana, or rather Wells and his villainous returning board, have done enough for that State in being the instrument of grabbing the presidential office? Are these rumors true? I hope they are. But why do gentlemen this morning, since I came into this Hall, so bitterly protest against this restrictive clause in this bill prohibiting the use of the troops to uphold pretended political power in any of the States against the will of the people? Is it the prerogative of the President or is it the right of Congress to secure republican forms of government to the States?

The scenes through which we are passing, so disgraceful to the authorities, need some relieving feature. The truth is, Mr. Hayes, coming into power as he does, ought to be thankful to his predecessor for any relief he can render in the few short hours left him. Thank God, those hours are few in number. Twelve long, dreary, years have passed by, during all of which time not a hand has been raised against the authority of the Federal Government. The symbol of its power has waved in peaceful triumph over every square foot of southern territory, whether in the crowded city or among the rural districts, or whether floating from the masts of ships and steamers as they ride upon the rolling waves, which seem to murmur back in gentle anthems the music of the Union. We have opened our doors and cordially invited our northern fellow-countrymen to come and live among us and enjoy our genial climate and cultivate our prolific soil; and hundreds of thousands have done so. We have made governors and Senators of some who have settled among us, that they might be of us but not to oppress us. Failing in every effort to convince our enemies of our good faith and patriotic intentions, except an appeal to their pity, which sooner than make the true southern heart would prefer to cease to beat; having exhausted every moral, social, and political consideration, we have arrived at the last argument in this difficult theorem. It is plain that it is now a question of self-interest with the North, for the wave of poverty and bankruptcy has reached northern commercial centers and now stares the whole country in the face.

Far-seeing democratic statesmen, both North and South, have for years past drawn aside the veil of the future and painted in vivid portraiture the very picture of distress and gloom which now hangs from the outer walls of millions of households. The philosophical truth has again and again been enforced that it was impossible for the body to remain sound, healthy, and vigorous when one or more of the limbs is stricken with paralysis and disease. The decaying condition of the prostrate States could not in the nature of things be confined to themselves, but must affect every member of the body-politic, and the commercial life-blood which flows through them must flow through all and eventually enfeeble all. The South, in her day of pride and prosperity, was the liberal and profitable patron of northern trade and commerce. The profits of northern merchants, dealers, and mechanics, and even farmers, were sought and highly prized. What is that southern trade worth now? What has destroyed those profits and ruined this internal commerce? Let the history of the republican party for the last decade answer that question. But the momentous issue which now presses upon the people North as well as South is, shall this same ruinous policy continue? Shall the oppressive hand still hold us in its iron grip, or shall peace, fraternity, home rule, and prosperity be substituted for the erring policy of the past?

But there is a better and a different use for the Army. That use is principally to protect the border settlements on the frontiers of Texas and in the Territories. A few men, very few, are required to man our forts upon the ocean front; the rest should be conveniently stationed to keep the savage tribes of Indians in subjection and to drive back the cattle thieves and robbers of Mexico on the Rio Grande. Although I do not profess to have any special knowledge of my own on the subject, yet I am assured from unimpeachable sources and from facts now patent to all intelligent men that a much less force than we now have is required for this service.

How many of the United States troops are now on the frontiers? Is it possible that the authorities have withdrawn one single company or soldier necessary to the protection of the helpless settler with his wife and little ones during the past summer and autumn while the presidential election was pending, in order that they might be transported at immense cost to the Government to any of the Southern States to "bull-doze" the voters of those States and carry the election for one of the political parties? If so the blood of those victims will never fade from the page of history which shall record the misdeeds of this Administration. Take away the soldiers from among the people; call constitutional government into power as they are now ready to exercise it by the voice of the people, the moment that Federal power shall loose its clutch; throw the responsibility upon the people for good government, for the protection of the life and property of every human being, and all will be peace, good-will, and prosperity. As proof of this, contrast Southern States under democratic with their condition under republican rule; Georgia under Smith and Colquitt with Georgia under Bullock. But particularly examine the different and much improved condition of affairs in Arkansas under the guiding hand of her patriotic and statesmanlike Garland with the rule of Clayton. No, the people only need to be trusted and they will act wisely and justly.

The number of troops which we need to provide payment for at this time is the number necessary to defend our borders; whatever number is essential to that end I am prepared to vote for and advocate, and not another soldier. Send capital and muscle to the South instead of soldiers if you want peace and prosperity.

The time has arrived when the good of the Republic justifies, in fact demands, that the policy of controlling elections by the bayonet should cease. The rights and privileges of the Southern States, in which military force has been used to set aside the verdict of the people at the ballot for President and Vice-President, are not alone violated. If that were all, those States might linger yet for many years shorn of their equality in the Union; but the correlative rights of all of the other States of the Union are equally affected by the overthrow of constitutional liberty in the Southern States. The people of New York and New England, of the Northwest and of the Pacific slope have been defrauded, while the South has been trodden beneath the iron heel of the oppressor, "with an eye to pity, but no arm to save."

No lower depth of humiliation remains to a people once proud and free than to realize the necessity of having to submit, through long and hopeless years, to a despicable tyranny, which insults while it robs the people, and skulks in craven cowardice the responsibility of its crimes behind the glittering sheen of Federal bayonets. Can constitutional liberty longer endure under bayonet rule or will it assert itself? But why need the South, more than the North, specially repine over the decay, if not the death, of constitutional government in the prostrate States?

It is true theirs has only been a nominal freedom at best since the war, living all the time under duress, restrained by the war prejudices of the northern people from the assertion of their manhood. For twelve long years some of the Southern States have not known self-government or constitutional freedom. And the Army has been used as the main instrument to effect their overthrow and uphold this despotism. Is it longer the policy of the American people to hold any American State bound to the car of carpet-bag rule by the aid of the Army? That is the issue. For one, I repeat it, I will never vote to appropriate money for the support of the Army if that is its mission.

The people of Louisiana and South Carolina cannot be longer fettered by my vote; the Army must be removed from their soil.

The cup so often quaffed by the southern people is this hour commended through the Louisiana returning board and the commission to the northern people. The people of the North are now made familiar with the infamies and tyrannies of the republican party and the Administration at Washington for long years heaped upon the Southern States. That it will be drank in submission I shall not believe until I see it, but that a hurricane of indignation will at the next election sweep these usurpers from power I have not the least doubt. I know the people South are growing weary, and well they may; hope deferred maketh the heart sick, but the ways of peace are the paths of victory to the democracy, and time will yet vindicate the truth.

Mr. BANNING. Mr. Speaker, the bill to fix the pay and allowance of Army officers, which was reported from the Military Committee, passed this House in March of the last session of this Congress. That bill made the following reductions in the pay and allowances of Army officers:

First. It reduces the pay and allowances of the General of the Army from $18,081.91 to $10,000, thus saving to the Government $8,081.91. I do not think it necessary for me to stop to argue the propriety of this reduction or the sufficiency of the remaining salary of $10,000. It is double that of a Senator, 25 per cent. more than that of a Cabinet officer or a supreme judge, and as much as a proper performance of our duties will admit of our giving the distinguished commander of our armies.

Second. The bill reduces the pay and allowances of the Lieutenant-General from $13,593.86 to $8,000 a year, saving $5,593.86; leaving the Lieutenant-General a salary which is 60 per cent. more than the salary of a Senaror, being a salary for life, equal to that of a Cabinet officer.

Third. The bill reduces the pay and allowances of a major-general from $10,093 to $6,000, saving on the pay of three major-generals $12,281.56; leaving the annual pay of the major-general $1,000 more than the pay of a Senator, which is an ample compensation for these officers.

Fourth. This bill reduces the pay of the brigadier-general from $7,613 to $5,000 per annum, saving on the pay of fourteen brigadier-generals $35,781.13; leaving the pay of each the same as the pay of a Senator, making a saving on the general officers' pay of $60,000.46 annually.

The pay proper of the colonel, lieutenant-colonel, major, captain, and first lieutenants is not changed. These are the hard-working officers of the Army, many of them having been general officers in the war; men who led their commands in action; whose long and faithful service entitles them to the highest consideration, whose pay proper is not too large, and, in the opinion of the committee, should not be reduced.

The bill reduces the pay and allowances of all second-lieutenants $200 per annum for the first four years of their service, fixing the salary at $1,200 not mounted and $1,300 mounted. This amount is, in the opinion of the committee, a fair compensation for young, inexperienced officers of this grade. The amount is sufficient for their support, and the testimony of experienced soldiers is that small salaries are best for young officers who know but little of the real value of money. It teaches them to avoid extravagance and practice economy. This pay is more than the average earnings of young men just starting in civil life. It is estimated that this reduction will make a saving of $25,000 per annum.

Sixth. The chaplains' pay is reduced from $1,500 per annum to $1,200 per annum. This will make a saving of $10,200.

Seventh. The repeal of the statute authorizing regimental adjutants and quartermasters to be extra lieutenants is recommended by many experienced officers of the Army and by the Secretary of War. It is a reduction of eighty officers, who, as extra adjutants and quartermasters, are not needed, and is a saving of $121,700 annually.

Eighth. The reduction of the rent of officers' quarters from $18 per room per month to $12 per month it is estimated by the Quartermaster's Department will save $107,839.30 annually, and leave allowances to officers for quarters as follows: To a colonel, $60 per month when on detail; to a lieutenant-colonel, $48 per month; to a captain, $36; and to a lieutenant, $24.

Ninth. The estimated saving in fuel is $5,996.16 per annum. The reduction of the number of horses allowed officers and preventing officers drawing forage for any horses except such as are actually owned, kept, and used in the service, it is estimated, will make a saving in forage of $140,000. Add to these items the savings made in reduction in amount of transportation, pay, and allowances of extra lieutenants as adjutants and quartermasters, and it will be found that the passage of the bill will save more than $500,000 annually.

These reductions of pay and allowances left the Army officer well and handsomely paid; better paid than they were paid during the war; better paid than the officers of any army in the world, and 50 per cent. more salary than they would average if they were reduced to the necessity of earning their living as civilians.

This bill, the passage of which would save the Government near a half million of dollars annually, is yet pending in the Senate.

Add to this the non-commissioned staff unattached to regiments—114 ordnance-sergeants and 148 commissary-sergeants, 200 hospital stewards, 60 sergeants, 96 corporals—and we have the commissioned and non-commissioned staff.

We have 10 regiments of cavalry; which are made up of 10 colonels, 10 lieutenant-colonels, 30 majors, 120 captains. 10 adjutants, and 10 quartermasters with the rank of lieutenant, 120 first lieutenants, 120 second lieutenants, 10 sergeant-majors, 10 quartermaster-sergeants, 10 chief musicians, 10 saddler-sergeants, 10 chief trumpeters, 120 first sergeants, 600 sergeants, 408 corporals, 240 trumpeters, 240 farriers and blacksmiths, 120 saddlers, 120 wagoners, 6,480 privates, 432 commissioned officers; being a total of 8,082 officers and men in our cavalry service.

We have 5 regiments of artillery; consisting of 5 colonels, 5 lieutenant-colonels, 15 majors, 60 captains, 5 adjutants, and 5 quartermasters, 120 first lieutenants, 65 second lieutenants, 5 sergeant-majors, 5 quartermaster-sergeants, 5 chief musicians, and 10 principal musicians; 60 first sergeants, 250 sergeants, 250 corporals, 120 musicians, 120 artificers, 60 wagoners, 1,725 privates, 280 commissioned officers; total, 2,880. We have 25 regiments of infantry; consisting of 25 colonels, 25 lieutenant-colonels, 25 majors, 250 captains, 25 adjutants, and 25 quartermasters, 250 first lieutenants, 250 second lieutenants, 25 sergeant-majors, 25 quartermaster-sergeants, 25 chief musicians, 50 principal musicians, 250 first sergeants, 1,000 sergeants, 1,000 corporals, 500 musicians, 500 artificers, 250 wagoners, 8,460 privates, 877 commissioned officers; making a total in the infantry of 12,085 non-commissioned officers and privates.

At our Military Academy we have 9 professors and 300 cadets. Add to these statements 300 Indian scouts, and we have the make-up of our Army.

An examination of these figures shows that our Army needs to be reorganized; that it is more an army of officers than an army of men; that the regiments and companies are mere skeletons, and that consolidation of regiments and companies is demanded, required, and necessary to make our Army what it should be, efficient and useful. We have 45 regimental organizations fully officered.

In these there are enough officers to command 60,000 troops, we have but 25,000, of whom only 16,665 are private soldiers.

On the subject of consolidation, General Sheridan has said:

If you increase the size of the companies you diminish the expense. One great item of expense at present arises from the fact that the companies are so small as to be non-effective. In order to get an effective body of men for any purpose, it is necessary to take three or four companies from different places. That kind of management is, of course, expensive; and that is what we are obliged to resort to at present.

And Captain Corbin, of the Army, in his examination says:

Question. Have you any information or opinion that you can give the committee on the question of consolidation?

Answer. I do not know that I have, except that I think the efficiency of the Army would be greatly enhanced by increasing the size of the companies. I think that the trouble we labor under now with the present company organization of infantry is that it is too small. I believe the maximum is fifty men, and after you take out the non-commissioned officers and the cook, and allow for the sick and the prisoners in the guard-house and the men who are detailed to drive the teams, it leaves hardly any men in the company for duty. I do not think the company organization should consist of less than one hundred men, either in time of peace or time of war, either for active operations or for purposes of instruction. It is rather stupid work for an officer to go out and drill four men. After having been a captain for ten years, I have frequently gone out with only four men. It is very hard to make an entertainment of that kind partake of the nature of a military movement. We go on parade duty regularly, to be sure, but the men look upon it as a kind of farce. I have seen a captain go on parade with only his sergeant, the captain forming the front line and the sergeant the rear. The officer cannot take as much interest in that as if he had a hundred men to look after. I think, therefore, it would tend greatly to the efficiency of the Army if you were to increase the companies, even if he had to assign more officers. A company of one hundred men with five officers would be much more efficient than two companies of fifty men each with six officers. Then, the internal administration of a company of one hundred men requires no more sergeants or cooks or commissary-sergeants than a company of fifty men. It is, however, more trouble for an officer to take care of and drill a hundred men than fifty. So, probably, if the companies were increased in size, it would be well to increase the number of officers. I have been told by officers of our Army who have visited Europe that they were greatly impressed with the difference in the size of the companies, and General Hazen and other officers who are capable of judging have told me that that was about the only advantage the European armies had over ours. A company there means a hundred or a hundred and fifty efficient men.

Q. Then, if consolidations and reductions must be made, you would recommend the consolidation of the companies into larger ones?

A. I would, most assuredly. I think if we are to have but 20,000 men in the Army, the larger the companies are made the more service our commanders can get out of the troops, and I think you will find that that is the testimony of most of the officers. I know if I were to go to command a post of a hundred men I would rather have one company of a hundred than two companies of fifty men each, because it would give me more men for active duty. To maintain a company organization you have to have a certain number of men who are useless as soldiers, being engaged on other duty; for instance, four of the best men in your company are taken up as sergeants, so that in two companies of fifty men each there are eight sergeants, and in a company of a hundred there would be just the same number; and the same is true of the musicians, cooks, company clerks, and commissary-sergeants. Then, the property of a large company is just as easily looked after as that of a small one, and one man can do the work as efficiently as two.

I know it is said that we only want a skeleton army and that we must educate officers to have them ready for war if it should come. This is perhaps true to some extent, but unfortunately for our Army the figures which I have produced show that too many of our officers are being educated in the staff, in the Quartermaster's, Subsistence,

Medical, Pay, and Signal Departments, where the tables show it requires more rank to purchase army boots and clothing, distribute hard tack, prescribe quinine, keep accounts, and signal the weather, than it does to command a battalion or meet the enemy and put him to flight.

The staff of our Army, although composed generally of good men, is entirely too large and stationed in large cities, where rents are high and living expensive. It is composed of too many departments or bureaus, too many officers, and is too expensive.

The Quartermaster's and Subsistence Departments should be consolidated, the Bureau of Military Justice abolished, the aids-de-camp reduced in number and in rank, the Pay Department reduced to twenty-five officers, the Signal Service transferred to the Coast Survey and attached to that scientific department. The thirty post-chaplains should be subject to re-appointment and confirmation every four years; then the complaints against them, such as are found in the reports of officers to the Military Committee of last session, would cease. The retired list of the Army should be examined, in order to determine whether any officers on that list are fit for the active list.

Our officers educated at West Point should have an opportunity to review their studies in teaching the soldiers at all posts as they are now taught in the French and German armies, thus to elevate the standard of the soldiers of our Army and prepare them for usefulness in the event of war and for promotion, to which they should be encouraged to aspire. The pay of the sergeant-major, quartermaster-sergeant, and first sergeant should be increased so that these hard-worked men may receive a better remuneration for their labor.

Mr. Speaker, I allude to these much-needed reforms in our Army and am glad to be able to say that if they are not made it is no fault of this House. The bills providing for them passed early in last session, and they are now pending in the Senate.

The pay bill, which has passed this House, if passed to a law would make a saving of nearly half a million of dollars annually. The reorganization bill, which has passed this House, if passed to a law would result in an immediate saving of $387,433.44, and an ultimate annual saving of $1,166,257.76, and make great and much-needed reforms in the management of the Army.

Mr. Speaker, I hold in my hand an abstract of the distribution and location of all the troops in our regular Army. This table shows the following distribution of troops: In Kentucky, 4 officers and 41 men; Missouri, 6 officers and 616 men; Tennessee, 4 officers and 40 men; Alabama, 2 officers and 20 men; Arkansas, 4 officers and 43 men; Virginia, 10 officers and 88 men; Georgia, 18 officers and 185 men; Florida, 36 officers and 256 men; South Carolina, 111 officers and 1,132 men; Louisiana, 91 officers and 1,300 men; North Carolina, 11 officers and 113 men; Texas, 192 officers and 2,933 men; making a total of 489 officers and 6,767 men in the Southern States.

In the Territories there are 710 officers and 12,235 men. In the District of Columbia are 51 officers and 720 men. The balance of the troops are located in the Northern and Western States.

In this connection, Mr. Speaker, I desire to call the attention of the House to the fact that in addition to our Army of 25,000 men we have a militia force in the United States, according to the last report, which I hold in my hand, and print with the permission of the House as a part of my remarks, of 2,875,469 available men for military duty. Of these, 98,865 are organized. In the abstract will be found a statement of the State organizations compiled at the Adjutant-General's Office of these militia organizations.

THE OBJECT OF OUR ARMY.

Mr. Speaker, there is a strange confusion in the minds of the people, shared by some eminent officials, as to what are the uses for which our regular Army was created and what the duties and responsibilities of the individual officer or private.

For the functions to be performed by the Army we must look to the "Constitution and the laws of the United States which shall be made in pursuance thereof," which are declared by article 6 of that instrument to be "the supreme law of the land."

We find in section 2 of article 2 that—

The President shall be commander-in-chief of the Army and Navy of the United States and of the militia of the several States when called into the actual service of the United States.

But as such commander-in-chief he has no other or further powers than such as may by act of Congress agreeably to the provisions of the Constitution be devolved upon him.

The power to declare war; to provide and maintain a navy; to make rules for the government and regulation of the land and naval forces; to provide for calling forth the militia to execute the laws of the Union, suppress insurrection, and repel invasions; to provide for organizing, arming, and disciplining the militia, &c., and all other powers connected with the Army and Navy except the single one before quoted are vested in the Congress of the United States. The Army can be used for national purposes to execute the laws of the Union, suppress insurrection, and repel invasions, and also aid the States, under section 4 of article 4, "to protect each of them against invasion, and on application of the Legislature, or of the executive when the Legislature cannot be convened, against domestic violence." The manner and occasion of such use, however, are not discretionary with the President as commander-in-chief, but are clearly defined by acts of Congress.

In relation to the use of the Army in the aid of the State governments, by the act of February 28, 1795, and March 3, 1807, (section 5297, Revised Statutes United States,) it is provided that—

In case of an insurrection in any State against the government thereof it shall be lawful for the President, on application of the Legislature of such State, or of the executive when the Legislature cannot be convened, to call forth such number of the militia of any other State or States which may be applied for as he deems sufficient to suppress such insurrection; or, on like application, to employ for the same purposes such part of the land and naval forces of the United States as he deems necessary.

Section 5300, Revised Statutes United States, (act of February 28, 1795,) provides that—

Whenever in the judgment of the President it becomes necessary to use the military forces under this title the President shall forthwith, by proclamation, command the insurgents to disperse and retire peaceably to their respective abodes within a limited time.

The first occasion on which it became necessary to consider the propriety of exercising these most important constitutional and legal functions arose in the year 1842, under the administration of President Tyler, in the case of the Dorr rebellion in Rhode Island. Daniel Webster was then Secretary of State, and matters growing out of the relations between the Federal Government and the several States of the Union were conducted through the State Department. In those days the Attorney-General of the United States was not claimed to be, as he now is, the virtual commander-in-chief of the Army. The circumstances of the case briefly stated are as follows:

In 1842 a large majority of the people of Rhode Island, acting outside of the forms of law, established a state government and elected Thomas W. Dorr their governor. On the 4th of April, 1842, Samuel W. King, legal governor of Rhode Island, addressed the President of the United States, stating that "the State of Rhode Island is threatened with domestic violence," that the Legislature could not be convened, and calling upon the President for "the protection which is required by the Constitution of the United States."

In another letter of the same date addressed to the President, Governor King recited the facts which led him to make the application for Federal assistance and requested that "such precautionary measures may be taken by the Government of the United States as may afford us that protection which the Constitution of the United States requires." * * * "The Government of the United States has the power to prevent as well as to defend us from violence. The protection provided by the Constitution of the United States will not be effectual unless such precautionary measures may be taken as are necessary to prevent lawless men from breaking out into violence as well as to protect the State from further violence after it has broken out." President Tyler, in a communication prepared by Daniel Webster, declined to interfere. He said, "For the regulation of my conduct on any interposition which I may be called upon to make between the government of a State and any portion of the citizens who may assail it with domestic violence, or may be in actual insurrection against it, I can only look to the Constitution and laws of the United States, which plainly declare the obligations of the executive department, and leave it no alternative as to the course it shall pursue." After reciting section 4 of article 4 of the Constitution and the acts of 1795 and 1807, before quoted, he said:

By a careful consideration of the above recited acts of Congress, your excellency will not fail to see that no power is vested in the Executive of the United States to anticipate insurrectionary movements against the government of Rhode Island, so as to sustain the interposition of the military authority; but that there must be an actual insurrection, manifested by lawless assemblages of the people or otherwise, to whom a proclamation may be addressed, and who may be required to betake themselves to their respective abodes.

On the 4th of May, 1842, the Legislature of Rhode Island passed resolutions calling upon the President for assistance to suppress the insurrection against the State, and reciting that—

A portion of the people of this State, for the purpose of subverting the laws and existing government thereof, have framed a pretended constitution, and for the same unlawful purposes have met in lawless assemblages and elected officers for the future government of this State; and whereas the persons so elected, in violation of law, but in conformity to the said pretended constitution, have, on the 3d day of May instant, organized themselves into executive and legislative departments of government, and under oath assumed the duties and exercise of said powers; and whereas, in order to prevent the due execution of the laws, a strong military force was called out, and did array themselves to protect the said unlawful organization of government and to set at defiance the due enforcement of the laws.

Did the President then interfere? No, sir; he still declined, and in a letter dated May 7, gave the best of reasons for so doing. He says "that he has information that leads him to believe that the danger of domestic violence is hourly diminishing."

I freely confess—

He says—

that I should experience great reluctance in employing the military power of this Government against any portion of the people; but, however painful the duty, I have to assure your excellency that if resistance be made to the execution of the laws of Rhode Island by such force as the civil posse shall be unable to overcome, it will be the duty of this Government to enforce the constitutional guarantee.

On the 9th of May, 1842, the President addressed Governor King of Rhode Island a letter, in which he counsoled peaceful measures.

Why urge matters—

He says—

to an extremity? If you succeed by the bayonet you succeed against your own fellow-citizens, and by the shedding of kindred blood. * * * A resort to force will engender for years to come feelings of animosity.

On the 25th of May Governor King addressed the President, stating that the Dorr government, in addition to companies of men in Rhode Island, was organizing bands of men in Massachusetts, Connecticut, and New York. Therefore Governor King asked for the interposition of the Federal authority, and that the President might place a sufficient body of troops in the State, "to be subject to the requisition of the executive of this State whenever, in his opinion, the exigency of the case should require their assistance."

This request the President declined, in a letter dated the 28th of May, in which he said, "Should the necessity of the case require the interposition of the authority of the United States, it will be rendered in the manner prescribed by the laws."

On the 29th of June the President of the United States being informed "that the difficulties in Rhode Island have arrived at a crisis" which require the interposition of Federal authority in support of the State, directed the Secretary of War to proceed to Rhode Island and in the event of the necessary requisition being made by the governor of Rhode Island to issue a proclamation prepared by Daniel Webster, Secretary of State, and signed by Webster and the President, "commanding all insurgents and all persons connected with the insurrection to disband." This proclamation however was never issued, the Dorr rebellion having been suppressed by the State authorities.

In compliance with a resolution of the House of Representatives of the 23d of March, 1844, (Executive Document No. 225) the President informed the House "that the Executive did not deem it his duty to interfere with the naval and military forces of the United States in the late disturbance in Rhode Island; that no orders were issued for the employment of troops in that State except to strengthen the garrison at Fort Adams; that no orders were given to any officer or officers of the Army or Navy to report themselves to the charter government; that the Executive was at no time convinced that the casus fœderis had arisen which required the interposition of the military or naval power." Taking strong ground against the interference of the Executive in State questions, he said:

Actuated by selfish motives, he (the Executive) might become the great agitator, fomenting assault upon the State constitutions and declaring the majority of to-day to be the minority of to-morrow, and the minority in its turn the majority, before whose decrees the established order of things in the State should be subverted. Revolution, civil commotion, and bloodshed would be the inevitable consequences. The provision in the Constitution intended for the security of the States would thus be turned into the instrument of their destruction; the President would become in fact the great constitution-maker for the States and all power would be vested in his hands.

It will be seen upon a thorough examination of this case that President Tyler, acting under the advice of Daniel Webster, denied the power of the Federal Government to interfere in a cause of merely "threatened domestic violence" or to "anticipate insurrectionary movements" against the State, but claimed that there must be an "actual insurrection" and "lawless assemblages to whom a proclamation may be addressed;" that resistance must first be made to the execution of the laws of the State by such force as the civil posse shall be unable to overcome; that he could not place any part of the Army of the United States subject to the orders of the State executive to be used whenever in his opinion the exigency of the case should require, and that a proclamation must first be addressed to the insurgents demanding them to disperse.

How different has been the practice under the present administration of ou Government. At Columbia and New Orleans United States troops have been placed under the orders of State executives and of subordinate State officers without previous proclamations and without any lawless assemblages against whom to direct them. There has been a constant and persistent interference in State matters by the Army; State Legislatures legally elected have been dispersed; troops have been used as a police to protect State returning boards in the perpetration of frauds, without any regard to the requirements of the acts of Congress regulating the manner and occasion of such interposition, and in defiance of law and the decisions of the highest tribunal in the land. The Army has been used as a State constabulary. In Louisiana to-day the Army of the United States is engaged in keeping the peace between two State governments, neither of which has been recognized by the President, and in inducting into office from time to time different State officers who have been removed from their offices, and their interference is continued, not upon the ground that either State government is the lawful one, but because the Army has been directed by the President to preserve the present chaotic condition of affairs in that State until he shall make up his mind which State government to recognize.

And yet, sir, the President, when called to an account for the use of troops in Louisiana, as far back as 1874, said in his message to Congress, dated January 13, 1875:

I am well aware that any military interference by the officers or troops of the United States with the organization of a State Legislature or any of its proceedings, or with any civil department of the Government, is repugnant to our ideas of government. I can conceive of no case not involving rebellion or insurrection where such interference by authority of the General Government ought to be permitted or can be justified.

Notwithstanding such expressions of opinion by the President, our Army, degraded from its high position of the defenders of the country from foreign and domestic foes, has been used as a police; has taken possession of polls and controlled elections; has been sent with fixed bayonets into the halls of State Legislatures in time of peace and under the pretense of threatened outbreak; has been placed under the control of subordinate State officials, and, under the instructions of the Attorney-General, has been notified to obey the orders of deputy United States marshals, "general and special," appointed in swarms to do dirty work in a presidential campaign. I call your attention to the late order of the Attorney-General concerning the recent use of the Army during the elections, from which I quote the following paragraphs:

In this connection I advise that you and each of your deputies, general and special, have a right to summon to your assistance in preventing and quelling disorder, every person in the district above fifteen years of age, whatever may be their occupation, whether civilians or not, and including the military of all denominations, militia soldiers, marines, all of whom are alike bound to obey you. The fact that they are organized as military bodies, (whether of the State or of the United States,) under the immediate command of their own officers, does not in any wise affect their legal character. They are still the posse comitatus. I prefer to quote the above statement of the law upon this point from an opinion by my predecessor, Attorney-General Cushing, because it thus appears to have been well settled for many years, (6 Opinions, 466; May 27, 1854.) I need hardly add that there can be no State law or State official in this country who has jurisdiction to oppose you in discharging your official duties under the laws of the United States. If such interference shall take place, (a thing not anticipated,) you are to disregard it entirely. The laws of the United States are supreme, and so, consequently, is the action of officials of the United States in enforcing them. There is, as virtually you have already been told, no officer of a State whom you may not by summons embody in your own posse, and any State posse already embodied by a sheriff will, with such sheriff, be obliged upon your summons to become a part of a United States posse, and obey you or your deputy acting virtute offici.

The Attorney-General based his authority for such use of the Army upon an opinion of Attorney-General Cushing, given on the 27th of May, 1854, concerning the enforcement of the fugitive-slave law, an opinion questionable at best, but strangely perverted by the Attorney-General. What Attorney-General Cushing says is merely that being a soldier of the United States does not exempt a man from being called upon by the proper authorities to act like any other citizen as a part of a posse comitatus. He nowhere intimates that the soldier as a part of the Army or that the Army as such shall be used by a marshal in direct violation of the Constitution.

From this opinion of Attorney-General Cushing, which, as I have said, the Attorney-General strangely perverts, he draws the most extraordinary conclusions. Under his opinion issued as order No. 96, any marshal of the United States, or deputy or special marshal, may, upon his own private judgment, order any officer, even the General of the Army, to obey his command.

The General of the Army seems to have held very different views, for in his order to the Army promulgating it he so modified this opinion of the Attorney-General that he occupies precisely the same grounds that I advocate. I take pleasure in calling your attention to what he says. It reads as follows:

The obligation of the military (individual officers and soldiers) in common with all citizens to obey the summons of a marshal or sheriff must be held subordinate to their paramount duty as members of a permanent military body. However, the troops can act only in their proper organized capacity, under their own officers, and in obedience to the immediate orders of those officers. The officer commanding troops summoned to the aid of a marshal or sheriff must also judge for himself and upon his own official responsibility whether the service required of him is lawful and necessary and compatible with the proper discharge of his ordinary military duties, and must limit his action absolutely to proper aid in execution of the awful precept exhibited to him by the marshal or sheriff.

This carefully worded instruction of General Sherman reminds one of the better days of the Republic.

Concerning the powers of the United States in connection with matters relating solely to the States, and not by the Constitution placed under the paramount control of the United States, it may not be amiss to refer to the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Cruikshank, 2 Otto, page 542. Mr. Chief-Justice Waite delivered the opinion of the court, (declaring the enforcement act of 1870 unconstitutional,) from which I quote the following paragraph, which will be found on page 556:

Certainly it will not be claimed that the United States have the power or are required to do mere police duty in the States. If a State cannot protect itself against domestic violence, the United States may, upon the call of the Executive, when the Legislature cannot be convened, lend their assistance for that purpose. This is a guarantee of the Constitution, (article 4, section 4,) but it applies to no case like this.

BLIND OBEDIENCE.

As a fit accompaniment of these lawless uses to which the Army has been put, a new and dangerous doctrine has been advanced that the duty of the soldier is blind obedience to the orders of his superior. Such a doctrine, destructive of all law and endangering the very existence of government, has never prevailed in this country, nor in Great Britain, from which nation our military code is derived.

Article 21 of the Articles of War provides that "any officer or soldier who disobeys any lawful command of his superior officer shall suffer death, or such other punishment as a court-martial may direct."

Article 4 of the Articles for the Government of the Navy provides that "the punishment of death, or such other punishment as a court-martial may adjudge, may be inflicted on any person in the naval service" who "disobeys the lawful orders of his superior officer."

Nowhere is any punishment prescribed for the officer or soldier who disobeys unlawful orders. There is no obligation resting upon the soldier to obey an unlawful order; on the contrary, like the private citizen, he is bound to obey and respect the laws of the land, and an unlawful order from a superior affords him no immunity from punishment. The responsibility rests as well upon him who executes the unlawful order as upon him who issues it. These principles are sustained by English and American writers on military law, as well as by the decisions of the courts in both countries.

The oath of office taken by the officer of the Army and Navy is the same as that taken by persons elected or appointed to any civil office of honor or profit, except the President. It is (section 1756, Revised Statutes of the United States) that he "will support and defend the Constitution of the United States against all enemies, foreign and domestic, and bear true faith and allegiance to the same."

As well then insist that it is the duty of the civil officer to obey an unlawful order of his superior as that the Army or Navy officer is so bound.

The oath taken by the private soldier (article 2, Articles of War) is:

I will obey the orders of the President of the United States and the orders of the officers appointed over me, according to the Rules and Articles of War.

Now, the Articles of War, as well as the Articles for the Government of the Navy, show him that he is to obey the lawful orders only of his superior, and they show him the penalty for such disobedience.

Before going into an examination of the authorities, let us turn back the pages of history and see for what grave reasons the word "lawful" was inserted in the English mutiny acts.

During the great English rebellion the contending armies adopted military codes nearly identical, which resulted substantially in Prince Rupert's code of 1672. This was the parent of the code now regulating the army and navy of Great Britain, which, so far as then extant, was substantially adopted by the United States, first in 1775, and again in 1806.

Under the English code of 1715 "every officer or soldier who should refuse to obey the military orders of his superior officer" was liable to capital punishment. Speaking of this, Clode, in his work on Military Law, (edition 1872, page 57,) says:

The army being then under the personal command of a sovereign absolutely irresponsible—for according to our constitutional theory he could do no wrong—the danger of this enactment was not exaggerated by the Lords when in their protest they declared it to be a violation of the fundamental laws of the realm, "by which the commands or orders of the Crown are bound and restrained within the compass of the law, no person being obliged to obey them if illegal, but punishable by the law should he do so, notwithstanding such orders or commands proceed from the king."

So that it will be seen in England as early as 1715 it was held by the House of Lords that even in the absence of the word "lawful" in the English mutiny acts the soldier was punishable by the common law for the commission of an illegal act, although he had the orders of the Crown to do it. Continuing the same subject, Clode says:

The alterations made in the act of 1718 placed some limitation upon this penal obedience by using the words "who shall refuse to obey any lawful commands of his superior officer." In 1733 the increase of the army was opposed by several speakers mainly from the danger to which this authority over the army exposed the state. Discontent continued to be expressed, until in the year of 1749, after an angry debate, the words were altered thus: "To disobey any lawful command of his superior officer," which now stands in the military code of 1872.

The words used in our Articles of War are who "disobeys the lawful command of his superior officer," and in the Articles for the Government of the Navy who "disobeys the lawful orders of his superior officer."

No successful attempt has yet been made to explain away the word "lawful" thus inserted, after repeated debate, in the military code.

Among the English authorities on this point, I quote the following:

So general is the rule that the order of a superior shall be imperative in the military inferior that it will not admit of exception unless when the orders or the thing commanded to be done are directly contrary to law.—Houga's Precedents on Military Law, page 104.

So general is the rule that the orders of a superior shall be imperative in a military inferior that it will admit not of exception unless in the instance when the orders, or, more accurately speaking the things commanded to be done, are directly repugnant or contrary to law. In the case only where the orders would afford no legal excuse in a court of law for the act committed under them can the inferior hesitate to obey the commands he receives from his superior.—Samuel's Military Law, page 284.

To disobey the unlawful command of a superior officer is undoubtedly lawful.—Simmons on Courts-Martial, page 207.

If death ensue from the fire of a soldier acting under the orders of his superior, the command itself being illegal, such order would be no justification of the deed in the eye of the common law. And the individual who was the instrument of the death would, with him directing the act by which it was effected, be equally guilty of murder.—Ibid., page 227.

And therefore it is lawful, in a military sense, to disobey an unlawful command of a superior.—Ibid., page 229.

To carry the principle of blind obedience to the full extent to which, by easy deduction, it may be extended; to omit or render nugatory the word "lawful," inserted in the mutiny act, would not only degrade the British soldier in his own eyes and in the estimation of his fellow-citizens, but might lay the foundation of a superstructure dangerous, if not fatal, to the constitution itself."—Ibid., page 230.

On a trial arising out of the Newsonbury affair, at Wrexford, in July, 1831, before Chief-Justice Bushe and Judge Johnstone, the following conversation is reported to have taken place:

Sir WILLIAM COX, (a grand juror.) My lord, I would wish to ask your lordship one question: if a military body be called out, and if the commander give the order to fire, whether those acting under his command are exempt from the consequences?

His LORDSHIP. My opinion is that no subject of the king is bound to obey an illegal order, and if an officer give an illegal order those who obey him are not, in my opinion, exempt.

JUROR. Then, my lord, is the soldier to be the judge for himself in the case, whether he is to obey the order or not?

His LORDSHIP. I suppose so.

[This remark of the learned judge caused much discussion among military men; but there appears nothing new in the opinion. There can be no doubt of its being the law of England.—Author, 1835.]

Hickman, chapter 17, quotes case of Sutton vs. Johnson, (1 D and E, 501,) in which it was decided that—

It cannot be disobedience when obedience is impracticable or legally improper, for the term implies a crime, whereas there can be no criminality in omitting to do what is physically impossible or forbidden by law. The court-martial cannot, however, justify disobedience to a lawful command under any circumstances.

In the case of Mostyn vs. Febrigas, 1 Cowper, 180, Lord Mansfield quoted the case of Captain Gambier, decided by him. Admiral Boscawan ordered Captain Gambier to pull down the houses of certain sutlers on the coast of Nova Scotia who supplied the navy and sailors with spirituous liquors. The order was made by the admiral in good faith and executed by Captain Gambier. The result was a suit by the sutler against Captain Gambier and a verdict for £1,000 damages, besides heavy costs. This case is quoted by the Supreme Court of the United States in 13 Howard, 132, and the principles therein decided re-affirmed.

From these English authorities the following principles appear:

First. The soldier is not punishable by the military law for disobedience of "unlawful" orders.

Second. He is punishable by the common law, just as the citizen is, and the plea of orders of his superior, the orders being illegal, would be no justification: the officer giving the orders and the soldier who executes them are alike punishable; and this is true even where death results from the execution of an illegal order, as well as where the rights of property are invaded.

AMERICAN AUTHORITIES.

Among American authorities in regard to this question are the following:

That there must be some limit to this obedience the safety of society imperatively requires, and it is for the Legislature to ascertain and fix this boundary. The article therefore confines the criminalities of disobedience to the case of lawful orders. An unlawful order, being a direct opposition to the commands of the State, can compel no obedience. * * * Still, if the illegality of an order be made out to the satisfaction of the court, the plea is good and the accused must be acquitted. There is no recognizable principle on which submission to unlawful orders can be legally compelled.—O'Brien on Courts-Martial, page 82, ed. 1846.)

The principle of conduct is that illegal orders are not obligatory. This must appear as a consequence to the purposes of military service, and that all orders are given in furtherance of the objects contemplated by the laws creating and concerning the military establishment.—De Hart's Military Law, page 165.

See also Harwood on Naval Court-Martial, pages 118, 119:

The Judge-Advocate General (Digest of Opinions, edition 1868, page 5) decided that "the laws of the service inflict no punishment upon an officer who disobeys a command of his superior which is contrary to law. The right exists at all times to refuse obedience to such an order, and it may become an imperative duty to do so."

However meritorious and patriotic the motive which induces the officer to order an illegal act, or the subordinate to execute it, neither can escape the penalty.

DECISION OF THE SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES.

This principle is laid down very clearly in the case of Mitchell vs. Harmony, (13 Howard, Supreme Court of the United States,) before referred to. The history of that case is briefly as follows:

Before the commencement of hostilities in Mexico, Harmony planned a trading expedition to Santa Fé, New Mexico, and Chihuahua. When war commenced Kearney prepared an expedition to invade New Mexico, and prevented Harmony from proceeding in advance of the expedition, but permitted him to fall in the rear. Colonel Doniphan succeeded Kearney in command, and when Doniphan moved on the city of Chihuahua Harmony refused to go any further. Whereupon Doniphan ordered Colonel Mitchell to compel Harmony, with his trains, &c., to continue with the army, which order Mitchell executed. When Chihuahua was evacuated Harmony's property was unavoidably left behind, and was confiscated by the Mexicans. Harmony sued Mitchell in the circuit court of the United States for the southern district of New York, and recovered a judgment for $95,855.38, which was sustained by the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mitchell pleaded the usual "military necessity" of the order, upon which point the Supreme Court was very clear. They say, (page 135:)

The movement upon Chihuahua was undoubtedly undertaken from high and patriotic motives. It was boldly planned and gallantly executed, and contributed to the successful issue of the war. * * * The question here is whether the law permits it [private property] to be taken to insure the success of any enterprise against the public enemy which the commanding officer may deem it advisable to undertake. And we think it very clear the law does not permit it.

Quoting and approving the Gambier case, the court say:

The motive was evidently a commendable one, and the act done for the public service; yet it was an invasion of the rights of private property, and without the authority of law, and the officer who executed the order was held liable to an action, and the sutler recovered damages against him to the value of the property destroyed. This case shows how carefully the rights of private property are guarded by the laws of England.

Another plea of Mitchell's was:

Fifth, that he (defendant) acted in obedience to the order of his commanding officer, and therefore is not liable.

The court deemed the plea as worthy of very little consideration. They say, (p. 137:)

The fifth point may be disposed of in a few words. * * * The order given was an order to do an illegal act, to commit a trespass upon the property of another, and can afford no justification to the person by whom it was executed. The case of Captain Gambier, (1 Cowper, page 180,) to which we have just referred, is directly in point. And upon principle, independent of the weight of judicial authority, it can never be maintained that a military officer can justify himself in doing an unlawful act by producing the order of his superior.

Thus it has been seen that "the custom of the service" and "the supreme law of the land," as interpreted by the Judge Advocate-General and the Supreme Court of the United States, relieve the soldiers from obeying an "unlawful" order, and punish him for any wrong committed in obeying an unlawful order.

Mr. ATKINS. I desire to make a statement to the House before I offer a motion which I think is proper to be made if we are to pass this bill at this session.

Mr. HAMILTON, of New Jersey. I rise to a question of order. There is so much confusion in the Hall that we cannot hear what is said by the gentleman from Tennessee.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is inclined to think that most of the noise comes from those in the rear of the seats of members. Unless gentlemen in the rear of the seats are seated, the Chair will cause the lobby to be vacated.

Mr. ATKINS. The session is so far advanced, and so many of the appropriation bills are behind, that if they are to be passed this session it will be necessary, in my opinion, so far at least as the Army appropriation bill is concerned, to have it passed under a suspension of the rules. Before I make that motion I desire to say that there are two or three radical propositions in the bill; two I may say. There is one proposition in the bill that is not so radical; it is this: In this bill, for the purpose of saving clerical hire and for the greater convenience of the service, especially in the quartermaster's department, we have condensed into one appropriating clause the appropriations for regular supplies, incidental expenses, transportation, barracks, and quarters.

The Committee on Appropriations deemed that amendment, or rather that form of the bill, very important for the convenience of the department and for the administration of this arm of the service.

Mr. THORNBURGH. Will my colleague allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. ATKINS. Certainly.

Mr. THORNBURGH. Was the Committee on Military Affairs of this House consulted in regard to that question?

Mr. ATKINS. I do not know that they were; but I do not suppose any member of the Committee on Military Affairs will object to it, and it is earnestly recommended by the Quartermaster-General.

The two most important features of the bill are, first, that it is based upon the number of 17,000 enlisted men; and, second, the provision it contains that the appropriations made by the bill shall not be used for the purposes of sustaining by the Army any State government in any State. This has particular reference to the Packard government and to the Nicholls government in the State of Louisiana. But certainly the terms of the proposition are so broad as to embrace every State or any State.

These, sir, are the principal features of the bill that make it vary or differ from the usual Army appropriation bill.

I move to suspend the rules and put the bill upon its passage.

Mr. WALLING. I desire to ask the gentleman from Tennessee one question. Does this bill by its provisions reduce the rank and file of the Army?

Mr. ATKINS. It does.

Mr. WALLING. To what extent?

Mr. ATKINS. From 27,500 to 17,000.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. WALLING, (interrupting.) I have an amendment which I propose to offer.

Mr. ATKINS. The bill is not before the House for amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman cannot interrupt the reading of the bill to offer an amendment.

Mr. WALLING. Then I desire to make a point of order.

Mr. ATKINS. I make the point of order that the gentleman is out of order, because the bill is being read for information.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio is certainly not in order in interrupting the reading of the bill.

Mr. WALLING. Then I will offer the amendment at the proper time.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill.

Mr. CONGER, (interrupting.) If the printed bill is correct, the Clerk is now reading a provision which is not in the bill.

Mr. ATKINS. The bill is being read as it was reported by the committee.

Mr. CONGER. The House was not informed that there was any difference between the printed bill and the manuscript one.

Mr. ATKINS. Yes, sir; it was. I made that remark to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. WALLING.]

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill and read the fifth section thereof, which is as follows:

SEC. 5. That no part of the money appropriated by this act, nor any money heretofore appropriated, shall be applied to the pay, subsistence, or transportation of troops used, employed, or to be used or employed, in support of the claim of Francis T. Nicholls or of S. B. Packard to be governor of the State of Louisiana. Nor shall any of said money be applied in support of the claim of the two bodies claiming to be the Legislature of said State, presided over respectively by L. A. Wiltz and Louis Bush; nor of the two bodies claiming to be the Legislature of said State, presided over respectively by C. C. Antoine and Michael Hahn; nor in support of the claim of Thomas C. Manning and associates to be the supreme court of said State; nor in support of the claim of John T. Ludeling and associates to be the supreme court of said State; nor in the aid of the execution of any process in the hands of the United States marshal in said State issued in aid of and for the support of any of such claims. Nor shall the Army, or any portion of it, be used in support of the claims, or pretended claim or claims, of any State government, or officer thereof, in any State, until the same shall have been duly recognized by Congress. And any person offending against any of the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, upon conviction thereof, shall be imprisoned at hard labor for not less than five nor more than ten years.

Mr. CONGER. I desire to raise the point of order upon that section, that it is new legislation. The Chair will recollect that points of order were reserved upon this bill.

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman from Tennessee indicates his purpose to move to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

Mr. CONGER. But he has not yet done it, and therefore I have a right to make the point of order.

Mr. ATKINS. I have already submitted the motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. CONGER. That motion has not been made, and I claim the right to make the point of order now.

The SPEAKER. The Chair of necessity must recognize the gentleman from Tennessee as having charge of the bill.

Mr. ATKINS. I have made the motion already to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

Mr. CONGER. The House is not acting under a suspension of the rules. I gave notice that I would reserve all points of order on this bill.

The SPEAKER. The motion to suspend the rules is pending, and the bill is now being read for the information of the House.

Mr. CONGER. And while that motion is pending it is the only opportunity I have to make the point of order which I do.

The SPEAKER. The Chair rules that a motion to suspend the rules suspends the rule under which the gentleman has the right to make the point of order.

Mr. CONGER. Then a motion to suspend the rules has the same effect as the suspension of the rules.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognized the gentleman from Tennessee to move to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman from Michigan knows that that suspends all rules.

Mr. CONGER. I make the point of order before the rules are suspended. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] is infinite in knowledge, but foolish in regard to this matter. He steps over to this side of the House telling me in his authoritative way the law. Sir, the youngest member of the House cannot even be instructed by that gentleman.

Mr. ATKINS. I make the point of order that the bill is being read for information, and that the reading cannot be interrupted.

Mr. CONGER. I desire the Chair to decide upon the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not recognize the gentleman from Michigan at this time to make any point of order, for the Chair has entertained the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. CONGER. Then I ask that he make the motion now.

The SPEAKER. He has made it.

Mr. CONGER. Then I ask that it be put to the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is causing the bill to be read for information.

Mr. CONGER. And at that time I raised the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will surely recollect that the practice is uniform in this respect, that a motion to suspend the rules suspends that rule under which the gentleman claims the right to make the point of order.

Mr. CONGER. Yes, when the motion to suspend the rules is agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Chair supposed that the House desired to have the bill read; the gentleman from Tennessee can move to suspend the rules and dispense with the reading.

Mr. BANNING. No member has the right to interrupt the reading of a bill.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. ATKINS. I now demand that my motion to suspend the rules be put to the House.

Mr. FOSTER. I desire unanimous consent that I be allowed five minutes to explain the reasons why I shall support the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. ATKINS. I hope the House will agree to that.

Mr. CONGER. I would like to have five minutes also.

Mr. ATKINS. I have no objection to giving the gentleman from Michigan five minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FOSTER] and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] shall each occupy five minutes? The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not agree with the proposition to reduce the Army to 17,000 men. I did agree in the committee to a reduction to 20,000. I am not willing either to vote for the proposition in relation to the use of troops in the States of South Carolina and Louisiana under any circumstances. In my judgment, that is a kind of legislation that this House ought not to indulge in. But we have but two legislative days left, and if we are to avoid an extra session we must pass the bill under a suspension of the rules and allow it to go to the Senate, where they can take such steps at once as will put it into a conference. And in that way we may be able to avoid an extra session, and we can do it only in that way.

While protesting against the two provisions of which I speak (and perhaps there are others in the bill which are objectionable) I shall vote, and I trust my party friends will vote with me, for suspending the rules and passing the bill.

Mr. PAGE. Do you expect the Senate to agree to the provisions in this bill?

Mr. FOSTER. I do not expect them to; I do not know.

Mr. PAGE. Would you prefer an extra session of Congress rather than have this bill passed in its present shape?

Mr. FOSTER. I am not prepared to answer that question now.

Mr. PAGE. I do not want any one to shirk responsibility.

Mr. CONGER. At this, almost the last day of the session, with an urgent necessity to employ every moment of the time of this House in order to pass the necessary appropriation bills and other legislation necessary to carry on this Government, I would be the last member here by any act of mine, or by the expression of my own opinion upon a bill, to retard the onward progress of legislation, if I did not believe that in this proposed bill I found legislation which is unconstitutional, in fact which would be injurious to the best and highest interests of the Republic, which would make the Commander-in-Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States, when engaged, as he may be, if called upon by the proper authorities of a State, in performing his constitutional duties—which would make him a criminal, guilty of a misdemeanor, and liable to be dragged from his place of dignity and trust and of confidence, and imprisoned for five years, more or less, in the penitentiaries of the country.

Sir, I can conceive that party spirit, party rancor may drive good men to adopt ultra measures of legislation in order to secure necessary objects, or to prevent other objects being accomplished; but I cannot conceive it possible that an American member of Congress should be willing for any purpose of partisan spite or of partisan hope to pass a law bearing upon its very face the marks of unconstitutionality. I marvel at it; I wonder that such a provision can ben igrafted in a bill presented to an American Congress.

Sir, has it come to this, indeed, that a law shall be passed by a coordinate branch of the Government prohibiting the Commander-in-Chief of the Army from exercising his constitutional powers, compelling him to choose between the violation of his oath when he accepts office and the duress of the dungeon? Yet no man can deny that such would be the effect of the passage of such a law as now proposed, if the government of a State should ever be in the condition of the States here mentioned and it became the duty of the Legislature or of the governor of that State to invoke the aid of the President of the United States to preserve peace and order.

It makes no difference that this bill provides that the Army shall not be used at the call of either of the governors or of the legislatures supposed to be in the interest of one or the other political party. It is equally unconstitutional; it is a blow at the freedom, the existence of the State. It turns over States of this Union, almost by name, to anarchy, to misrule, to confusion; and I care not which party succeeds.

Mr. HOLMAN. Allow me to ask a question.

Mr. CONGER. I cannot yield; I have not time. I call upon my friends of the republican party to look into the provisions of this bill, and they will see that it opens the way to misrule, to anarchy, to confusion.

Mr. ATKINS. One moment, if the gentleman——

Mr. CONGER. I ask the gentleman to allow me my five minutes. He has occupied the time of this House for hours and I have never objected.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The SPEAKER. The five minutes of the gentleman have expired.

Mr. CONGER. I ask that the time of interruption be not taken from my time. The gentlemen, by interrupting me, have prevented my talking the five minutes. I appeal to my republican friends not to vote for so damnable a bill as this.

Mr. ATKINS. I had no desire to get the gentleman off the floor.

Mr. CONGER. Well, the gentleman succeeded in doing so.

Mr. ATKINS. I hope the House will give the gentleman further time.

Mr. HOLMAN. This bill does not interfere with the power of the President to preserve peace in every State in the Union.

Mr. ATKINS. I hope the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] will be allowed more time.

Mr. CONGER. I do not want it.

Mr. ATKINS. Then if you have said all you want, why do you complain?

Mr. CONGER. I did not want to be interrupted while I was speaking.

Mr. ATKINS. All the reply I desire to make to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] is to have read by the Clerk a resolution which was passed by the House of Representatives of the Thirty-fourth Congress.

Mr. CONGER. If we have passed bad laws, then it is time that we should stop.

Mr. ATKINS. That was a republican House.

Mr. CONGER. That is no argument in favor of a bad law.

Mr. ATKINS. I ask that the resolution be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

But Congress hereby disapproving the code of alleged laws officially communicated to them by the President, and which are represented to have been enacted by a body claiming to be the territorial Legislature of Kansas, and also disapproving of the manner in which said alleged laws have been enforced by the authorities of said Territory, expressly declare that until those alleged laws shall have been affirmed by the Senate and House of Representatives as having been enacted by a legal Legislature, chosen in conformity with the organic law by the people of Kansas, no part of the military force of the United States shall be employed in aid of their enforcement, nor shall any citizen of Kansas be required under those provisions to act as a part of the posse comitatus of any officer acting as marshal or sheriff in said Territory.

Mr ATKINS. I now demand that the question be put to the House on my motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. STENGER. I call for the yeas and nays. [Cries of "O, no!"] Let the House vote down the call if it chooses.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The SPEAKER, (having put the question.) In the opinion of the Chair, two-thirds have voted in the affirmative, and the bill is passed.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. REAGAN. I move to suspend the rules and pass, with two amendments reported from the Committee on Commerce, the bill (H. R. No. 4617) making appropriations for the construction, repair, preservation, and completion of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

The bill was read.

Mr. HOLMAN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Does the gentleman move to suspend the rules and pass the bill?

Mr. REAGAN. I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill with two amendments recommended by the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I rise to say that I resist the motion of the gentleman from Texas, and if an opportunity be afforded shall move to recommit the bill, so as to perfect it in such a way as to do justice to other sections than those named in the bill.

The SPEAKER. Under the motion as made by the gentleman from Texas, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. DOUGLAS] has not the right to move to recommit.

Mr. DOUGLAS. But I appeal to the justice of this House to sustain me by voting down this motion.

Mr. PAGE. We will do it.

Mr. DOUGLAS. The bill should be recommitted in order that justice may be done to other sections.

Mr. HOOKER. I appeal to the gentleman from Texas to withdraw his motion in order to allow us to offer certain amendments.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for the yeas and nays on the motion.

Mr. REAGAN. I sent up with the bill two amendments to which the motion to suspend the rules applies. Those amendments have not been read.

Mr. PAGE. Is it in order to move to recommit the bill?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has just stated that it is not, in reply to an inquiry of the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. DOUGLAS.]

Mr. GOODE. I ask that the two amendments accompanying the bill be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 170 add the following:
For the improvement of the harbor of Sandusky, Ohio, $15,000.
For the removal of rocks from the channel and harbor of Brazos Santiago, Texas, $6,000.

Mr. FORT. Is the bill open to amendment?

The SPEAKER. It is not.

Mr. FORT. If not, why are amendments being read at the desk?

The SPEAKER. The committee reports these amendments, and the motion is to suspend the rules and pass the bill with the amendments. The gentleman from Indiana has called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 118, nays 112, not voting 60; as follows:

Wiley Wells, Wheeler, Whitthorne, Willis, Wilshire, and Fernando Wood—60.

So (two-thirds not having voted in the affirmative) the House refused to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

During the vote,

Mr. WALLING stated that he was paired with Mr. BLOUNT, a member of the Committee on Appropriations, who if present would vote in the affirmative, while he would vote in the negative.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. HURD. I submit the following resolution, and on its adoption demand the previous question.

Whereas it has been decided that a President of the United States may be inaugurated upon the fraudulent action of the returning board of Louisiana;

And whereas men who have so contributed to the election of the Chief Magistrate of this Union ought no longer to be in confinement: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That J. Madison Wells, Thomas C. Anderson, G. Casanave, Louis M. Kenner, now in custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms of this House under its order, be hereby discharged.

Mr. CONGER. I ask for a separate vote.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio submits the resolution, and on its adoption demands the previous question.

Mr. HUBBELL. I ask that the resolution be again read.

Mr. COX. I wish to move to refer it to the committeee on the Louisiana election. They have charge of that very question.

Mr. HURLBUT. I ask for a separate vote, first on the resolution and then on the preamble.

Mr. SPRINGER. Is this in order as a privileged question or is it a motion to suspend the rules and pass the resolution?

The SPEAKER. It comes in as a privileged question. The gentleman from Ohio did not move to suspend the rules. He demanded the previous question on the adoption of the preamble and resolution.

Mr. CONGER. I rise to a question of privilege. I move to suspend the rules and recommit the river and harbor bill to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. WALLING. What question does the gentleman submit?

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to ask the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] a question. Did he not on a former occasion report that bill to the House?

Mr. CONGER. He moved that the rules be suspended to pass the bill.

Mr. FORT. The records will show where the bill is.

The SPEAKER. The bill is in the Committee on Commerce now.

Mr. SAVAGE. What becomes of the proposition of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. HURD?]

Mr. CONGER. I understood this river and harbor appropriation bill was reported to the House and that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] moved and failed to suspend the rules and pass it.

The SPEAKER. That bill is with the Committee on Commerce now, and the gentleman from Texas moved that the Committee be discharged from its further consideration and the bill passed. The gentleman from Ohio is now recognized to submit the resolution which has been read.

Mr. HURD. I have demanded the previous question on the preamble and resolution.

Mr. HUBBELL. I ask the preamble and resolution be again read.

The preamble and resolution were again read.

Mr. CONGER. I rise to debate that resolution.

Mr. HURD. I have demanded the previous question.

Mr. CONGER. I rise to debate it, as this is the first day on which it has been offered.

The SPEAKER. It is a question of the highest privilege.

Mr. CONGER. I rise to debate it.

Mr. WALLING. I move to suspend the rules and pass the preamble and resolution.

Mr. HUBBELL. I demand a division on the preamble and resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is not entitled to a division under a suspension of the rules.

Mr. CONGER. I demand the yeas and nays on the motion to suspend the rules.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds not voting in favor thereof) it was decided in the negative—yeas 92, nays 87, not voting 111; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abbott, Ainsworth, Bagby, John H. Bagley, jr., Blackburn, Bland, Bliss, Boone, Bradford, Bright, Samuel D. Burchard, John H. Caldwell, William P. Caldwell, Cate, Caulfield, John B. So the rules were not suspended, (two-thirds not voting in favor thereof.)

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, informed the House that the Senate had passed, without amendment, a bill of the House of the following title:

The bill (H. R. No. 2229) for the relief of Chancy J. Poore, late a private in Battery G, First New York Light Artillery.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments in which the concurrence of the House was requested, bills of the House of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. No. 3925) relating to the production of fruit brandy and to punish frauds connected with the same; and

A bill (H. R. No. 534) for the relief of Rosetta Hert, (late Rosetta Scoville,) Charles C. Benoist, Emily Benoist, and Logan Fan Fan, half-breed Indians.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. No. 1111) for the relief of Thomas E. Maley;

A bill (S. No. 667) for the relief of William Wheeler Hubbell, and to make just compensation for the past making or use or vending of his patent explosive shell fuses and percussion exploders by the United States;

A bill (S. No. 177) to authorize the Secretary of War to open and re-adjust the settlements made by the United States Government with the Western and Atlantic Railroad of Georgia; and

A bill (S. No. 407) to authorize the restoration of George A. Armes to the rank of captain.

CORRECTION OF RECORD.

Mr. SAVAGE. I rise to a question of privilege. I am recorded as having voted "no" on the proposition that the vote of Henry N. Sollace be not counted. I voted "ay."

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. O'BRIEN.) The correction will be made.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. EDEN. I desire to bring before the House for action at this time the bill (H. R. No. 4433) making appropriations for the payment of claims reported by the commissioners of claims under the act of Congress of March 3, 1871, with amendments.

Mr. COCHRANE. I submit to the Chair that the question before the House is the resolution presented to the House by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. HURD,] from the committee of which he is a member, and which is a privileged resolution. The gentleman had demanded the previous question on the resolution. Pending that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WALLING] moved to suspend the rules and adopt the resolution. The House has voted upon the question as to whether or not the rules shall be suspended. Two-thirds have not voted to suspend the rules. I ask the Chair whether the question should not now be put to the House upon the motion of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. HURD.]

Mr. EDEN. I do not yield for that purpose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state in answer to the gentleman from Pennsylvania——

Mr. HUBBELL. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There is one question of order pending now.

Mr. HUBBELL. My question of order is that I cannot hear what is going on.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House will come to order. A point of order had been made on the resolution by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. HURD.]

Mr. HURD. My resolution is a matter of the highest privilege, involving the custody of persons now detained by the Sergeant-at-Arms.

Mr. EDEN. How did the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HURD] get the floor?

Mr. HURD. The Speaker recognized me.

Mr. COCHRANE. The Chair recognized the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HURD] on a privileged question. Pending the demand for the previous question, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WALLING] moved to suspend the rules and pass the resolution. That motion not having been sustained, the question recurs on the resolution of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. HURD.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The resolution of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HURD] was not in order for consideration at this time. Therefore the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WALLING] moved to suspend the rules and pass the resolution. The suspension of the rules not having been sustained, the resolution is not before the House. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. EDEN] is recognized.

Mr. WALLING. I arise to a parliamentary inquiry in reference to the last vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is not in order. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. EDEN.]

Mr. WALLING. I insist on my right to make a parliamentary inquiry at any time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is not in order, for the reason that the question to which his inquiry refers is not before the House, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. EDEN] has been recognized.

Mr. WALLING. I rose to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair rules it out of order. Has the gentleman from Illinois the bill on which he asks the action of the House?

Mr. EDEN. The bill has been reported with certain amendments. The Clerk has it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will wait a few minutes while the bill is sent for. In the meantime the House will preserve order.

Mr. HARRISON. Meanwhile I desire to offer the resolution which I send to the desk.

Mr. WALLING. I object. If I was not in order, other gentlemen are not in order in offering resolutions.

Mr. WHITE. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry. How long shall we have to wait?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is a matter within the discretion of the Chair. [Laughter.]

Mr. WHITE. Will the Chair entertain a resolution that I desire to offer now by unanimous consent? [Loud cries of "Regular order!" and great confusion.]

Mr. RUSK. Whom are you going to recognize, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. JONES, of Kentucky. What proposition is before the House?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair trusts the House will indulge the gentleman from Illinois until the bill which he desires to have passed can be brought here. [Loud cries of "Regular order!" and confusion.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair informs the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. EDEN] that the bill upon which he desires action is not in the possession of the Clerk.

Mr. EDEN. Then I withdraw my motion. [Loud cries of "Regular order!" and confusion.]

GEORGE A. ARMES.

Mr. GLOVER. I move that the rules be suspended and the bill (S. No. 407) to authorize the restoration of George A. Armes to the rank of captain be passed. [Cries of "Object!"] I have moved a suspension of the rules and that the bill be passed.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the provisions of law regulating appointments in the Army by promotion in the line are hereby suspended, for the purposes of this act, and only so far as they affect George A. Armes; and the President can, if he so desire, in the exercise of his own discretion and judgment, nominate, and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint said George A. Armes, late captain in the Tenth United States Cavalry Regiment, to the same grade and rank of captain held by him on June 7, 1870 in any vacancy occurring: Provided, however, That no pay, compensation, or allowance whatever shall ever be given to said Armes for the time between June 7, 1870, and the date of appointment hereunder.

Mr. TEESE. I object to the passage of that bill, and I objected in season. I desire to hear the report on which the bill is founded, and then I propose to object to the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion to suspend the rules suspends the reading of the report.

Mr. TEESE. But I objected to the motion in the first place.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman could not object to a motion to suspend the rules.

The question was taken on Mr. GLOVER's motion; and upon a division there were—ayes 100, noes not counted.

Mr. TEESE. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. FORT. We do not know anything about this case, and I ask that unanimous consent be given to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. GLOVER] to explain it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill will be again read.

The Clerk again read the bill.

Mr. STONE. I move that the House adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That motion is not now in order, and the Clerk will proceed to call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 112, nays 74, not voting 104; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Ainsworth, Ashe, George A. Bagley, John H. Bagley, jr., Banning, Belford, Bland, Bliss, Boone, Bradford, Bright, Samuel D. Burchard, Buttz, John H. Caldwell, William P. Caldwell, Campbell, Candler, Cason, Cate, Collins, Cook, Cox, Culberson, Davis, Davy, De Bolt, Denison, Eden, Egbert, Ellis, Faulkner, Felton, Field, Forney, Franklin, Fuller, Glover, Goode, Goodin, Andrew H. Wallace, Walling, Walsh, Watterson, Erastus Wells, Whitehouse, Willard, Andrew Williams, Alpheus S. Williams, James Williams, Wilshire, Benjamin Wilson, Woodworth, and Yeates—112.

NAYS—Messrs. Bagby, John H. Baker, William H. Baker, Ballou, Banks, Blair, Bradley, William R. Brown, Horatio C. Burchard, Burleigh, Cannon, Caswell, Conger, Crounse, Darrall, Dobbins, Douglas, Durham, Eames, Fort, Freeman, Frye, Garfield, Robert Hamilton, Hancock, Hardenbergh, Hathorn, Hays, Henderson, Hoar, Hoskins, Humphreys, Hunter, Hurlbut, Hyman, Joyce, Kasson, Kelley, Lapham, Lawrence, Leavenworth, Le Moyne, Magoon, McCrary, McDill, Monroe, Neal, Norton, Oliver, O'Neill, Packer, Plaisted, Platt, Rainey, Robinson, Sobieski Ross, Sampson, Seelye, Smalls, Southard, Stanton, Teese, Thornburgh, Martin I. Townsend, Washington Townsend, Tufts, Van Vorhes, Waldron, Alexander S. Wallace, White, Wigginton, Wike, William B. Williams, and James Wilson—74.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Abbott, Anderson, Atkins, Bass, Beebe, Bell, Blackburn, Blount, John Young Brown, Buckner, Cabell, Carr, Caulfield, Chapin, Chittenden, John B. Clarke of Kentucky, John B. Clark, jr., of Missouri, Clymer, Cochrane, Cowan, Crapo, Cutler, Danford, Dibrell, Dunnell, Durand, Evans, Finley, Flye, Foster, Gause, Gibson, Gunter, Hale, Hartridge, Goldsmith W. Walker, Gilbert C. Walker, Ward, Warner, Warren, G. Wiley Wells, Wheeler, Whiting, Whitthorne, Charles G. Williams, Jere N. Williams, Willis, Alan Wood, jr., Fernando Wood, Woodburn, and Young—104.

So (two-thirds not voting in favor thereof) the rules were not suspended.

PAYMENT OF CLAIMS.

Mr. EDEN. I move to suspend the rules for the purpose of considering at this time the bill (H. R. No. 4433) making appropriations for the payment of claims reported allowed by the Commissioners of Claims under the act of Congress of March 3, 1871. I have an amendment which I desire to offer to it.

Mr. WALLING. I demand the reading of the bill and amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. EDEN] is to suspend the rules and pass the bill without reading.

Mr. WALLING. No such motion was made.

Mr. LUTTRELL. I move to dispense with the reading of the bill.

Mr. EDEN. I will state what my motion was; and if I can get the attention of these gentlemen I think I can satisfy even the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WALLING] as to this amendment. I cannot do it, however, in the prevailing confusion and unless I can have the attention of the House.

Mr. WALLING. If debate is in order I expect to be heard myself.

Mr. EDEN. I have no objection to the gentleman being heard. I wish to ask unanimous consent that the reading of the names and the amounts in this bill be dispensed with. I will state that it is a bill simply to pay the awards made by the commissioners of claims, and does not include a single item except what has been allowed by that commission. The amount of their allowance has in no instance been increased.

Mr. GARFIELD. Is it a bill to pay the amount embraced in the report of the southern claims commission?

Mr. EDEN. It is.

Mr. GARFIELD. Is there any new legislation in the bill?

Mr. EDEN. There is not.

Mr. GARFIELD. Then I hope there will be no objection to it.

Mr. WALLING. I make the point of order that this bill provides for the payment of claims and has not yet been considered in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HOLMAN. I insist upon the bill being read.

Mr. EDEN. I would inquire of the gentlemen from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] if he desires to have read sixty pages of names and amounts, that will give nobody any more information than I could give by a few minutes' explanation? A bill of this character has never heretofore been read on any occasion when it has been passed. If the gentleman insists upon the reading of it, I suppose he has the right to do so.

Mr. GARFIELD. Why does not the gentleman move to suspend the rules and pass the bill?

Mr. HOLMAN. All I wish is that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. EDEN] will give us a statement as to the number of claims reported by the southern claims commission to the present Congress, the general character of those claims, and the fact whether or not the Committee on War Claims, as far as possible, have looked into the records sent to the House by that commission; and also to state the aggregate amount involved, with such other facts pertaining to the southern claims commission as will inform the House of the character of the bill which we are now asked to pass. I understand that this bill involves an appropriation of $600,000.

Mr. EDEN. Not so much as that.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope it is not so much; perhaps it is not so much as that. But I think this statement is due to the House in order that members may be able to act intelligently.

The SPEAKER. That is just what the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. EDEN] desires to do. He moves to suspend the rules so as to bring this bill before the House for consideration at this time.

The motion of Mr. EDEN was agreed to, two-thirds voting in favor thereof.

Mr. EDEN. In response to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] I would state that this appropriation is in pursuance of an act of Congress passed on the 3d of March, 1871, under which act a commission was appointed, called the commissioners of claims, consisting of three persons nominated by the President and confirmed by the Senate. Under the provisions of that law persons living in the insurrectionary States who were loyal and who had furnished supplies to the Army or Navy of the United States, upon making proof of loyalty and proof of the amount and justice of their claim, and that the supplies were taken for the use of the Army or Navy, such persons were entitled to compensation to the amount that the commission might find to be due.

Mr. WALLING. Is it in order to call for the reading of the bill which is at the Clerk's desk?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. EDEN] has the floor upon the bill.

Mr. WALLING. I reserve my right to call for the reading of the bill.

Mr. EDEN. This is the sixth annual report of that commission. I believe the amount in this report is smaller than in any preceding report. The whole number of claims passed upon by the commission in this report is eighteen hundred and sixty-six, of which there were allowed in whole or in part nine hundred and seventy-six. The whole amount involved in the claims was $4,264,877.71, and the amount allowed was $474,632.45; and the commission in a subsequent report allowed about $500 more.

As I stated a moment since, this commission is composed of three gentlemen appointed by Presinent Grant and confirmed by the Senate of the United States. This is their sixth annual report. Appropriations have been made at every session of Congress since the commission was organized, to pay the awards of the commission. The Committee on War Claims have given to these cases all the attention they possibly could give them. There are in this report a great many smaller claims; but all claims involving any considerable amount were examined by members of the committee, and this bill is reported by the unanimous direction of the Committee on War Claims.

Mr. CONGER. Will the gentleman state to the House whether the law requires a commission to report all their judgments on these claims to the House for our action here?

Mr. EDEN. That is the fact.

Mr. HOOKER. I desire to ask the gentleman from Illinois how many claims referred to that commission have not been acted upon by them, and further, whether it is not the custom of the commission in ascertaining the validity of any claims from Southern States to send special agents to take ex parte testimony, for the purpose of defeating the claims presented for consideration?

Mr. EDEN. The practice of the commission is to send special agents into the Southern States to make investigation in reference to the correctness of the claims and the loyalty of the claimants.

Mr. HOOKER. Do they not take ex parte testimony, without notice to the claimants at the time such testimony is taken?

Mr. EDEN. I can speak only with reference to the law. The law authorizes the commission to adopt their own mode of procedure.

Mr. HOOKER. I know that the commission has sent agents into Mississippi and taken testimony without notice to the claimants.

Mr. EDEN. That is probably true; but it is not probable, however, that such a mode of procedure would do injustice to the Government, though it might in some cases do injustice to the claimant.

Mr. HOOKER. That is the reason I want to know whether the claims that were not acted on by the commission were returned to you.

Mr. EDEN. The whole number of claims filed before the commission was 22,298. There was a limitation of two years from the passage of the act within which claims should be filed. The whole amount involved in those claims, I believe, was over $60,000,000. The commission has passed upon about one-half of those claims and made very great reductions, probably allowing not more than one-fifth or one-sixth of the amount of the claims.

Mr. HOOKER. Does the gentleman mean that the commission has passed upon one-half the number of claims presented or one-half the amount of the claims?

Mr. EDEN. They have passed upon one-half of the number of claims and probably one-half of the amount. But they have not allowed one-half of the amount claimed; they have made very great reductions; and in this respect some gentlemen of the South may believe that there has been some ground of complaint on account of these special agents. But I wish to call attention to the fact that such a system would not probably do the Government any injustice; and from the experience I have had in the examination of war claims, I am satisfied it is necessary that this commission, or any other tribunal that undertakes to settle war claims, whether they come from the North or the South, must use a great many precautions in order to see that the Government is not defrauded; and in so doing doubtless many just claims will not be allowed. This bill does not include what are known as the 4th of July claims, the claims coming from the Quartermaster's Department. It includes only claims reported by the commissioners of claims.

Mr. HARRISON. From what localities in the United States are these commissioners appointed?

Mr. EDEN. They are all appointed from the Northern States: Judge Addis, from Vermont; Judge Howell, (formerly a Senator,) from Iowa; and Judge Ferriss, (formerly a member of this House,) from New York.

Mr. SINGLETON. Is it not the fact that these commissioners have adjudged every man to be prima facie a rebel against the Government? Do they not in every instance require affirmative proof of loyalty to the Government?

Mr. EDEN. They require actual proof of loyalty in every case as a condition-precedent to the consideration of the claim upon its merits.

There was one portion of the question of my friend from Mississippi that I did not answer. The number of claims yet undisposed of, including the eighteen hundred embraced in this bill, is 11,210.

Mr. HOOKER. And that is about one-half of the whole number?

Mr. EDEN. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOOKER. Are any claims sent to your committee except those favorably reported by the commissioners?

Mr. EDEN. We have not reported a dollar in this bill except what the commission has recommended.

Mr. HOOKER. As I understand, then, all the claims, whether favorably or unfavorably acted upon by the commission, are sent to your committee, but you have not acted at all upon any of those reported unfavorably by the commission.

Mr. EDEN. That is the fact. I now call the previous question on the bill and amendments.

Mr. WALLING. I inquire whether we have not the right to have the bill read before it is disposed of.

The SPEAKER. The practice has never been to read the schedule of claims appended to bills of this character.

Mr. WALLING. Every Monday morning of this session bills introduced have been read in extenso upon the demand of one member. I demand the reading of this bill.

Mr. EDEN. I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill with the amendments of the committee without reading.

The motion of Mr. EDEN was agreed to, (two-thirds voting in favor thereof;) and the bill, with the amendments of the committee, was accordingly passed.

Mr. HOLMAN. I rise to move a recess of the House, and desire to state the object of the motion if I can get the ear of the House.

The SPEAKER. The necessity of a recess for an evening session is so manifest the Chair thinks the House will at once accede to it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to call attention to the importance of the House being full to-night.

Mr. WALLING. I demand the regular order.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move the House take a recess until eight o'clock to-night.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at ten minutes after five o'clock p. m.) the House took a recess until eight o'clock this evening.

AFTER THE RECESS.

At eight o'clock p. m. the House resumed its session.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASES.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia, from the Committee of Elections, reported the following resolution, and moved that the rules be suspended and the resolution adopted; which motion was agreed to:

Resolved, That there be printed for the use of the House the usual number of copies of the digest of contested-election cases, by the clerk of the Committee of Elections, together with a full index to the same, to be prepared by the said clerk; for which, and for the necessary preparation and superintendence connected therewith, shall be paid by the Clerk of the House a per diem for days actually employed therein, not exceeding that paid to clerks of committees during the session of Congress, the aggregate amount not to exceed $1,500, and not more than $500 shall be paid before the work is completed.

REAL-ESTATE POOL.

Mr. GLOVER. I am directed by the Committee on Real-Estate Pool to ask that the testimony taken before that committee be printed.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. What testimony?

Mr. GLOVER. The testimony taken before that committee.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. What is the subject of it?

Mr. GLOVER. The various subjects investigated by that committee.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Relative to the charges against Mr. GARFIELD?

Mr. GLOVER. Part of it is testimony taken in that case.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I object, unless it is passed under suspension of the rules.

Mr. GLOVER. Mr. GARFIELD has seen it and does not object to having it printed.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I object unless it is passed under suspension of the rules.

Mr. GLOVER. I move to suspend the rules, and that the testimony be ordered to be printed. I understood from Mr. GARFIELD that he would not object to the printing of the testimony.

Mr. GARFIELD rose.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. The gentleman from Ohio is now present.

Mr. GARFIELD. I understand there is some testimony referring to myself. I have seen but a single deposition, but I am told there is considerable more. I do not think it just, until I shall have a chance to see what it is, that it should be printed. So far as that one deposition is concerned, I do not object, but I have not had any opportunity to see the rest.

Mr. GLOVER. If the gentleman from Ohio has not seen the testimony, it is because he did not apply for it. It is much of the same nature.

Mr. GARFIELD. I wish to say for myself that I do not think a vast mass of testimony reflecting on individuals should be printed in this way. I have not seen all the testimony referring to myself. I do not think it should be printed until I have seen it. So far as the one deposition I have seen, I do not object to that being printed.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Did you have an opportunity to cross-examine the witnesses?

Mr. GARFIELD. I did not.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I will object, then, unless it is done under a suspension of the rules.

Mr. GLOVER. I move to suspend the rules and print the testimony.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I desire to ask a question. Did the gentleman have knowledge of the taking of the testimony, and if so, did he attend?

Mr. GLOVER. The gentleman has had knowledge since the day before yesterday morning of the taking of the testimony.

Mr. GARFIELD. Then, for the first time, I had information that testimony was taken before that committee.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. It is a gross outrage to have an investigation going on against him without letting him know. I protest against it to the utmost.

Mr. GLOVER. I desire to repel the insinuation of the gentleman there has been any outrage in the matter. There is but little new matter in this concern. It is a review of a matter which appeared before the joint select committee of the House in the Forty-third Congress. There are some features of new testimony, all of which Mr. GARFIELD has had liberty to see for over two days.

We omitted giving any public notice of this testimony until the committee had reached a point where, in their judgment, it reflected on Mr. GARFIELD. At that point we notified him; and he has had two days now in which he could have reviewed the whole of this testimony, for there is not much of it.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I insist without any disrespect to the gentlemen on that committee that when a committee enters upon an investigation in regard to a member of this House without his knowing what is being done they perpetrate an outrage on the rights of that member.

Mr. GLOVER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] has known all about it from the day the first testimony was given before that committee.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. He says he did not.

Mr. GLOVER. I know that he did know it.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. The word of the gentleman from Ohio is as good as that of the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. GLOVER. I know that one of those witnesses went to the house of the gentleman from Ohio before breakfast in the morning and informed him of the fact that he had been subpœnaed before the committee, and Mr. GARFIELD knew what the witness had to say. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] has brought this out by his unbecoming and unnecessary reflections upon the committee.

Mr. GARFIELD. If anybody here desires to assail me now is the time, and let the assault be made as promptly and by as many as please. But I propose to know who my assailants are and what they say before their assaults shall be printed as part of the proceedings of the House.

Mr. PRATT. I desire to inquire of the Chair if it is not necessary that this request should come from the committee. I am on that committee and know nothing of any desire on the part of the committee to have the testimony printed.

The SPEAKER. The Chair must take the word of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. GLOVER] as representing the wish of the committee; he being chairman of the committee.

Mr. O'BRIEN. Is it in order to have the testimony read?

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, informed the House that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 4306) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed, without amendment, bills of the House of the following titles:

The bill (H. R. No. 1611) authorizing the change of the name of the sloop Addie Parker;

The bill (H. R. No. 1765) respecting the limits of reservations for town sites upon the public domain;

The bill (H. R. No. 1824) to change the name of the pleasure yacht Hiram B. to Iola; and

The bill (H. R. No. 3574) for the relief of Marshal P. Thatcher.

The message further announced that the Senate agreed to the resolution of the House to print 300,000 copies of the Report of the Commissioner of Agriculture for the year 1876.

REAL-ESTATE POOL.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. GLOVER] moves to suspend the rules, that he may be permitted to report from the Committee on the Real-Estate Pool certain testimony, and that the same may be printed.

A viva voce vote being taken on the question, the Speaker stated that in the opinion of the Chair two-thirds had not voted in the affirmative.

Mr. GLOVER. I call for a division.

Mr. BANNING. I think the House will, on a division, find itself without a quorum. I suggest that by unanimous consent action be taken on pension bills until we have a quorum.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Indiana. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is inclined to think that there is a quorum present. A vote on the motion of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. GLOVER] will develop whether there is or not.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 42, noes 34.

Mr. GLOVER. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Indiana. I make the point that a quorum has not voted.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. That point is made too late.

The question being taken on ordering the yeas and nays, there were ayes 23.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Count the other side.

The other side being counted, there were noes 42.

So (the affirmative being more than one-fifth of the whole vote) the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 65, nays 62, not voting 163; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ainsworth, Bagby, John H. Bagley, jr., Banning, Bell, Blount, Boone, John Young Brown, Buckner, John H. During the roll-call,

Mr. HUBBELL said: I am requested to state that Mr. KNOTT is absent on account of illness; if present he would vote "ay."

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Indiana. No quorum has voted. I move a call of the House.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The SPEAKER. Pending that motion the Chair lays before the House a report from the Committee on Enrolled Bills.

Mr. HARRIS, of Georgia, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

Mr. WILSHIRE. I ask unanimous consent to report a substitute for the bill (H. R. No. 3079) to authorize the execution of a resolution of the national council of the Osage Indians.

CORRECTION.

Mr. WIKE. I notice in the RECORD that I am recorded as having voted in the negative yesterday on the proposition of the gentleman from New York [Mr. WOOD] not to count the vote of Mr. Sollace as one of the electors of the State of Vermont. I voted in the affirmative, and I wish the record to show that fact.

The SPEAKER. The Journal and the RECORD will be corrected accordingly.

MAIL ROUTES.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. LANDERS, of Indiana. I ask unanimous consent to introduce a bill.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I object, and demand a call of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to accommodate gentlemen who have measures to introduce

Mr. HAMILTON, of Indiana. I object and call for the regular order, and that is a call of the House, as no quorum is present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks a quorum is present.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Indiana. I insist on the motion that there be a call of the House, and object to everything but the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of the opinion that there is a quorum present.

SALE OF DESERT LANDS.

Mr. LUTTRELL. The bill (H. R. No. 4231) to provide for the sale of desert lands in certain States and Territories has been returned from the Senate with amendments. Mr. O'BRIEN. I withdraw the motion for a call of the House.

Mr. GLOVER. I desire to withdraw the motion to print testimony at this time.

CURRENCY AND SILVER COIN.

Mr. LANDERS, of Indiana, also, by unanimous consent introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4697) to compel the gradual retirement of national-bank currency and to authorize an issue of United States Treasury notes in lieu thereof; also to repeal an act entitled "An act to provide for the resumption of specie payments," approved January 14, 1875, and also to provide for the coinage of silver dollars; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. STEVENSON. I ask unanimous consent that the bill just introduced by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LANDERS] may be printed in full in the RECORD.

There was no objection and it was so ordered.

The bill is as follows:

An act to compel the gradual retirement of national-bank currency and to authorize an issue of United States Treasury notes in lieu thereof; also to repeal an act of Congress entitled "An act to provide for the resumption of specie payments," approved January 14, 1875, and also to provide for the coinage of silver dollars.

SEC. 4. That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to issue said Treasury notes in payment of the current expenses of the Federal Government at the rate of the retirement of the circulation of the national banking associations, or in exchange for gold or silver bullion at the coinage value thereof, or for interest-bearing bonds of the United States at their par value.

SEC. 5. That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed as often as $10,000 or more of said Treasury notes are paid out of the Treasury in the current expenses of the Federal Government to apply an equal amount of the legal-tender Treasury notes received in payment of current dues and taxes to the purchase of interest-bearing bonds of the United States, or of gold and silver bullion at the market price thereof, which said bullion shall be coined and applied to the redemption of the interest-bearing bonds of the United States in the manner provided by law.

SEC. 6. That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to have all gold and silver bullion presented at the Mint of the United States or any of its branches coined free of charge: Provided, That all silver bullion coined under any of the provisions of this act shall be coined into standard silver dollars of 412½ grains.

SEC. 7. That the standard silver dollar of 412½ grains shall be a legal tender for all debts, public and private.

SEC. 9. That the act of Congress entitled "An act to authorize the refunding of the national debt," approved July 14, 1870, and all other acts supplementary thereto for refunding the public debt are hereby repealed.

SEC. 10. That in towns and cities where there is no United States depository the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to deposit the funds of the Federal Government in such bank or banks as he may select, provided that ample security is given, and provided further that such bank or banks shall not be required to pay interest on such funds.

SEC. 11. The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to apply any funds in the Treasury of the United States, not otherwise appropriated, to the payment of the expenses incurred in preparing and executing the Treasury notes authorized by this act.

SEC. 12. That the laws in relation to counterfeiting or altering notes issued by the Federal Government, or passing spurious notes thereof, now in force, shall apply to the counterfeiting or altering of the Treasury notes authorized by this act, or passing such counterfeited or altered notes.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CONGER. I move to suspend the rules and pass the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That J. Madison Wells, T. C. Anderson, G. Cazanave, and L. M. Kenner, witnesses now confined by order of the House, be discharged from further custody, and the Sergeant-at-Arms, is hereby directed to carry this order into execution.

Mr. CONGER. On that I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. WALLING. You do, indeed! well, you shall have them.

Mr. BANNING. They ought to get out in time for the inauguration.

Mr. HOOKER. I move to lay the resolution on the table.

Mr. WALLING. That is right.

Mr. O'BRIEN. That is not in order.

Mr. WALLING. Why not?

Mr. O'BRIEN. You cannot move to lay on the table a motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. HOOKER. I make the point of order that the gentlemen who are down on the list for motions to suspend the rules are not recognized by the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is desirous to equitably divide the time among gentlemen who have motions to suspend the rules. The Chair was not aware what was the character of the resolution the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] desired to offer. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FIELD] was entitled to the floor, but the Chair understood that he yielded for the time.

Mr. FIELD. I yielded merely for such matters as would not interfere with my right to the floor. I propose now to go on. I am directed by the committee on the privileges, powers, and duties of the House in relation to the electoral count to make a report in part, to report the bill which I send to the Clerk's desk, and upon which I call the previous question.

Mr. CONGER. I demand a vote on my motion to suspend the rules. I wish to say, sir, that if the Chair does not intend, when I rise to a question of privilege, although other matter may be pending, to hold that I have the right to take gentlemen from the floor for that purpose, then I would like the Chair to say so.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to be equitable all around. He requested the gentleman from New York to yield temporarily, so that other matters which would occasion no controversy might be presented. The gentleman from New York was recognized at the time the House took a recess this afternoon.

Mr. CONGER. He was not upon the floor and I was.

The SPEAKER. He was upon the floor and on his feet.

Mr. CONGER. I must object to the ruling of the Chair. My resolution has been read, and I demand a vote upon my motion to suspend the rules and pass the resolution. We have been unable on this side of the House to offer any resolution to-day.

The SPEAKER. Well, gentlemen on both sides of the House have been complaining.

Mr. CONGER. Perhaps it is time that we should have one chance.

Mr. HOLMAN. I suggest that after the gentleman from New York [Mr. FIELD] gets through with his bill, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] shall then be recognized.

The SPEAKER. The difficulty about that is——

Mr. HOOKER. If gentlemen are going to indicate to the Chair what he shall do——

The SPEAKER. The Chair is compelled to recognize two or three gentlemen who have been waiting for three or four weeks an opportunity to submit motions to suspend the rules. The gentleman from Mississippi in front of the Chair, [Mr. HOOKER,] the gentleman from Mississippi on the left of the Chair, [Mr. LAMAR,] have been waiting for some weeks to move to suspend the rules upon subjects about which there is a controversy, a public controversy, and a controversy in the House. The Chair will be compelled to recognize those gentlemen.

Mr. FIELD. I have reported this bill as a report in part from the committee, and upon it I call the yeas and nays.

Mr. CONGER. I have made my motion to suspend the rules and pass the resolution which has been read, in the interest of imprisoned citizens.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. I would like to ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. FIELD] how much time he proposes to allow on his bill.

Mr. FIELD. An hour, a half hour on each side.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York held the floor, but yielded for motions that would give rise to no controversy.

Mr. BRADLEY. I raise the question whether the Chair should enter into an arrangement to recognize A, B, and C and to rule others out.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has not ruled anybody out.

Mr. BRADLEY. It strikes me that it would be but fair that others sitting here should have a chance.

The SPEAKER. Every one thinks that he should be the "other."

Mr. CONGER. I desire a ruling on my point. Am I in order?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is not. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FIELD] will either proceed or yield the floor unconditionally.

CONTEST OF PRESIDENTIAL ELECTION.

Mr. FIELD. Mr. Speaker, I propose——

Several MEMBERS. Let the bill be read.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill (H. R. No. 4698) to provide an effectual remedy for a wrongful intrusion into the office of President and Vice-President of the United States. The reading was interrupted by Mr. CONGER, who said: I rise to a point of order. I wish the Clerk would stop reading when I am addressing the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk is not under the direction of the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CONGER. But it disturbs me to have him read while I am addressing the Chair.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from Michigan has any fault to find with the Clerk, he will make his complaint to the Chair.

Mr. CONGER. I am making it to the Chair. I make the point that this bill is not in order, coming from the gentleman from New York or from his committee at this time, and further that the motion to suspend the rules is of higher privilege; and I stand here asking the Chair to grant me the right to make the motion to suspend the rules on a matter of higher privilege affecting the liberty of a citizen.

The SPEAKER. The committee from which the gentleman from New York reports this bill is entitled to report at any time. But a motion to suspend the rules is in order; and the Chair, if compelled to rule strictly, would rule that the gentleman from Michigan had a right during these last six days of the session to rise and move to suspend the rules.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. That is right.

Mr. CONGER. Then I send to the desk a resolution——

Mr. SPRINGER. Can the gentleman from Michigan make this motion while another member has the floor? I make the point of order that while the gentleman from New York holds the floor he cannot be taken from it by another member who desires to move to suspend the rules.

Mr. HOOKER. I understood the Speaker to put the inquiry to the gentleman from New York whether he would yield the floor and the gentleman from New York declined to yield it. I submit that the motion of the gentleman from Michigan cannot be made so as to take the gentleman from New York off the floor.

Mr. CONGER. It has been decided too often in this House to make it necessary for me to argue the point, that a motion to suspend the rules may take a member off his feet.

Mr. HOOKER. As I understand, the gentleman from New York was on the floor, recognized by the Chair. He had presented his bill and it was in process of being read. The gentleman from Michigan now undertakes to take the gentleman from New York off the floor by proposing a resolution.

Mr. CONGER. That is the very proposition.

Mr HOOKER. The gentleman from New York had presented his bill, a bill reported from the committee on the powers and privileges of the House. He had asked the consideration of the bill, and the Chair had recognized him. The Chair under these circumstances, I submit, could not take the gentleman from New York off his feet to hear the motion made by the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. SPRINGER. Further than that, Mr. Speaker, there is but one motion recognized in the Digest as entitling a member to take another from the floor; and that is a motion to reconsider. A member may take another from the floor to make this motion, but not to have it considered at that time.

The SPEAKER. A conference report can also take a member off the floor.

Mr. SPRINGER. That is true.

Mr. CONGER. The Chair will understand distinctly that, as I claim, the gentleman from New York held the floor if at all under the rules. If I hold the floor, I hold it under a motion to suspend the rules.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the practice of the House and his own practice during his occupancy of the Chair have been to allow gentlemen to take others off the floor upon a motion to suspend the rules. It has been done quite frequently upon appropriation bills; and once, as the Chair recollects, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] took the gentleman from New York [Mr. WOOD] off the floor under circumstances somewhat similar to the present.

Mr. SPRINGER. But the Chair will observe that if such a ruling were correct then we could do no business at all, because as soon as one member obtained the floor to move a suspension of the rules another member could take him off to move another suspension and so on ad infinitum.

The SPEAKER. While the Chair believes that the practice under the rules has been and should be what he has stated, yet, if he understands correctly the proposition of the gentleman from New York, he entertains it as a question of high constitutional privilege.

Mr. CONGER. I claim that my proposition is a question of high personal privilege concerning four citizens of the United States now imprisoned in these walls, in our dungeon.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has twice entertained resolutions today on this subject, and the House has failed to reach a conclusion in this respect.

Mr. CONGER. I offer one in which I presume all the members will unite.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman at the first opportunity. The bill of the gentleman from New York will be read.

The bill was read. Section 1 provides when any person usurps, intrudes into, or without due election holds or exercises the office of President or of Vice-President of the United States, his title to the office and the title of any claimant thereof may be tried and determined by action in the nature of a quo warranto as hereinafter provided.

The second section provides that the action may be brought in any circuit court of the United States against the person in office by any person claiming title thereto.

The third section provides that the action must be brought in the name of the United States and of the claimant, but the prosecution thereof shall be under the sole direction of the claimant; it must be brought by the service of a summons which the court shall issue on the filing of the complaint, and which may be served in any part of the United States, requiring the defendant to answer the complaint within a time fixed by the court, not exceeding forty days after the service of the summons; and the complaint must allege that the claimant was duly elected and is entitled to the office, that the defendant is in possession of the office without a just title thereto, and ask that the defendant may be excluded from the office and the claimant placed in possession thereof.

The fourth section provides that the defendant may answer the complaint by denying his own unlawful intrusion into the office or the title of the claimant or both, and the issue thus made shall be tried by a jury, or by the court, if a jury trial be waived; but if there be no answer the court shall receive such evidence of title as may be offered by the claimant and thereupon make a written finding of the facts.

The fifth section provides that the following rules must be observed in the conduct of the action:

(a) The finding of the facts if there be no answer and the trial of the issue upon an answer shall be had at any time and place within the United States, to be fixed by the court, having regard to the convenience of parties and witnesses, but it must be commenced within ninety days from the service of the summons.

(b) Subpœnas to attend and testify, with or without papers, may be served in any part of the United States; all process shall issue in the name of the United States, and the jury shall be drawn from the district where the trial is had.

(c) The court shall inquire whether the electoral votes purporting to come from a State were cast by persons duly appointed by that State in the manner directed by its Legislature, and whether any such person was at the time of his appointment ineligible, or at the time of casting this vote incapacitated by the laws of the State or of the United States, and for that purpose shall receive evidence tending to show the forgery, falsehood, or invalidity of any certificate of any governor, canvasser, or other officer whomsoever; it shall reject the votes of all persons ineligible at the time of their alleged appointment or incapacity at the time of casting their votes, and it must investigate any other fact necessary to a judgment upon the rights of the parties.

(d) Judgment shall be rendered within ten days after the verdict of the jury or the trial or finding by the court.

(e) The judgment may determine the right, both of the defendant and of the claimant, or only the right of the defendant, as justice shall require. If the defendant be adjudged not entitled to the office, he shall be excluded from it; and if the claimant shall be adjudged entitled to it, he may immediately, on taking the required oath, enter upon the execution of the office.

(f) In all other respects then, as herein prescribed, the proceedings in the action shall be conformable to the proceeding in other civil cases in the circuit court.

The sixth section provides that either party may appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States within ten days after notice of the judgment, and if such appeal be taken the judgment shall not be excluded until the decision upon the appeal.

The seventh section provides that the action, and all motions, argument, and other proceedings therein, shall have precedence over all other business in the Supreme Court and circuit court; and if the Supreme Court be not in session at the time of the appeal, it shall be immediately convened by the Chief-Justice upon ten days' notice to each of the judges.

The eighth section provides that the execution of the judgment may be enforced by any proper writ issued to any marshal of the United States.

Mr. FIELD. Mr. Speaker, in ten minutes I propose to explain the provisions of this bill and the reasons why it appears to me expedient to pass it, and gentlemen on the other side shall have fifteen minutes.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. I was going to say, if sufficient time is given for debate—I do not desire any length of time for myself, but other gentlemen may desire it—that the first and second reading of the bill may be dispensed with.

Mr. FIELD. Now, Mr. Speaker, the provisions of this bill are extremely simple. They provide that the title of President may be determined by an action in the nature of a quo warranto in any circuit court of the United States. In this respect I have to call the attention of the House to the fact that it follows the precedent of the bill passed by Congress some years ago, authorizing a suit in respect to the Union Pacific Railway and Credit Mobilier Company, which might be brought in any court in the country.

Then it authorizes a trial in any part of the country which the court may designate as most convenient to witnesses and parties; and it provides that the court shall go to the very root of the matter by inquiring whether the votes sent from a State are the true electoral votes of that State. The object is to get at the truth and the validity of the votes that purport to come from a State. The bill authorizes the court to inquire whether there be in them any falsehood or any invalidity, and whether the person appointed elector was inelibible when he was appointed or incapacitated when he cast his vote; and provides that all votes of persons ineligible when appearing to be elected or incapacitated when voting shall be rejected.

The court is authorized further to inquire into any fact necessary to determine the rights of the parties. The trial is to be begun within ninety days from the commencement of the suit; and upon the decision there is to be no execution of the judgment if either party appeals to the Supreme Court within ten days, and that court, if not in session, is to be immediately convened. And after its decision, the judgment is to be executed.

Those are the provisions of the bill. Is it expedient that the bill should pass? The first question, of course, is whether the bill is constitutional. That is to say, is it constitutional to vest in any court of the United States the right to try the title to the Presidency? In respect to that I have only to answer that the Constitution declares that the judicial power shall extend to all cases arising under this Constitution or the laws of the United States. Is not a disputed title to the Presidency a case that arises under the Constitution and laws?

Most unquestionably it is; it is clearly within that grant of power. Congress has already determined that question; because there is now upon the statute-book an authority for a quo warranto—and, for aught I see, a quo warranto to try the title to the Presidency—in cases arising under the fourteenth amendment. This is the language:

Jurisdiction is given to the circuit courts of all suits to recover possession of any office except that of elector of President and Vice-President, or Representative or Delegate in Congress, or member of a State Legislature, where the sole question arises out of the denial of the right to vote on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude.

In short, I think there can be no question that the proposed bill is constitutional. Then is it expedient? This is a question which gentlemen on this floor can determine from their own observation. There are but two alternatives: a trial by law or a trial by force. And you know from your own experience that but for the electoral bill you would probably have had a conflict here this very month. The two Houses of Congress, assuming that they can count, are diametrically opposed to each other upon the question whether they both must agree to count or both must agree to reject. You cannot solve that except by legislation. The Anglo-Saxon mode, the mode which makes the Anglo-Saxon races the superior of the Latin races, and will always make them so, is that when they have a question to settle they are willing to try that question by the arbitrament of reason rather than by the arbitrament of force.

Therefore, I insist that this bill is not only constitutional but that it is expedient and of the very highest expediency. In the present emergency I appeal to gentlemen on the other side of the House. You have a President just counted in whose just claim to the office is disputed. I make no imputations against any one in regard to this matter. But there is a question about the title of the incoming President. You know there is a question. And you can best satisfy the conscience and relieve the doubts of the country by allowing that question to be settled as other questions in dispute are settled. Give us this bill and you have conciliation for the present and safety for the future.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. The object of this bill, as explained by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. FIELD,] is to prolong the controversy in which the two Houses have been engaged for the past three months and continue the excitement which has so disastrously agitated the country. It was claimed that the decision to be made by the commission would settle all of the disputed questions, and it was claimed on the other side of the House that the two Houses of Congress in making the count had power to investigate and decide all the questions referred by this bill to the courts. The members of the electoral commission have been criticised and censured because they decided that the commission could not assume judicial functions; objection was made to their decision because they have not gone behind the returns. The bill admits the action of the commission to be correct and proposes to invest the circuit courts of the United States with jurisdiction to decide these questions. Is this a proper and constitutional measure? I have no time to discuss the subject at length. I desire to point out some of its objectionable features and then yield the floor to other gentlemen who will discuss the bill more fully than I shall attempt to do.

The bill, in contravention of the uniform practice and universally recognized principle of law and equity which require suit to be brought in the district where the defendant resides, proposes to give the party bringing the action the choice of any district in the United States. He can go to California; to Georgia; to Maine, and select his judge anywhere among the circuit judges. He can go to any one of the fifty judicial districts in the United States, and the trial can be had at any other place in the United States. It establishes special rules for the trial of the suit, and does not follow the course of the common law or the statute laws in similar cases. If such a bill is to be passed by Congress, it should have been carefully considered by the Committee on the Judiciary. But this is a bill conceived in the brain of a single member of the committee of privileges, powers, and duties, presented to the committee in the absence of the minority of that committee. It has not been considered by the committee at any regular meeting. The constituents of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. FIELD,] the business men of that city and of the country, do not desire any such law to be passed or action now to be commenced after the count is finished and the declaration made as to who is elected and to be inaugurated as President of the United States. The proposition is to plunge the country into doubt and uncertainty, and to re-open a question already practically decided by Congress. I yield five minutes of my time to Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments a bill of the following title; in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House:

A bill (H. R. No. 4187) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes.

CONTEST OF PRESIDENTIAL ELECTION.

The House resumed the consideration of the bill in regard to contesting the right to the office of President.

Mr. LAWRENCE. During our whole existence as a nation there have been but few bills ever presented in Congress of equal importance with this. For a century we have lived without it, and now instead of averting perils this is a measure to invite them. It is gravely proposed after a discussion of thirty minutes to pass a bill which is to determine the title to the highest office within the gift of the American people; to pass a bill which has not been perfected by any careful consideration of any committee; which has not yet been read by half a dozen members of the House; which has not been considered for thirty minutes by any member of the House except the gentleman who reports it, and which is even not yet printed. I submit to the House that we ought not to attempt at this late period of the session to legislate upon a matter of such vital importance. But if we must gravely consider this bill under the circumstances which have been stated, the objections urged to it by my friend from Illinois [Mr. BURCHARD] are such as to utterly condemn it.

Let me call attention to another objection. It is proposed that, if the court which tries the right to the presidential office shall find an elector who held an office of trust or profit under the Government of the United States, his vote shall be rejected, and if two such electoral votes can be found at the recent presidential election it may change the result which has already been declared. The people of the country may be deprived of their voice because incautiously they had elected two men who held offices of trust and profit under the Government of the United States. This would be a great wrong to the people and a sacrifice of their rights to which I can never consent.

It has been repeatedly declared by the courts that where an ineligible person has been elected to an office and entered upon its duties his acts are legal and valid; just as valid as though he were eligible to the office. It is not to be tolerated that whole communities are to be deprived of their political power because they incautiously select an elector who happens to be a postmaster or a United States commissioner. It may be wise to provide, as the Constitution does, that such officers shall not be chosen as electors. But if they shall nevertheless be chosen, the remedy should be applied before they vote for President. Let proper proceedings be instituted to remove from office the ineligible electors before they vote for President, so that the States may supply their place by a new election or by appointment by the Legislature, and thus let every State exert its full share of power in selecting a President. If the proper remedy be not applied in this way all objectors thereafter should be estopped from urging any objection.

But there are still more serious objections to this bill. I am not yet certain the Constitution permits Congress to pass any such bill.

The Constitution declares that the "person receiving the highest number of votes shall be President of the United States." This bill undertakes to say he shall not be President. The Constitution gives to the person chosen in the forms it requires a presidential term of four years. This bill undertakes to say his term may not continue so long. This bill undertakes to give to a single court the power to reverse the decision of the States as to who are their duly appointed electors. Even if their title had been duly tried in proper courts, this bill proposes to go back of all that and annul the decision, and place in the hands of a single court the power to decide who is President. It proposes to give to a single court the power to reverse the decision of the two Houses of Congress and of an electoral commission, created under an act of Congress, and to create a new canvassing board, alien to the Constitution, never suggested by its framers or sanctioned by the opinion of any great commentator.

It may well be doubted whether the Constitution gives any sanction to such a scheme as this. It does provide one mode of ascertaining and declaring who is elected President and so entitled to hold the office for four years. It may well be doubted whether any other or new mode can be added to this to revise the decision so made. The Constitution does not provide for revising this decision; it seems to regard it as final and conclusive. I suppose it must now be regarded as settled law that it belongs to the Houses of Congress as a political question or a political power to determine the result of a presidential election. This is the character of the power exercised by the Houses of Congress. It would destroy the efficacy and force of this political power if courts could revise and reverse it, as proposed, in ninety days, and dictate who should be President. When a power is given by positive words, in one form, this excludes all others in other forms over the same subject.

The writ of quo warranto in ordinary cases only reaches back of the officer to inquire as to the legality or regularity or sufficiency in numbers of the votes cast for him, but this bill proposes to go back in the second degree. It proposes to contest the right to the presidential office by contesting the right of the presidential electors themselves, and back of them to the right of the voters in a State. I cannot well conceive that the Constitution sanctions the exercise of such immense powers by a court; powers which are ministerial, political, executive, administrative, and in no sense judicial.

To concede this power to a court would make it supreme in and over all departments of the Government. It would blend and confuse and confound and destroy all other departments. The departments are co-ordinate, independent, and the Constitution does not permit one to absorb all others.

We are told by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FIELD] that we must have this bill or we must have war; that unless there be some power to test the right to the office of President of the United States this Anglo-Saxon race will not submit to the decision of the question which has been made by the two Houses of Congress. I say that if the people of this country shall be so revolutionary in spirit or purpose that they will not abide by the judgment of the two Houses of Congress, they will not respect the decision of any single court upon this question.

This bill only invites new controversies, organizes fresh hostilities, and may give occasion to inaugurate rather than avert war.

I object to this bill, then, for several reasons.

1. There is no sufficient time now to consider it.

2. This bill is crude, imperfect, and objectionable in its provisions and details.

3. It is of doubtful constitutionality.

4. It is dangerous in its effects, and may be ruinous in its consequences.

It is an attack upon the power of the States, an attack upon the powers of the Houses of Congress, an attack upon the very foundation of the Republic. It comes to harrow up old controversies and create new ones. It is a veritable wooden horse, from whose sides may come forth enemies to destroy the Republic. My voice and my vote are against it. Rutherford B. Hayes is the legally and honestly chosen President of the United States, and no vote of mine shall rob the people of their choice or deprive them of the blessings to flow from his administration.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FRYE. The time given for the discussion of this important bill is so short that I will waive my right to the floor and yield to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. TOWNSEND.]

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. I reiterate the remark made by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. LAWRENCE,] that the Constitution has declared that the man who is counted in shall be President of the United States. It is said by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FIELD] that the two Houses have differed as to who should make the count. But there is no difference of opinion, and there can be no difference of opinion upon the proposition that the man, when constitutionally counted in, shall be President of the United States for the next four years? In this case we have created a counting commission, and through the aid of that counting commission a man has been counted in as President, and it is proposed to deprive the people of his services by the quirks of this law.

I have another objection to this proposition. Under Anglo-Saxon legislation, of which the gentleman boasts so much, no private individual has ever been allowed to bring an action of quo warranto. That is an action brought by the government, in the name of the government, and for the interests of the governed. It is proposed in this case that the right to bring such an action shall be given for the benefit of any claimant, and that the man who has been declared by the proper authority of the country under the Constitution to be elected may be harassed by the wily trickery of any claimant, however dishonest and however unconscientious, who shall set up a claim to the office.

Such a man is to have the privilege of selecting his district, and in selecting the district of selecting his judge. Suppose that in this case the gentleman from New York [Mr. FIELD] should be employed outside of this House as the counsel of a claimant to this office and should select the district of California for the place of trial and his own brother for the judge. What would be the chance that Rutherford B. Hayes or any other man would have in any such court against such odds?

You have by law required that your President shall reside at the Capitol. Yet under this bill within ninety days' time he might be compelled to leave the Capitol and go three thousand miles to attend a trial upon the claim of any vagabond upon the face of the earth. Is this American legislation? Is this anything that an Anglo-Saxon can be proud of? Sir, this bill is not only a novelty but it is an abomination; the very proposition itself is a disgrace to the country and to the age in which we live.

The gentleman tells us that war would have been the consequence if somebody's views had not been followed. Sir, we have had one civil war, and if anybody wants another war, if the gentleman wants a war on New York City principles—that is, a war that men threaten about, and when it comes shrink from, if the gentleman wants such a war—let him begin it. I doubt whether anybody here wants another war. No good citizen of any party or from any portion of the country has threatened war.

I say that it ill becomes that gentleman, after having voted for Mr. Hayes for President, to take a seat in this House and come here and threaten war if the man that he voted for is counted in and held to be the lawful President of the United States.

Now, sir, I have tried to be as comfortable as I could under the taunts that have been thrown out against us on the other side of the House. We have been told that we were a guilty set here. We have been guilty of being run over! We have been guilty of being voted down, and when the scheme was formed to crush out the minority of this House, it was found to work like the musket which—

> Aimed at duck or plover,
> Bears wide, and kicks its owner over.

When this scheme failed, we have been accused of every crime that could blacken humanity. Why, sir, the majority of this House had the power of talking when our mouths were closed, and we had to sit still. The party who sits still and whose mouth is closed always seems to be in the wrong—always seems to be guilty of fraud, if those who can be allowed can control the public ear.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. FIELD. To all that part of the gentleman's remarks which may be deemed personal, I have not a word of reply. I thought he, whom I have known so many years, knew me better; but it seems that he does not. I will show in a moment that in his argument he shows a great deal more zeal than discretion. He remarks that there never was such a case as a trial for the Chief Magistracy before in the world. Will he tell me where the Chief Magistrate is elective except in this country? That is an answer.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. Will the gentleman allow me——

Mr. FIELD. No, sir; do not interrupt me; I do not allow it.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. Then do not misstate my position.

Mr. FIELD. Then the gentleman tells us that the person counted in is the rightful President. Does not the Constitution carefully abstain from declaring that the count makes the title? This is its language: "The person having the highest number of votes shall be the President." He has the right to the Presidency under the Constitution whether the two Houses of Congress count him in or not. The gentleman should have known this.

Then, again, we are told that the idea of having the title to such an office tried in the courts is a new thing.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York, (in his seat.) I did not say so; I spoke of a quo warranto at the instance of an individual.

Mr. FIELD. If the gentleman can keep quiet——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. TOWNSEND] will please not interrupt; and if he does desire to speak he ought to rise to his feet.

Mr. FIELD. But this electoral bill contains the following provision:

> That nothing in this act shall be held to impair or affect any right now existing under the Constitution and laws to question the right or title of the person who shall be declared elected, or who shall claim to be President or Vice-President of the United States.

What does this mean? Did the men who drew the bill mean to deceive us? Did they hint that there was a remedy when there was none?

It is disputed whether there is at present a remedy or not. Mr. Justice Bradley, when I was arguing before the commission, intimated that there was a remedy under the old law of Maryland, still in force in this District; and Mr. Carpenter in arguing before the commission insisted that under a provision of the statutes which he drew the writ might be issued. But I answer these suggestions, that if the writ is issued under those laws, if it can be issued at all, it must be issued in the name of the United States, and the proceeding must be conducted by the Attorney-General. Do you imagine that an Attorney-General appointed by the incumbent of the office will carry on a lawsuit to oust his master? The bill which I offer provides that the prosecution shall be under the direction of the claimant, as it ought to be. I think I have now answered all the objections——

Mr. LAPHAM. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. FIELD. No, sir.

But the one urged by my friend from Ohio, [Mr. LAWRENCE.] If I understood him aright, he was in favor of providing by law for the determination of this question in the courts. He asked, "Will you require a vote given by an ineligible person to be rejected?" Why, sir, do gentlemen believe that when the Constitution of the United States declares that no person holding an office under the United States shall be appointed an elector, one may yet be appointed? It has indeed been decided by the commission that although the great charter of our Union, the highest authority in the land, declares that no person holding an office of profit or trust under the United States shall be appointed an elector, yet he may be appointed an elector, and his vote may make a President. The gentleman whom you are about to inaugurate will hold his office by no higher title than the votes of men who who are declared by the fundamental law to be incapable of exercising the functions of electors.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I call for the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection the second reading of the bill will be dispensed with, and the question will be taken on the engrossment and third reading.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. PAGE. I call for the reading of the engrossed bill.

The Clerk was proceeding to read the engrossed copy of the bill when

Mr. PAGE said: As the Clerk has the engrossed bill prepared, I withdraw the call. [Laughter.]

The bill was read the third time by its title.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I call for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 66, nays 99, not voting 125; as follows:

Upon amendments Nos. 12, 13, 32, 33, 34, and 35 the conferees have been unable to agree, and so report to their respective Houses.

W. S. HOLMAN,
JAMES H. BLOUNT,
CHAS. FOSTER,
Managers on the part of the House.

J. R. WEST,
H. HAMLIN,
L. V. BOGY,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, it will be seen by the House that the committee of conference has not been able to agree upon four of the amendments made by this bill. I am anxious the House should understand the points of those agreements. Our conferees recommend in this report that the House recede from its disagreement to quite a number of amendments made by the Senate. They recommend concurrence in many other amendments of the Senate, with amendments reducing the amounts proposed by the Senate, and on the four points of disagreement I wish to say a word.

The first is the increase of the appropriation in the nature, as I think, of a subsidy to the railroads for the transportation of the mails. The increase is $600,000. The House appropriated $9,000,000 for this service for the next fiscal year. The expenditure for the present year on the basis of the appropriation bill of last session will not vary materially from $8,700,000. Under the circumstances the House felt that the appropriation of $9,000,000 for the railway postal service of the next year was very ample. The Senate increased that $600,000, and proposed that $250,000 of that sum shall be used by the Postmaster-General in increasing the facilities of the great trunk lines in the transportation of the mails. The House conferees were of the opinion that the appropriation of $9,000,000 was ample. They suggested, however, the increase of that amount $100,000, making the whole appropriation $9,100,000; while the Senate committee suggested reducing the amount from $9,600,000 to $9,300,000. The House conferees were unable to concur in that proposition. That comes, therefore, before the House as one of the points of disagreement.

The second point of disagreement is one of comparatively little moment. Mr. Speaker, there is so much disturbance in the House that I cannot be heard. I think a great deal of it comes from the lobby of the House.

The SPEAKER. The officers of the House will clear the lobbies.

Mr. CLYMER. That is right.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Pennsylvania. I think the noise is on the floor.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the order he has just given to the officers of the House is in the interest of intelligent legislation. [After a pause.] The gentleman from Indiana will proceed.

Mr. HOLMAN. By the legislation of last session we provided for a postal commission, to consist of three gentlemen, to be appointed by the President, to inquire into the subject of the transportation of the mails, and appropriated for that service the sum of $10,000. It is proposed by the Senate to prolong the period of the service of that commission—one of whose members, General Palmer, of Chicago, has been recently appointed to the office of postmaster of that city—and to appropriate the additional sum of $10,000. The House conferees suggested $5,000; and the two committees have not agreed upon that. I would say, however, that this is a very subordinate item, and I have no doubt a further conference will readily reach a solution of that difficulty.

The SPEAKER. What motion does the gentleman intend to make?

Mr. HOLMAN. I will indicate it presently.

I come now to the important questions involved in this bill; the two subsidies of $500,000 each; the one for the transportation of the mails on the Pacific to China and Japan, the other for the transportation of the mails from New Orleans to Rio, in Brazil. The conferees upon the part of the House have not been able to concur with the Senate conferees upon the subject of those subsidies of a half million dollars each. The Senate conferees have suggested, as I ought to state to the House and the Speaker, that perhaps they might consent to fix the amount of these subsidies at $300,000 each for the coming fiscal year. To that suggestion the confeeres on the part of the House have not been able to accede. So that the important disagreements are, first, the increase of the appropriation for the transportation of the mails by railroad from $9,000,000 to $9,600,000; and, secondly, the two subsidies of half a million dollars each for the line from New Orleans to Rio, in Brazil, and from San Francisco to the ports of China and Japan.

Having made this brief statement of the points of disagreement, I move that the House concur in the conference report which disposes of all the features of this bill except the four items named, and ask a further conference.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints as managers of the further conference on the part of the House Mr. HOLMAN, Mr. CLYMER, and Mr. FOSTER.

Mr. SPRINGER. Would it be in order to instruct the conferees on the part of the House to insist upon the exclusion of the subsidies to the railroads and the steamship companies mentioned by the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN?]

The SPEAKER. It would not. It would not be a free conference if instructed.

RETURNING BOARD OF LOUISIANA.

Mr. CONGER. I move that the rules be suspended and that the following resolution be adopted:

Ordered, That J. Madison Wells, Thomas C. Anderson, G. Casanave, and L. M. Kenner, witnesses now confined by order of the House, be discharged from further custody, and the Sergeant-at-Arms is hereby directed to carry this order into execution.

A viva voce vote being taken, the Speaker stated that in the opinion of the Chair two-thirds had not voted in the affirmative.

Mr. CONGER. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 77, nays 80, not voting 133; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. John H. Baker, William H. Baker, Ballou, Banks, Blair, Bradley, Bright, William R. Brown, Horatio C. So (two-thirds not voting in favor thereof) the rules were not suspended.

During the roll-call the following announcements were made:

Mr. BOONE. My colleague, Mr. BLACKBURN, is absent on account of sickness.

Mr. EDEN. My colleague, Mr. HARRISON, is absent serving upon the Committee on Enrolled Bills.

Mr. POPPLETON. I state by request that Mr. ATKINS is so unwell that he could not attend the session to-night.

Mr. HOLMAN. Upon this subject I am paired with Mr. FOSTER; if here he would vote "ay," and I shouldvote "no."

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BLOUNT. I present a report from the committee of conference on the naval appropriation bill and I ask that it be read, and upon its adoption I ask the previous question.

The Clerk read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R No. 4616) making appropriations for the naval service for the year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes, after full and free conference, report that they are unable to agree:

JAMES H. BLOUNT,
EUGENE HALE,
W. C. WHITTHORNE,
Managers on the part of the House.

AARON A. SARGENT,
AARON H. CRAGIN,
WM. A. WALLACE,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The report is a mere report for the information of the House, and the question is, Will the House appoint a further conference?

The question was put, and it was decided in the affirmative.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints as new conferees Mr. BLOUNT, Mr. HARRIS of Virginia, and Mr. HALE.

NORTHERN PACIFIC RAILROAD.

Mr. LAMAR. I move to suspend the rules so as to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. No. 14) to extend the time for the construction and completion of the Northern Pacific Railroad.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask for the yeas and nays upon that motion. It involves the question of the restoration of thirty-six million acres of land to this company.

Mr. McCRARY. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. McCRARY. Is it in order now for the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. LAMAR] to state what he proposes in regard to the conduct of this bill?

The SPEAKER. It is not. The motion of the gentleman is to suspend the rules, and that motion is not debatable.

Mr. McCRARY. I ask unanimous consent that we may understand how long a time will be allowed for the consideration of this bill if it shall be taken up.

Mr. GARFIELD. I hope unanimous consent will be given to allow the chairman of the Committee on the Pacific Railroad [Mr. LAMAR] to state what he proposes to do.

Mr. HOLMAN and others objected.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. Is it in order to have this bill read?

The SPEAKER. That is in order.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. Then I ask that it be read; I want to know what it is.

Mr. LAMAR. If the bill is not passed it will be a practical confiscation of the interests of a large number of meritorious stockholders, widows, orphans, and trustees. The bill passed the Senate with but a few dissenting votes, and is unanimously recommended by the Committee on the Pacific Railroad of this House.

Mr. HOLMAN. I object to debate.

The bill was then read.

Mr. BUCKNER. I desire to inquire if it is the object of the gentleman to suspend the rules for the purpose of bringing the bill before the House for consideration?

Mr. LAMAR. That is the proposition, simply to bring it before the House for consideration.

Mr. FENN. Will the bill then be open to amendment?

The SPEAKER. Undoubtedly, unless the previous question is called on it and the call is sustained by the House.

The question was taken upon ordering the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

The question was then taken on the motion to suspend the rules; and there were—yeas 91, nays 71, not voting 128; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. William H. Baker, Ballou, Banning, Belford, Blair, Bradley, Buckner, Buttz, Caswell, Caulfield, Chittenden, John B. Clark, jr., of Missouri, Conger, Crapo, Culberson, Denison, Dobbins, Dunnell, Eames, Ellis, Foster, Freeman, Garfield, Gause, Hancock, Haralson, Hardenbergh, Benjamin W. Vance, Robert B. Vance, White, Whitthorne, Wike, James Williams, Willis, Benjamin Wilson, James Wilson, Yeates, and Young—71.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Abbott, Adams, Anderson, Ashe, Atkins, Bagby, George A. Bagley, John H. Bagley, jr., Banks, Bass, Beebe, Bell, Blackburn, Bland, Bliss, Boone, William R. Brown, Samuel D. Wiley Wells, Wheeler, Whiting, Willard, Andrew Williams, Jere N. Williams, Wilshire, Alan Wood, jr., Fernando Wood, Woodburn, and Woodworth—128.

So (two-thirds not voting in favor thereof) the rules were not suspended.

During the call of the roll the following occurred:

Mr. FRYE. I would like to vote on this bill, but I am an unfortunate stockholder in this road, and do not feel at liberty to vote until the Chair has ruled upon my right to do so.

Mr. CLYMER. What will you take for your stock? [Laughter.]

Mr. LANE. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be allowed to vote.

The SPEAKER. Rule 29 reads:

No member shall vote on any question in the event of which he is immediately or particularly interested.

Having read this rule, it is for the gentleman himself to determine whether he shall vote, not for the Chair.

Mr. FRYE. I decline to vote.

Mr. MACDOUGALL. I lost quite a large amount of money once on a contract in the Northern Pacific Railroad. I desire to know if that ought to affect my vote? [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not.

Mr. WELLS, of Missouri. I desire to state that my colleague, Mr. MORGAN, and the gentleman from Texas, Mr. REAGAN, have been compelled to leave the Hall on account of indisposition.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Indiana. The gentleman from Illinois, Mr. HARRISON, is absent on duty on the Committee on Enrolled Bills.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Michigan. My colleague, Mr. RUSK, is absent an account of indisposition.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

TAX BILL FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. NEAL submitted the following; which was read:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 4554) for the support of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes, having met, after a full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

The Senate recedes from its amendments numbered 2, 9, 10, 12, 13, 14, 17, and 19.

The House recedes from its disagreement to the amendments numbered 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 11, and 16; and agree to the same.

The Senate recedes from its amendment numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows:

On page 1, line 5 of the bill strike out "$1" and insert "$1.25;" and the House agree to the same.

The Senate recedes from its amendment numbered 15, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

On page 8, line 18, of the bill after the words "United States," strike out the words "other than those for the government of the District of Columbia;" and the House agree to the same.

The Senate recedes from its amendment numbered 18, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

In line 10 of the said amendment strike out "five" and insert "four;" and the Senate agree to the same.

LAWRENCE T. NEAL,
WILLIAM W. CRAPO,
Managers on the part of the House.
GEORGE E. SPENCER,
S. W. DORSEY,
W. H. BARNUM,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. NEAL. Mr. Speaker, most of the amendments embraced in this report are immaterial. There are only two or three to which I think it necessary to call the attention of the House. The first amendment of any consequence is the one relating to the rate of taxation upon real estate in the county. The bill as passed by the House fixed the tax upon the realty in the county at 1 per cent. The Senate amendment increased the tax to 1¼ per cent. In this report we have split the difference and put it at 1⅛.

The next amendment considered of importance by the committee was the one inserted by the Senate authorizing the Commissioners of the District to use in the repair of streets and pavements any of the surplus revenues derived from the different sources of taxation. The House conferees insisted upon a disagreement to that amendment; and it has been finally abandoned, so that the amendment is striken out.

In regard to another amendment, that relating to the taxation of church property, the Senate conferees abandoned the amendment inserted by the Senate; and the bill as it now comes before the House corresponds precisely with the bill passed by the last Congress.

Mr. STEVENSON. Will the gentleman please state what that was?

Mr. NEAL. The clause as amended provides that churches and the grounds actually occupied by them should be exempt. It provides also, that all property exempt by the laws of the United States shall be exempt from taxation by the District. That includes, I believe, school-houses owned by colleges or academies, and the lands appurtenant thereto. I think the law was first passed in 1870.

Mr. STEVENSON. This amendment leaves the law precisely as it was last year?

Mr. NEAL. Yes, sir. Now, the remaining amendment to which I wish to call attention is a new section inserted by the Senate—section 17—which provided that the Secretary of the Treasury should advance to the commissioners, to defray the ordinary running expenses of the government, the sum of $500,000. We have reduced this amount to $400,000. Upon examination of all the facts it appears absolutely impossible for the government of the District of Columbia to be run during the coming year without this advance on the part of the United States Government. The sum now proposed is much less than has been advanced at former periods. In 1874 Congress appropriated $1,300,000 outright to aid in carrying on the government of this District. In 1875 $1,060,000 was appropriated for the same purpose, in addition to $185,000 for interest on 3.65 bonds. During the last year Congress provided that the commissioners should anticipate the taxes by a loan to the amount of $418,957. I think that in this advance of $400,000 there will be no risk upon the part of the Government of the United States, inasmuch as the Secretary of the Treasury is required to retain the moneys as they are paid in, so as to re-imburse the Treasury. I demand the previous question on agreeing to the report.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof, the report was adopted.

Mr. NEAL moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate insisted on its amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 4261) to provide for the sale of desert lands in certain States and Territories, agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and had appointed as conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. SARGENT, Mr. OGLESBY, and Mr. KELLY.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed a bill of the following title, with an amendment in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

A bill (H. R. No. 2019) for the relief of Edwin Morgan, late captain of Company G, Seventy-seventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, without amendment, bills of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. No. 2606) for the relief of Catherine Harris; and

A bill (H. R. No. 559) for the relief of Almeron E. Calkins, late a lieutenant in the Eighth Michigan Cavalry.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed a bill (S. No. 1255) for the relief of Henry Voelter; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

ENROLLED BILLS.

Mr. HARRISON, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 559) for the relief of Almeron E. Calkins, late a second lieutenant in the Eighth Michigan Cavalry;

An act (H. R. No. 1611) authorizing the changing of the name of the sloop Addie Parker, of New Bedford, Massachusetts;

An act (H. R. No. 1765) respecting the limits of reservations for town sites upon the public domain;

An act (H. R. No. 1824) to change the name of the pleasure-yacht Hiram B. to Iola;

An act (H. R. No. 2606) for the relief of Catherine Harris; and

An act (H. R. No. 3574) for the relief of Marshal P. Thatcher.

AMENDMENT TO THE RULES.

Mr. SAYLER. Mr. Speaker, I am instructed by the Committee on Rules to submit the following report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Rules report the accompanying amendment to Rule 22; which is as follows, namely:

After the word "Speaker," where it first occurs in said rule, insert the following: "And pending the election of a Speaker, under the direction of the Clerk;" and recommend its adoption.

The necessity for this amendment can be briefly stated. This rule as originally adopted April 14, 1789, was as follows, namely:

"It shall be the duty of the Sergeant-at-Arms to attend the House during its sittings, to execute the commands of the House from time to time, together with all such process issued by authority thereof as shall be directed to him by the Speaker."

Experience had fully demonstrated, especially during the protracted struggles over the election of a Speaker in the Thirty-first, Thirty-fourth, and Thirty-sixth Congresses, respectively, that the rules for the preservation of order were defective, and the twenty-second rule was accordingly amended on the 16th of April, 1860, upon a report from the Select Committee on Rules, made by Mr. Washburn, of Maine, by the insertion of the following words after the word "sittings," namely: "To aid in the enforcement of order under the direction of the Speaker."

It has been found, however, in the organization of a new House, that this rule was still defective, in that it failed to direct and authorize the Sergeant-at-Arms to preserve order during the election of a Speaker.

Rule 146 requires the Clerk, pending the election of a Speaker, "to preserve order and decorum," but fails to provide means to execute his direction in that regard.

This proposed amendment supplies the defect in this particular by requiring the Sergeant-at-Arms to aid in the enforcement of order under the direction of the Clerk, the officer charged by law with the organization of a new House.

Mr. McPherson, the Clerk of the House for many years, stated during the organization of the House in the Forty-second Congress that he had no power to direct the Sergeant-at-Arms to enforce order, and could only appeal to members to preserve order and decorum.

The Committee on Rules believe the proposed amendment to be proper and necessary, and recommend its adoption.

Mr. COX rose.

Mr. GARFIELD. I should like to hear a statement from the gentleman from New York.

Mr. COX. I say as a member of the Committee on Rules that report as written was never submitted to me as one of its members. I do not know exactly what it means, and I hope it will be postponed until to-morrow morning, so I may have an opportunity to read it.

Mr. GARFIELD. I would like to make a suggestion on the subject.

Mr. SAYLER. Mr. Speaker, I will state to the House that the amendment as proposed in the report was discussed in the Committee on Rules at length, and, by a vote of four out of five of that committee, was adopted, and I was ordered to submit it to the House. The report contains nothing except a mere statement of the history of the rule, the original rule having been adopted in 1792, and the effect of the introduction of the clause to aid in the enforcement of order under the direction of the Speaker, which was adopted in 1860. I will state the only change in the rule, and will read the rule as it now stands, that members may understand it. The twenty-second rule provides that it shall be the duty of the Sergeant-at-Arms to attend the House during its sittings; to aid in the enforcement of order, under the direction of the Speaker. We propose to add at that point, "and during the election of a Speaker, under the Clerk of the House." It simply orders the Clerk of the House to command the Sergeant-at-Arms to preserve the order of the House during the time that the House is effecting its organization in the election of Speaker. That is the only change effected.

I will state when submitting the report I intended no discourtesy to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. COX,] and it was perhaps an inadvertence; but I have submitted the report as it is drawn to three members of the committee, and I do not know why I happened not to submit it to the gentleman from New York, and certainly he will not think it was an intentional discourtesy to him on my part. It certainly was not, Mr. Speaker. It only makes the change that I have stated. There has been trouble heretofore, and Mr. McPherson, as the report states, complained at one time when there was trouble in the organization of the House that he had no power except to appeal to members to preserve order.

Mr. CONGER. Was not that sufficient?

Mr. SAYLER. It only gives to the Clerk, during the time the House is effecting its organization in the election of Speaker, the power to preserve order in the House that belongs at all times to the Speaker. And as I stated, the amendment was concurred in by four out of five of the members of the Committee on Rules, and I understood the fifth member, General BANKS, to urge no special objection to it, but to state that he thought the Clerk was already possessed of that power. I do not know whether General BANKS is now in the House or not. I believe I state his position correctly. If not, the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. WILSON,] who is also a member of that committee, can correct me. I think it very important that this amendment should be adopted.

Mr. CONGER. Will the gentleman from Ohio object to having this report go over until to-morrow that it may be printed in the RECORD and that we may have time to consider it?

Mr. GARFIELD. I hope it will go over until to-morrow. I wish now to suggest the objection whether this amendment does not carry with it the assumption that we have created for the new Congress a full corps of officers. It implies a Sergeant-at-Arms. It implies a Doorkeeper.

The SPEAKER. They remain until their successors are elected.

Mr. GARFIELD. Not certainly without the consent of the incoming House.

The SPEAKER. They are the officers of the new House by law until their successors are appointed.

Mr. SAYLER. The proposed amendment to the rule certainly carries with it this implication: that until the successors of these officers are elected they are still officers of the House.

Mr. GARFIELD. But if under the rules of the House as they now exist the Clerk has not this power, then he has no power to command any person called an officer of the House. And if this amendment clothes him with that power, it must also carry with it a declaration of existing officers over whom he is to have power. It therefore assumes an organization of officers in advance.

Mr. SAYLER. Does the gentleman pretend to say that the present Clerk is not the Clerk of the House until his successor is elected?

Mr. GARFIELD. I know that is the law.

Mr. SAYLER. And is not the present Sergeant-at-Arms the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House until his successor is elected?

Mr. GARFIELD. I want to make one other suggestion; for I consider this as a very important question. I hold that as far as the new House is concerned this House has, in strict law, no power to bind its successor. Each House is independent of the other House; and the new House may call any of its members to the Chair to preside temporarily until the organization of the House is effected; and no one Congress is entitled, if the new House asserts its right, to project over that House any officer of the old House to direct it. But, as a matter of convenience, as a matter of preventing disorder, by common consent it has been agreed for many years that the Clerk of the former House shall preside. But when we now propose to clothe him with power to command a corps of officers about the House, I think we are going a great way. It may be it is right; but before the House is called to act upon the report I think it will be well to have it in the RECORD that we may see it in print.

Mr. SAYLER. I do not understand the peculiar position which the gentleman from Ohio appears to assume in this case. He seems to overturn all the precedents in regard to organizing a new House.

Mr. GARFIELD. O, no.

Mr. SAYLER. From the beginning of the Government down to the present time. I am so much accustomed to seeing things overturned in these times that I am not much astonished at it. But I am willing to let this go over till to-morrow, more especially on account of the statement made by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. COX,] to whom I certainly wish to show no discourtesy.

COMMITTEE ON ENROLLED BILLS.

The SPEAKER. The Chair asks consent of the House to name three additional names on the Committee on Enrolled Bills, so that the bills may be properly examined. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints as such additional members Mr. POPPLETON of Ohio, Mr. JAMES B. REILLY of Pennsylvania, and Mr. FORT of Illinois.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York, [Mr. COX.]

REMOVAL OF DISABILITIES.

Mr. COX. I was about to say that I am entirely content with the arrangement made about the report of the Committee on Rules that it shall go over till to-morrow. I rise now for the purpose of offering a bill, and I move to suspend the rules if any objection be made to its passage.

The Clerk read the title of the bill, as follows:

A bill to remove the political disabilities imposed by the third section of the fourteenth article of the amendments of the Constitution of the United States.

The Clerk read the bill in full. It provides that (two-thirds of each House concurring therein) all disabilities imposed and remaining upon any persons by virtue of the third section of the fourteenth article of the amendments of the Constitution of the United States be removed, and each and every person is hereby and forever relieved therefrom. And that whenever any person from whom disabilities are removed shall be elected or appointed to any post of honor or trust under the Government of the United States he shall take the oath prescribed by section 1767, title 14, of the Revised Statutes of the United States, or such other official oath as may be hereafter prescribed in such case by any other act of Congress.

Mr. GARFIELD. I think the gentleman had better wait until there is a fuller House before pressing that motion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that time will be saved by appointing tellers on this question, and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] will act as tellers.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 118, noes 37.

Mr. SAMPSON. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered, only 13 members voting therefor.

So (two-thirds voting in favor thereof) the rules were suspended, and the bill (H. R. No. 469) was passed.

JOHN J. ANDERSON.

Mr. BROWN, of Kentucky. I move that the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. No. 628) for the relief of John J. Anderson, surviving copartner of the firm of Anderson & White, and that the same be put upon its passage. I wish to have a moment to make a statement in regard to this bill. It has passed the Senate twice, and has been considered by the Committee on War Claims of this House, and is reported with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. GARFIELD. I understand that this bill has been reported favorably by the Committee on War Claims?

Mr. BROWN, of Kentucky. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that the report be read.

The SPEAKER. The motion is to suspend the rules, which motion suspends the right of the gentleman to call for the reading of the report.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. BROWN, of Kentucky; and (two-thirds voting in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill passed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. THROCKMORTON. I desire to move a suspension of the rules for a passage of the bill.

Mr. FORT. I move that the House adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to say that there are quite a number of gentlemen who have matters of trifling importance to the public but of great importance to individuals, which they desire to bring before the House.

Mr. GARFIELD. I would like to ask the Speaker to state what is the condition of the appropriation bills, and whether it would be safe to adjourn now.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed that the House should remain in session at least for half an hour more, so as to receive the report of the committee of conference on the legislative, &c., appropriation bill. The Chair thinks it right to make this statement.

Mr. SPRINGER. I would suggest that the House take up from the Speaker's table the House bills which have been returned with Senate amendments, so that every gentleman may have any bills in which he is interested considered.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that by unanimous consent the bills on the Speaker's table be taken up in their order and reported to the House and, if there is no objection to them, passed.

Mr. SPRINGER. I hope that will be done; that is right.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that the Senate bills and the House bills with Senate amendments now on the Speaker's table be taken up in their order, subject to objection.

Mr. PAGE. Would it not be in order to move to suspend the rules and pass a bill if objection were made to it?

The SPEAKER. This is proposed to be done by unanimous consent, and if objection be made to any bills they will resume their place upon the Speaker's table.

Mr. CROUNSE. I would like to include in the order Senate bills now in committees, and which have the unanimous approval of the committees to which they have been referred.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. CROUNSE] and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BRIGHT] ask leave to report from the Committee on Public Lands and from the Committee on Invalid Pensions Senate bills which have the approval of their respective committees, so that they may go upon the Speaker's table to be considered under this order. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask that House bills with Senate amendments be first taken up, because if the amendments of the Senate are concurred in that will secure the final passage of the bills.

The SPEAKER. House bills with Senate amendments will be first taken up.

RAILROAD LAND GRANT TO IOWA.

The first bill on the Speaker's table with Senate amendments was the bill (H. R. No. 4168) to amend section 1 of the act of May 12, 1864, for a grant of land in the State of Iowa to aid in the construction of a railroad in said State.

Mr. MORRISON. I object to that bill.

Mr. OLIVER. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his objection; it is a matter of merely local interest.

The SPEAKER. Objection being made, the bill will be passed over.

THOMAS J. SPENCER.

The next bill with a Senate amendment was the bill (H. R. No. 4198) to authorize the President to restore Thomas J. Spencer to his former rank in the Army.

Mr. FOSTER objected, but subsequently withdrew his objection.

Mr. GARFIELD. Let the amendment be read.

The amendment was to add to the bill the following:

And the law of promotion in the line is hereby suspended in this case for the purpose.

The amendment was concurred in.

Mr. THROCKMORTON moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SHORT-HAND REPORTERS FOR UNITED STATES COURTS.

The next bill with Senate amendments was the bill (H. R. No. 4476) to provide for the appointment of an official short-hand reporter for the United States courts in and for the district of California.

Mr. McCRARY. I ask unanimous consent that the House non-concur in the Senate amendments to this bill, and that a committee of conference be requested.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let the amendment of the Senate be reported.

The amendment was to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

That it shall be competent for any circuit or district court justice or judge, in any of the courts of the United States, to appoint a short-hand reporter of their respective courts, whose duty it shall be upon the request of the parties in any case and under the direction of said court, to take in short-hand full notes of the oral testimony and other oral proceedings in such case, upon the trial of issues of fact, not, however, including the arguments of counsel; which said notes shall be filed with the clerk of the court in which said cause is tried. Such notes, when written out in long-hand and authenticated by the certificate of such reporter, shall be deemed to be prima facie a correct record of such testimony and proceedings.

SEC. 2. That the reporter so appointed shall while engaged in the discharge of his duties be an officer of the court so appointing him, and shall be entitled to the same fees allowed by the law of the State in which said court is held to short-hand reporters in such State courts, or, where there is no such State law, to the fees which may be established by general rule of the court making the appointment, such fees to be chargeable and paid by the parties in like manner as other costs in the case. The court shall have power to make such rules and regulations as may be necessary to secure the said reporter his fees for the work so required at his hands.

Also amend the title so as to read: "A bill to provide for the appointment of official short-hand reporters for the courts of the United States."

Mr. CAULFIELD. This bill was originally reported from the Committee on the Judiciary of this House. What is the objection to the Senate amendments?

Mr. McCRARY. In the substitute adopted by the Senate there are some things which I think should be amended, and I therefore prefer that the amendments of the Senate be non-concurred in and a conference requested.

The motion of Mr. McCRARY was then agreed to.

The SPEAKER announced as the conferees on the part of the House Mr. McCRARY, Mr. WIGGINTON, and Mr. CAULFIELD.

ESTHER P. FOX.

The next bill with a Senate amendment was the following:

A bill (H. R. No. 1238) granting a pension to Esther P. Fox.

The amendment of the Senate was to strike out all after the word "from," in line 8, to the end of the bill, and to insert in lieu thereof the words "and after the passage of this act."

Mr. SPRINGER. That is in accordance with the practice of the House in regard to these bills, and changes the bill so that it shall take effect from and after the passage of the act, instead of dating back.

The amendment of the Senate was concurred in.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment of the Senate was concurred in; and also move that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think that has not been the practice of the House in reference to private bills.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the practice of the House in reference to these private bills upon their passage is to leave them without laying on the table the motion to reconsider, so as to retain power to correct any error that may afterward be discovered.

Mr. SPRINGER. I withdraw the motion.

MRS. ANN ANNIS.

The next bill with Senate amendments was the bill (H. R. No. 3011) granting a pension to Mrs. Ann Annis.

The amendments were read, as follows:

Strike out "Henry" and insert "Harvey."

At the end of the bill insert "to take effect from and after the passage of this act."

There being no objection, the amendments were concurred in.

ROSETTA HERT AND OTHERS.

The next bill with Senate amendments was the bill (H. R. No. 534) for the relief of Rosetta Hert, (late Rosetta Scoville,) Charles C. Benoist, Emily Benoist, and Logan Fanfan, half-breed Indians.

The amendments were read, as follows:

In lines 1 and 2 strike out "proper accounting officers of the Treasury and Department of the Interior are," and insert "Secretary of the Treasury is."

In lines 3 and 4 strike out "money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated," and insert "funds which may remain of the moneys arising from the sale of lands known as the Nemaha half-breed reserve on the Missouri River, in Nebraska, under an act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations, approved February 28, 1859, upon these parties satisfying the Secretary of the Treasury that they are entitled to the same."

There being no objection the amendments were concurred in.

EDWIN MORGAN.

The next bill with Senate amendments was the bill (H. R. No. 2019) for the relief of Edwin Morgan, late captain Company G Seventy-seventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Cavalry.

The amendment was read, as follows:

In line 6 strike out "19th day of June," and insert "7th day of July."

There being no objection the amendment was concurred in.

W. W. VAN ANTWERP.

The next bill with Senate amendments was the bill (H. R. No. 2694) for the relief of W. W. Van Antwerp, late major Fourth Michigan Cavalry.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Strike out "60" in line 4 and insert "50;" so as to read "the sum of $150."

The amendment was concurred in.

COMPENSATION TO CERTAIN LAND OWNERS.

The next bill with Senate amendments was the bill (H. R. No. 186) to provide for compensation to the owners of certain lands ceded by the United States to Great Britain in and by the treaty of Washington, July 9, 1849.

The amendments were read.

Mr. HOLMAN. I shall have to ask for the reading of that bill.

The SPEAKER. That is in the nature of an objection, and the bill will be passed over.

FRANCIS GUILBEAU.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 974) for the relief of Francis Guilbeau, of San Antonio, Texas; which was read a first and second time.

The bill was read. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Francis Guilbeau $2,600, in full payment of his claim against the United States for the use of his buildings at San Antonio and Galveston, Texas, in the years 1865 and 1866.

Mr. SCHLEICHER. I hope there will be no objection to this bill. It provides merely for the payment of rent under a written contract. It is a perfectly plain case.

Mr. HOLMAN. I should like to hear the report. Of course there is a Senate report on the bill. I think we should have some information to determine whether an objection would be proper or not.

Mr. SCHLEICHER. This was a quartermaster's contract for the rent of a building.

Mr. HOLMAN. If it was a regular contract why has the party not been paid?

Mr. SCHLEICHER. Several bills to provide for cases of this kind have been passed.

Mr. HOLMAN. But all regular claims of this kind would be paid in a regular manner.

Mr. SCHLEICHER. No, sir; several bills of this kind have passed the Senate.

Mr. HOLMAN. I know nothing about the case. I would be glad to hear the report.

The SPEAKER. The report is not at the desk.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

H. E. WOODHOUSE & CO.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 1071) for the relief of H. E. Woodhouse & Co., of Brownsville, Texas; which was read a first and second time.

The bill was read. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to H. E. Woodhouse & Co., of Brownsville, Texas, $952, being the amount demanded of them by the collector of customs and by them paid on account of non-dutiable goods, October 30, 1872.

Mr. SCHLEICHER. I will state that this is a case where the customs were wrongfully collected. Mr. Morrill, Secretary of the Treasury, recommended that they should be refunded. On that recommendation the Senate committee reported the bill favorably.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

NICHOLAS WAX AND OTHERS.

The next business on the Speaker's table was an act (S. No. 907) for the relief of Nicholas Wax, Michael Granary, and Moline Lange.

The bill was read.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think there should be some information first to the House as to whether this is a proper claim or not.

The SPEAKER. Objection being made, the bill will be passed over.

H. H. MATTHEWS.

The next business on the Speaker's table was an act (S. No. 931) for the relief of H. H. Matthews.

The bill was read.

Mr. HOLMAN. We should have some report in that case, and I object.

Objection being made, the bill was passed over.

THOMAS M. SIMMONS.

The next business on the Speaker's table was an act (S. No. 948) for the relief of Thomas M. Simmons.

The bill was read.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is there a report in this case?

Mr. LEVY. I ask the report be read.

The report was read.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. I object to the consideration of the bill at this time.

Objection being made, the bill was passed over.

WILLIAM JASPER CORDILL.

The next business on the Speaker's table was an act (S. No. 734) for the relief of William Jasper Cordill; which was read a first and second time.

The preamble recites that William Jasper Cordill, of Faribault County, State of Minnesota, did, on or about the 11th of March, 1866, file with the clerk of the court for Fillmore County, in that State, his affidavit and application in proper form for entry, under the homestead laws of the United States, of the fractional northwest quarter of section No. 7, of township No. 101, of range No. 26, subject to entry at the district land office at Winnebago City, and did, on the 14th of June, 1866, remove with his family on said land, and did reside thereon for the full period of five years required by the homestead law, and still continues to reside thereon, as shown by his proofs now on file in the General Land Office; that he did, in the year 1872, make full proof of his settlement, residence, and cultivation on the tract as a bona fide claimant under the homestead law, and applied for his final certificate therefor under homestead application No. 4038, made at Winnebago City on the 31st of March, 1866, being, as he supposed, his original application filed with the clerk of Fillmore County, and was refused such certificate for the reason that the original application No. 4038 was not, in fact, made by William Jasper Cordill, but was made by and in the name of his brother, one James W. Cordill; that James W. Cordill and other witnesses all agree that the actual settlement, residence, cultivation, and improvement upon the quarter section were made by William Jasper Cordill, and not by James W. Cordill; and that it is incompetent for the Commissioner of the General Land Office, as he deems, now to correct said mistake, and the parties have failed to show, after repeated effort, to the satisfaction of the Commissioner, how it occurred, there being no papers on file of the date of the original entry in the name or handwriting of William Jasper Cordill, but all the papers appearing under the genuine signature of James W. Cordill.

The bill authorizes the Commissioner of the General Land Office, in his discretion, to permit the final proof of William Jasper Cordill to be filed, and the final certificate to be made in his name, for the entry No. 4038, and to issue patent thereon for the northwest fractional quarter of section No. 7, of township No. 101, of range No. 26, in the district of lands now subject to sale at Worthington, Minnesota, formerly Winnebago City, and late Jackson district, in said State.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

ENROLLED BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS.

Mr. HARRIS, of Georgia, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled the following bill and joint resolutions; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (S. No. 1271) to remove the political disabilities of W. F. Carrington, of Virginia;

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 175) authorizing the issue of clothing to Company A, Second Regiment United States Cavalry; and Joint resolution (H. R. No. 176) authorizing the issue of clothing to private Francis Hegner, Company F, Seventh Cavalry, and private John C. Collins, Company G, Seventh Cavalry.

LOUIS ROSE.

The next business on the Speaker's table was a bill (S. No. 1034) for the relief of Louis Rose; which was read a first and second time.

The bill, which was read, provides that all claim of title of the United States to blocks 93 and 94 in the city of San Diego, California, as designated and described on the map made by Charles H. Poole, in or about the year 1856, for the authorities of the city, (being blocks numbered 54 and 56 on the map made in or about the year 1849 by Cave J. Couts, lieutenant United States Army,) is quitclaimed and released to Louis Rose, the equitable owner of those blocks.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

BENJAMIN FENTON AND D. W. FENTON.

The next business on the Speaker's table was a bill (S. No. 855) making an appropriation to pay the claim of Benjamin Fenton and D. W. Fenton; which was read a first and second time.

The bill, which was read, appropriates $958.32 in full payment, satisfaction, and discharge of the claim of Benjamin Fenton and D. W. Fenton, for rent of lot No. 59 of the Memphis navy-yard, in Memphis, Tennessee, while the same was occupied by the United States.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and it was accordingly read the third time; and passed.

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS AND CLAIMS.

The next business on the Speaker's table was a bill (S. No. 1109) relating to public accounts and claims.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. There is no necessity for the reading of that bill; I object.

COUNTERFEIT COIN.

The next business on the Speaker's table was an act (S. No. 1147) for the punishment of persons making or having in possession dies, molds, &c., for manufacturing counterfeit coin.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I think it is time for the House to adjourn; I object.

Mr. HOLMAN. No; wait till we get the conference report on the legislative appropriation bill.

Mr. CLYMER. It is necessary we should get it before the adjournment.

The SPEAKER. Objection being made, the bill is passed over.

FORT DALLES MILITARY RESERVATION.

The next business on the Speaker's table was an act (S. No. 1001) to provide for the disposition of Fort Dalles military reservation.

Mr. CONGER. I object.

Objection being made, the bill was passed over.

DENVER AND RIO GRANDE RAILWAY COMPANY.

The next business on the Speaker's table was an act (S. No. 1083) to amend an act entitled "An act granting the right of way through the public lands to the Denver and Rio Grande Railway Company," approved June 8, 1872.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I object.

Objection being made, the bill was passed over.

ISSUE OF ARMS.

The next business on the Speaker's table was a joint resolution (S. R. No. 30) to amend the joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to issue arms, approved July 3, 1876; which was read a first and second time.

The joint resolution, which was read, amends the joint resolution approved July 3, 1876, authorizing the Secretary of War to issue arms to the Territories and the States bordering thereon, by inserting after the words "each of said Territories" the words "and ammunition for the same, not to exceed fifty ball-cartridges for each arm."

The joint resolution was ordered to a third reading; and it was according read the third time, and passed.

RAILROAD LANDS IN KANSAS.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 1122) to secure the rights of settlers upon certain railroad lands, and to repeal the first five sections of an act entitled "An act granting lands to the State of Kansas to aid in the construction of the Kansas and Neosho Valley Railroad and its extension to Red River," approved July 25, 1866.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That sections 1, 2, 3, 4, and 5 of the act entitled "An act granting lands to the State of Kansas to aid in the construction of the Kansas and Neosho Valley Railroad and its extension to Red River," approved July 25, 1876, be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby instructed to issue no more patents to said railroad company for the lands withdrawn from market in consequence of the enactment of the sections of said act hereby repealed, and to withhold from delivery any patents not yet delivered for the same.

SEC. 3. That upon said Kansas and Neosho Valley Railroad Company, its successor or successors or assigns, filing with the Secretary of the Interior its acceptance of the terms, conditions, and impositions of this act, as hereinafter provided, and its execution and delivery of the deeds hereinafter specified, all of said lands, so withdrawn and undisposed of shall be restored to market by proclamation of the President of the United States and opened to settlement and purchase under the homestead laws of the United States only.

SEC. 4. That said railroad company, its successor or assigns, shall reconvey, by deed or deeds duly executed, all unsold lands patented to it, in pursuance of the sections hereby repealed, and shall pay into the Treasury of the United States the proceeds of all such lands sold and conveyed prior to the passage of this act, and that if said company shall have any uncompleted contracts for the sale of any portion of such lands, the same shall be forthwith canceled, if the contracting party or parties consent thereto in writing filed with the Secretary of the Interior; and if any portion of the purchase-money has been paid thereon, the same shall be refunded to the contracting party or parties.

SEC. 5. That the acceptance of said company, or its successor or assigns, of the terms, conditions, and impositions of this act shall be signified in writing, under the corporate seal of said company duly executed, pursuant to the direction of its board of directors first had and obtained, which acceptance shall be made within ninety days from the passage of this act. And the deed or deeds hereinbefore referred to shall be executed and delivered within six months from the passage of this act, and both deeds and acceptance shall be deposited with the Secretary of the Interior. And the payment of the money and the cancellation of the contracts hereinbefore specified shall also be made within a like period of six months from the date of the approval of this act.

Mr. GOODIN. I ask that this bill may be put upon its passage. I desire to state that it simply transfers from the railroad company to the Government of the United States about thirty thousand acres of land.

Mr. CLYMER. I wish to ask the gentlemen from Kansas one question. Why is it that this railroad company desires to re-convey these thirty thousand acres of land?

Mr. GOODIN. I will say in reply to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that these lands all lie within my own district and nearly all of them are settled upon. This railroad company has had a great deal of difficulty with settlers along the line of the road but not with reference to any of these lands. The company itself, I think, has about come to the conclusion that as these settlers will not buy o. them their best course is to make peace with the settlers themselves So the company is disposed to surrender these lands to the Government of the United States and let them be opened up by the settlers under the provisions of the homestead law. The five sections repealed are simply the sections which granted the lands to the railroad company; and all we do for the railroad company is to relieve them from the obligation of carrying troops, &c.

Mr. GARFIELD. Does the United States thereby become involved in any obligation?

Mr. GOODIN. Not in the least. Every acre of this land is turned back to the Government of the United States without imposing any obligation whatever on the Government.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that the sections of the law proposed to be repealed be reported.

Mr. MACDOUGALL. If those sections are to be read, I must object to the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then I will not insist upon the reading of the sections if this bill has been considered by the Committee on Public Lands of the House, and they say to the House that the bill ought to pass, and they are sure that we thereby surrender no right.

Mr. MACDOUGALL. I object to debate.

Mr. GOODIN. I will say to the gentleman from Indiana that the bill has passed our committee unanimously, and there is no objection to it whatever.

Mr. HOLMAN. The committee of the House?

Mr. GOODIN. Yes, sir, the Committee on the Public Lands of the House, of which the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SAYLER] is chairman.

Mr. MACDOUGALL. I withdraw the objection.

There being no further objection, the bill was read three times, and passed.

DENVER AND RIO GRANDE RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. JOHN REILLY. The objection to the bill (S. No. 1083) is withdrawn.

There being no further objection, the bill (S. No. 1083) to amend an act entitled "An act granting the right of way through the public lands to the Denver and Rio Grande Railway Company," approved June 8, 1872, was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That an act entitled "An act granting the right of way through the public lands to the Denver and Rio Grande Railway Company," approved June 8, 1872, be, and the same is hereby, amended by making the second proviso in said act read as follows, to wit:

Provided, That said company shall complete its railway to a point on the Rio Grande as far south as Santa Fé within five years of the passage of this act, and and shall complete fifty miles additional south of said point in each year thereafter; and in default thereof the rights and privileges herein granted shall be rendered null and void so far as respects the unfinished portion of said road.

The bill was read three times, and passed.

FORT DALLES MILITARY RESERVATION.

Mr. CONGER. I withdraw my objection to the bill relating to the Fort Dalles military reservation.

Mr. POPPLETON. I renew it. I think it is time to adjourn.

Mr. GARFIELD. We cannot adjourn. We must wait for the report on the legislative appropriation bill.

Subsequently Mr. POPPLETON withdrew his objection.

There being no further objection, the bill (S. No. 1001) to provide for the disposition of the Fort Dalles military reservation was read three times, and passed.

ISRAEL YOUNT.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 481) for the relief of Israel Yount.

The bill was read.

(Objected to by Mr. MORRISON.)

EXPENSES OF ELECTORAL COMMISSION.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 1238) making an appropriation for expenses of the electoral commission.

The bill was read. It appropriates the sum of $7,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to pay the expenses of the electoral commission provided for by the act approved January 29, 1877, entitled "An act to provide for and regulate the counting of votes for President and Vice-President, and the decision of questions arising thereon, for the term commencing March 4, A. D. 1877," the sum to be disbursed upon the certificate of the president of the commission; provided that any person employed by said commission may receive such compensation as may be allowed by said commission in addition to any other compensation or salary he may be receiving as an officer of the Government.

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust there will be some explanation of that bill.

Mr. GARFIELD. I think the gentleman should allow that bill to pass. I hope he will not think of permitting the expenses that have been incurred to fall upon the president of the commission himself. I will state in a word or two what I know about this. The commission was authorized to appoint officers. The president of the commission was by the commission authorized to make the appointments himself. He appointed, I think, three clerks, a sergeant-at-arms or marshal, and two or three assistants about the room.

He was compelled also, in consequence of the appropriation for the printing having run out, to make arrangements for the printing at private offices to print the certificates as they came over from the House and to print the objections of the objectors as they came over, there being no power to get the printing done at the Government Printing Office. What the expenses have been I do not know, but I know that a committee was appointed to act with the President in reference to this matter, and I think Senator BAYARD and perhaps Mr. HOAR were on that committee. I was not on that committee myself. That committee, headed by the president of the commission, revised and examined all the accounts, and were directed to make up and send to the two Houses a statement of the amount required for the expenses of the commission. I happened not to be present when the report was presented, but I have no doubt that the report was drawn up in accordance with the decision of the committee to which I referred.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is that report before the House?

Mr. GARFIELD. I suppose it consisted in a letter merely.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have no doubt that these expenses ought to be paid, but I think we ought to have the report before us before appropriating the money.

Mr. MACDOUGALL. I must object to the bill if it is going to lead to debate.

Mr. THORNBURGH. It does not lead to debate, and therefore the objection does not apply.

No objection being made, the bill was passed.

H. H. MATHEWS.

The SPEAKER. As objection is withdrawn by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] to the bill (S. No. 931) for the relief of H. H. Mathews, of Arkansas, the bill will be read.

The bill was read. It provides that the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay to H. H. Mathews, of Saint Francis County, Arkansas, the sum of $6,628.50, in full compensation for twenty-seven bales of cotton, seized by order of Colonel Jacob Fry, commanding United States forces at the post of Trenton, Tennessee, which cotton was taken and placed in the fortifications at that post.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that the report in this case be read. I think I find a very interesting question presented here. I understand myself what the claim is very well.

Mr. BAKER. It ought to be examined by a committee of the House.

Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania. I object to that bill.

Objection being made the bill was passed over.

CHARLES E. BOGGS.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 457) authorizing the restoration of Charles E. Boggs to the active list of the Navy.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I object to that bill.
Objection being made the bill was passed over.

NATIONAL MUSEUM.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 1252) for the erection of a fire-proof building for the national museum.

Mr. HOLMAN. O! I think that appropriation can be postponed for the present, and I must object to it.

Objection being made the bill was passed over.

AMENDMENT OF REVISED STATUTES.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (H. R. No. 1225) to amend section 2291 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, in relation to proof required in homestead entries.

Mr. GARFIELD. If the Committee on Public Lands, or any member of that committee, has looked into this case, I will not object, but otherwise I must object.

Mr. OLIVER. This bill has been before the Committees on Public Lands of the two Houses and has been reported by them unanimously, and it has at different times passed both Houses of Congress.

Mr. GARFIELD. Then I withdraw the objection.

The Clerk read the bill. It provides that the proof of residence, occupation, or cultivation, the affidavit of non-alienation, and the oath of allegiance required to be made by section 2291 of the Revised Statutes may be made before the judge, or, in his absence, before the clerk of any court of record of the county and State or district and Territory in which the lands are situated; and if said lands are situated in any unorganized county, such proof may be made in a similar manner in any adjacent county in said State or Territory; and the proof, affidavit, and oath, when so made and duly subscribed, shall have the same force and effect as if made before the register or receiver of the proper land district; and the same shall be transmitted by such judge, or the clerk of his court, to the register and the receiver, with the fee and charges allowed by law to him; and the register and receiver shall be entitled to the same fees for examining and approving said testimony as are now allowed by law for taking the same.

The bill in its second section provides that if any witness making such proof, or the said applicant making such affidavit or oath, swears falsely as to any material matter contained in said proof, affidavits, or oaths, the said false swearing being willful and corrupt, he shall be deemed guilty of perjury, and shall be liable to the same pains and penalties as if he had sworn falsely before the register.

No objection being made, the bill was passed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. JAMES B. REILLY. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. CLYMER. In the absence of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, allow me to say that if the House adjourns now we may endanger the passage of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. There has been a little delay in the preparation of the report of the committee of conference on the legislative, &c., appropriation bill. There was a mistake made which it required several hours to detect, although it was apparent that there was a mistake somewhere in the report prepared by the conferees. The report has now gone to the Senate, and I think we may count with reasonable certainty on its coming to the House for action within half an hour.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will now, after the statement of the gentleman from Indiana, submit the question upon the motion to adjourn; but the Chair desires to state that it is very important and essential that the House should remain in session until the report of the committee of conference on the legislative bill is received and acted upon.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope that the House will remain in session for at least half an hour longer.

Mr. JAMES B. REILLY. I am willing to remain here all night if it be necessary to pass the appropriation bills.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Indiana. I desire to state that the enrolling clerks have their hands full already, and that we cannot do anything except to enroll the appropriation bills.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would state that the practice has been to enroll the appropriation bills first.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Indiana. There is no use in passing other bills. We have not time enough to enroll anything but the appropriation bills.

Mr. STEELE. But these are Senate bills, and will be enrolled on the Senate side.

Mr. SPRINGER. We can employ additional enrolling clerks.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Indiana. It is utterly impossible to enroll any but appropriation bills.

The SPEAKER. That should not prevent the House from passing bills. Some of these bills are to be enrolled by the Senate enrolling clerks.

Mr. JAMES B. REILLY. I will withdraw the motion to adjourn, and hope members will take their seats and allow business to proceed in an orderly manner.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Indiana. I desire to say one word. There are now five clerks working at enrolling the bills we have already passed; and it is utterly impossible for us to enroll any bill——

The SPEAKER. These are Senate bills, and if passed will be enrolled in the Senate.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Indiana. I have no objection to passing them.

JOHN S. WOOD.

The next bill on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 40) for the relief of John S. Wood, late first lieutenant in the Seventh Pennsylvania Cavalry.

The bill directs the Secretary of War to cause to be furnished to John S. Wood, late a first lieutenant in the Seventh Pennsylvania Cavalry Volunteers, an honorable discharge from the service, on account of wounds received in action, of the same date as the date of the discharge of his company, and the Paymaster-General to pay him a sum equal to emoluments of a first lieutenant of cavalry, from the date of his muster into the service as such until the muster out of Company I of the Seventh Pennsylvania Cavalry, deducting therefrom such sum or sums as he may have received on account of such services for the same period.

The second section provides that nothing contained in the thirteenth section of the act entitled "An act supplementary to the several acts relating to pensions," approved June 6, 1867, or any other act limiting the time for filing a claim for a pension shall operate to prevent the said John S. Wood from making a claim for a pension from the date of the muster out of service of Company I, Seventh Pennsylvania Cavalry.

There being no objection, the bill was read three times, and passed.

ELI TEEGARDEN.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 1197) for the relief of Eli Teegarden.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Eli Teegarden, of California, $50.34, being the amount of a balance due him March 31, 1875, on his account as receiver of public moneys at the land office at Marysville, California.

There being no objection, the bill was read three times, and passed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Indiana. I desire to say that unless there is some prospect of the appropriation bills coming before the House I shall raise the question of a quorum.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appeals to the gentleman not to object to the transaction of the public business at this time.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Indiana. I want some assurance that the appropriation bills will come before the House.

The SPEAKER. It is the general practice on the last night and the last night but one of the session to proceed with business in this way by unanimous consent. There is no earthly danger of passing any bills that should not pass.

Mr. O'BRIEN. It seems to me——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is not in order except by unanimous consent, unless he has some motion to make.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I have a motion to make.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will submit it.

Mr. O'BRIEN. My motion is that these bills shall be considered as rejected when read, unless some member shall get up here and state upon his own authority that he knows something of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is watching carefully every bill as it is read.

Mr. O'BRIEN. If the Chair makes that reply to me, then I would inquire of the Chair whether he has personal knowledge that these bills are proper bills to be passed?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is watching them closely.

Mr. O'BRIEN. If the Chair will say so I will submit?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's suggestion seemed to imply that proper consideration was not given to these bills——

Mr. O'BRIEN. Not at all.

The SPEAKER. And in reply to that suggestion the Chair stated that he was listening to every bill as it was read.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I understand that, and so are a number of other members in the House. But there are many of these bills that not one of us know anything about; no reports are being read. I call the attention of the House to the fact that during the whole session of Congress——

Mr. COX. I move that the House now adjourn.

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust not.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will submit the motion to the House.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I hope the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] will not take me off the floor by such a motion.

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order.

Mr. COX. The House can vote down the motion to adjourn.

The motion to adjourn was not agreed to.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I desire to say, Mr. Speaker——

Cries of "Regular order!"

Mr. O'BRIEN. The regular order is to hear what I have to say.

Many MEMBERS. "O, no."

Mr. MACDOUGALL. I think the gentleman must have been asleep and just waked up, for he does not seem to know anything about what has been going on.

Mr. O'BRIEN. That is not so.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appeals to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. O'BRIEN] to let business proceed.

Mr. O'BRIEN. If any member will rise as these bills are read and say that they are proper bills and ought to be passed, I will not object; otherwise I think I must object to every bill.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the bill (H. R. The second section provides that the time for making final proof and payment by pre-emptors whose crops have been destroyed or injured as aforesaid be extended for one year after the expiration of the term of absence provided for in the first section of this act; and all the rights and privileges extended by this act to homestead and pre-emption settlers shall apply to and include the settlers under an act entitled "An act to encourage the growth of timber on western prairies," approved March 3, 1873, and the acts amendatory thereof.

Mr. BANKS. This bill has received the unanimous approval of the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. GARFIELD. I understand that a bill identical in terms with this was passed by the House not long ago. There can be no objection to passing this bill.

Mr. BANKS. If necessary, I could state the facts very briefly.

Several MEMBERS. It is all right.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. COX. I move that the House adjourn.

Mr. THORNBURGH. The Committee on Military Affairs of this House have acted on this bill favorably.

Mr. MACDOUGALL. And I hope it will be passed without objection.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think the bill ought to be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. A. S. WILLIAMS. That committee has already considered the subject and passed upon it unanimously.

Mr. WHITE. I move the House adjourn.

The House refused to adjourn.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think the original law is right. It has been repealed piece by piece.

Mr. MACDOUGALL. It is the unanimous report of the Committee on Military Affairs in both Houses.

Mr. VANCE, of Ohio. That bill received the approval of the Joint Committee on the Library in the Senate, and I do not myself see any objection to it. I think it should pass.

Mr. GARFIELD. It provides for the publication of a document precious to every man who wishes to know the early history of the country.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

JULIUS S. BOHRER.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. I object.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. I object.

WESTERN AND ATLANTIC RAILROAD, GEORGIA.

The next business on the Speaker's table was a bill (S. No. 177) to authorize the Secretary of War to open and re-adjust the settlement made by the United States Government with the Western and Atlantic Railroad, of Georgia; which was read a first and second time.

The bill, which was read, authorizes the Secretary of War to reopen the settlement made by the United States Government with the Western and Atlantic Railroad Company of the State of Georgia, and to adjust the same upon the basis and plan of settlement which was adopted in the settlement made by the Secretary of War with the Nashville and Chattanooga Railroad Company of East Tennessee, and Georgia Railroad Company and the Nashville and Decatur Railroad Company under the authority of an act of Congress approved March 3, 1871.

The second section provides that when said claims have been adjusted in pursuance of the provisions of this act the Secretary of War shall be authorized to issue his warrant on the Treasury of the United States to the governor of Georgia or his order for the amount of money it is found ought to be refunded to said railroad on account of said settlement.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I object.

Mr. CANDLER. I hope the gentleman will not object to that bill.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I withdraw my objection.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope there will be some explanation of it.

Mr. CANDLER. This bill was considered thoroughly by the Committee on Military Affairs of the Senate, and they reported unanimously in its favor. After discussion in the Senate it was passed by that body. It is a bill to open a settlement by the Western and Atlantic Railroad of the State of Georgia with the Government of the United States upon the same terms upon which settlements have been had with certain railroads in Tennessee on account of property sold by the United States to said railroads. It arises out of the sale of some property by the United States to the Western and Atlantic Railroad directly after the war. The amount paid by the Western and Atlantic Railroad to the Government of the United States was over $400,000, but there is nothing like that amount involved in this bill.

Mr. GARFIELD. I desire to ask the gentleman if this is a case similar to that of the Chattanooga Railroad?

Mr. CANDLER. Exactly the same.

Mr. GARFIELD. In that case the Government took possession of the railroad and ran it for some time during the war, and it was necessary after the war was over to make an adjustment with the road of the account between it and the United States. I am told that this is a case of the same kind. If it be, it is just that this settlement should be made.

Mr. STRAIT. I desire to say that this bill has been before the Committee on Military Affairs of this House and has received the sanction of that committee.

Mr. HOLMAN. What is the reason for re-opening this settlement?

Mr. CANDLER. There was an amount due from the United States for iron and other property taken from the Western and Atlantic Railroad, which was not included in the settlement made at the time the Western and Atlantic Railroad paid to the United States the amount due for rolling-stock and other property sold by the United States to that railroad.

Mr. GARFIELD. I will further say that the Senator from that State stated this case to me and requested me to give attention to it; and from his statement I believe that this bill is similar to the Tennessee bill, and a just settlement of the accounts between the Government and the State of Georgia, which ought to be made.

Mr. HOLMAN. Does the gentleman know anything of the reasons for re-opening the settlement?

Mr. GARFIELD. I know nothing of it except what I have been told by the gentleman representing the State.

Mr. CANDLER. This road is in the same position as the other roads with which settlements have been made. This amount was not included in the settlement and is now to be settled on precisely the same terms.

There being no objection, the bill was read three times, and passed.

JULIUS S. BOHRER.

Mr. TERRY. I understand the objection to the bill (S. No. 1010) is withdrawn.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I renew it.

WILLIAM WHEELER HUBBELL.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 667) for the relief of William Wheeler Hubbell, and to make just compensation for the past making, or use, or vending of his patent explosive shell-fuse and percussion-exploders by the United States.

Mr. EDEN. I object.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, informed the House that the Senate insisted on its amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 4476) to provide for the appointment of an official short-hand reporter in the United States court for the District of California, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two House thereon, and had appointed Mr. WRIGHT, Mr. HOWE, and Mr. COOPER as conferees on the part of the Senate.

THOMAS E. MALEY.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 1111) for the relief of Thomas E. Maley.

The bill was read.

Mr. A. S. WILLIAMS. That bill has passed the Committee on Military Affairs of the House unanimously, and they recommend its passage.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is a very complicated bill. I shall not object to its being considered to-morrow; but, in this confusion, I must object to its being passed now.

Mr. CONGER. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Private Calender a bill for the relief of a private soldier of the State of Michigan.

The SPEAKER. The Senate bills on the Speakers' table will soon be disposed of. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Michigan hereafter.

GEORGE A. ARMES.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 407) to authorize the restoration of George A. Armes to the rank of captain.

The bill was read.

Mr. GARFIELD. I object.

HENRY VOELTER.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 1235) for the relief of Henry Voelter.

The bill was read.

(Objected to by Mr. SPRINGER.)

RICHMOND FEMALE INSTITUTE.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 780) for the relief of the Richmond Female Institute, in the city of Richmond, Virginia.

The bill was read. It directs the accounting officers of the Treasury to pay to the treasurer of the Richmond Female Institute of the city of Richmond, in the State of Virginia, the sum of $4,933.33 in full payment and satisfaction for the rent, use, and occcupation of its buildings by the Army of the United States from October 1, 1865, to October 10, 1866; all claim for injuries and damages being satisfied by the acceptance of said sum; and the bill appropriates the said sum to enable such payment to be made.

Mr. HOLMAN. What was the date of the occupation?

Mr. TUCKER. From October 1, 1865, to October 10, 1866; that is, after the war.

There being no objection, the bill was read three times, and passed.

LOUISVILLE ORPHANS' HOME.

Mr. WATTERSON. I move that the bill (S. No. 259) for the benefit of the Louisville Baptist Orphans' Home be taken from the Speaker's table and passed.

Mr. CONGER. I made objection to that bill when it was up before, but I have since examined it and I think ought to pass, and therefore I withdraw the objection.

No further objection being made, the bill was passed.

MOSES F. CARLTON.

Mr. CONGER. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Private Calendar the bill (H. R. No. 2386) for the relief of Moses F. Carlton, late second lieutenant Company I, Fourth Michigan Volunteers.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think we should proceed to execute the order of the House if it is not completed.

The SPEAKER. The order is completed.

Mr. CONGER. I ask the gentleman to give me the privilege of having that bill read.

Mr. HOLMAN. The Senate has adjourned, and there is no object now of continuing in session.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hopes that this bill will not be objected to unless it be wrong.

No objection being made, the bill was passed.

PENSION LAWS.

The SPEAKER. Unanimous consent was given for the reporting of the bill (S. No. 36) amending the pension law so as to remove the disability of those who, having participated in the rebellion, have, since its termination, enlisted in the Army of the United States, and become disabled. The bill will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the law prohibiting the payment of any money on account of pensions to any person, or to the widow, children, or heirs of any deceased person, who in any manner engaged in or aided or abetted the late rebellion against the authority of the United States, shall not be construed to apply to such persons as voluntarily left the forces of the rebellion, with the bona fide intent of aiding the United States in suppressing the same, and, in pursuance of such intent, afterward enlisted in the Army of the United States, and who, while in such service, incurred disability from a wound or injury received or disease contracted in the line of duty: Provided, however, That this act shall not be construed to include those who enlisted while they were prisoners of war.

No objection being made, the bill was passed.

SETTLERS UNDER THE PRE-EMPTION LAW.

The SPEAKER. The Chair now lays before the House the bill (S. No. 1163) for the relief of settlers on the public lands under the pre-emption laws.

Mr. CROUNSE. That bill has the unanimous approval of the Committee on Public Lands.

No objection being made, the bill was passed.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to withdraw my objection to the bill, (H. R. No. 555,) the patent being in the interest of the dissemination of knowledge.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move that the House take a recess until ten o'clock to-morrow. It is now past one o'clock, and the Senate has adjourned, and under such circumstances the House had better take a recess.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed that the Senate bills passed to-night have been enrolled in the Senate.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. There is evidently no quorum present.

Mr. WADDELL. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope not; I hope we shall take a recess.

Mr. WADDELL. I will modify my motion so as to move that the House take a recess until ten o'clock.

Mr. BANNING. I move that the House adjourn, and I make that motion because I have been trying unsuccesfully to offer a bill all day.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman if he has been trying to offer a bill.

Mr. BANNING. I have been trying all day. I objected to bill No. 667, and I understand that the Committee on Naval Affairs fully considered the bill and recommended its passage.

Mr. HOLMAN. I had moved that there be a recess until ten o'clock.

Mr. BANNING. I will withdraw my motion if the gentleman from Indiana will treat me as fairly as I want to be treated.

Mr. THORNBURGH. I renew the motion that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken on the motion, and the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. WHITE. I make the point of order that no quorum voted.

Mr. GLOVER. I ask the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] to withdraw his motion for a recess to enable me to offer a resolution.

Mr. CAULFIELD. I object to that. Let us all have an opportunity to offer our resolutions, or cut them all off.

The question was then taken on the motion for a recess until to-morrow morning at ten o'clock; and upon a division there were—ayes 32, noes 22.

Mr. CAULFIELD. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. BANNING. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will make it.

Mr. BANNING. Is it in order for less than a quorum to take a recess?

The SPEAKER. It is not, if the point is made.

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust that point will not be made.

Mr. CAULFIELD. I make it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will state to gentlemen that if we take a recess to a later hour than ten o'clock to-morrow it may be fatal to some of the appropriation bills.

Mr. CAULFIELD. Let us all have an equal show here.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] withdraw his motion for a recess?

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not. I desire to say that it will be impossible for me to remain here much longer to-night, and I know that is the case with many other members.

Mr. SAYLER. Our committees ought to have to-morrow morning from ten to eleven o'clock for their meetings. I know that the Committee on Public Lands want to have a meeting to-morrow morning, and I suggest to the gentleman to modify his motion so as to take a recess until eleven o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think if we go beyond ten o'clock to-morrow morning it will be likely to prove fatal to some of the appropriation bills.

Mr. SAYLER. Very well. I will withdraw the suggestion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will again submit the question upon the motion that the House now take a recess until ten o'clock to-morrow morning.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at one o'clock and twenty-five minutes a. m.) the House took a recess until ten o'clock a. m.

AFTER THE RECESS.

The recess having expired, the House was called to order by the Speaker at ten o'clock a. m., (Saturday, March 3.)

THOMAS MORROW.

Mr. TARBOX. I ask unanimous consent to submit for adoption at this time a resolution which has the approval of the chairman of the Committee of Appropriations [Mr. HOLMAN] and the chairman of the Committee on Accounts, [Mr. ROBERTS.]

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to pay out of the contingent fund of the House to Thomas Morrow, for services rendered under the Doorkeeper of the House, the sum of $350.

There being no objection, the resolution was adopted.

Mr. TARBOX moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

HARBORS OF REFUGE ON THE OHIO RIVER.

Mr. SAYLER, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be requested to report to Congress on the best method, by harbors of refuge or otherwise, of protecting the river commerce at Cincinnati from floes of ice in the Ohio.

Mr. SAYLER. I offer this resolution in accordance with the suggestion of Major Merrill, of the Engineer Corps, stationed at Cincinnati, and upon the recommendation of General Humphreys, Chief of Engineers of the United States Army. It is intended to cover all the ground of the resolutions heretofore adopted by the House, and which were offered by my colleague, [Mr. BANNING,] by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. JONES,] and by myself.

The resolution was then adopted.

HENRY THOMAS.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I want to get a few dollars for a little colored messenger of the Committee on War Claims, and I ask unanimous consent that the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk be adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House be directed to pay out of the contingent fund to Henry Thomas, for sixty days' services as messenger to the Committee on War Claims, at $2 per day, $120.

There being no objection, the resolution was adopted.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

HENRY M. MEADE.

Mr. WHITTHORNE, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, House bill No. 1082, for the relief of Henry M. Meade, late paymaster in the United States Navy.

The bill authorizes the accounting officers of the Treasury to adjust the accounts of Henry M. Meade, late a paymaster in the United States Navy, and credit him with the sum of $2,545.22 for unavoidable losses and checkages sustained by him in the legitimate performance of his duties as paymaster in the United States Navy from 1862 to 1872, which sum stands charged against him in the United States Treasury Department.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

MOLINE WATER POWER COMPANY.

Mr. HENDERSON, by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 194) to appoint a commission to examine into the matter of contracts made by and between the United States and the Moline Water Power Company as to the water power at Moline, Illinois, and to report to Congress as to the same; which was read a first and second time.

The preamble states that the Moline Water Power Company of Moline, in the State of Illinois, complains that certain contracts made with said company by the United States, through the Secretary of War acting under the authority of Congress, have not been carried out in good faith in developing and maintaining the water power at said town of Moline, as required by said contracts, and that by reason of such failure said company has sustained and is sustaining large damages.

The joint resolution authorizes and requires the Secretary of War to appoint a commission, to consist of three competent engineers, one of whom shall be the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army, whose duty it shall be to examine into the subject-matter of said contracts made by and between the United States and the said water power company, as to said water power and the development and maintenance of the same, and to report to the Congress of the United States at its next session what if anything is necessary to be done by the United States to carry out in good faith said contract, and to relieve said water power company from its alleged grievances, said report to be submitted through the Secretary of War to the Congress of the United States at its next session, and to be directed to the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Mr. HENDERSON. I desire to state that this is a mere resolution of inquiry, and I introduce it at the suggestion of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

FRUIT BRANDY.

Mr. LUTTRELL. I ask unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. No. 3925) in relation to the production of fruit brandy and to punish frauds connected with the same be taken from the Speaker's table in order that an amendment of the Senate may be concurred in. The bill passed the House unanimously.

There being no objection, the amendment was concurred in.

Mr. LUTTRELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

FRANCIS A. PAGE.

Mr. JOYCE, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay out of the contingent fund to Francis A. Page, a messenger on the soldiers' roll, the sum of $300, being the amount of salary due him as a disabled soldier from September 1, 1876, to December 1, 1876.

MRS. HELEN M. SLOCUM.

Mr. JOYCE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4700) to remove the political disabilities of Mrs. Helen M. Slocum, of New York City; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

REPORT OF THE COMMISSIONER OF EDUCATION.

Mr. CUTLER. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration at this time of the joint resolution (H. R. No. 192) for printing the Report of the Commissioner of Education for 1876. This bill has the unanimous approval of the Committee on Education and Labor, as well as the Committee on Printing.

The joint resolution was read. It provides for printing fifteen thousand copies of the Report of the Commissioner of Education for 1875 and 1876; five thousand for the use of the Commissioner, twenty-five hundred for the use of the Senate, and seventy-five hundred for the use of the House of Representatives.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think the number proposed to be printed is unnecessarily large.

Mr. VANCE, of Ohio. I suggest a reduction of the number from thirty thousand to fifteen thousand.

Mr. CUTLER. Fifteen thousand is the number named in the bill.

Mr. VANCE, of Ohio. This bill has never been before the Committee on Printing.

Mr. HOLMAN. I waive any objection to this bill; but I must object to the passage of any bills in such disorder that it is impossible for us to understand what we are doing.

PURCHASE OF FREEDMAN'S BANK BUILDING.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I am instructed by the Select Committee on the Freedman's Bank to report back a communication relative to the purchase by the Government of the Freedman's Bank building, and to ask its reference to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

There being no objection, the reference was changed accordingly.

JULIUS S. BOHRER.

Mr. ROBERTS. I ask unanimous consent to have taken from the Speaker's table and passed at this time the bill (S. No. 1010) for the relief of Julius S. Bohrer, master in United States Navy.

The bill was read. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Julius S. Bohrer, retired master United States Navy, or his legal representatives, the pay and allowances of a retired master from December 30, 1865, to June 5, 1876, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. ROBERTS. This bill has received the unanimous indorsement of a committee of this House; it has been passed by the Senate unanimously. I hope there will be no objection to passing it here.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to inquire how large a sum is to be expended under this extraordinary bill—a bill that proposes to pay an officer for a period of eleven years, during which he has not been in service.

Mr. ROBERTS. And during which time he has demanded his right under the Constitution to have a trial in order that the facts of his case might be inquired into and justice done to him.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope my friend will state the amount the bill proposes to pay.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] object to the bill?

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not wish to object, if it is proper the bill should pass. But this is the first hearing of the bill that I have had or any other member of the House.

Mr. ROBERTS. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. TARBOX,] who reported a House bill similar to this.

Mr. TARBOX. A bill precisely identical in terms with this has been reported unanimously by the Committee of Claims and is now upon the Private Calendar. I do not know the precise amount which will be paid to this officer under the bill. I only know that whatever the amount it is only a proper measure of justice.

Mr. FIELD. That is not satisfactory. What is the amount?

Mr. HOLMAN. About $15,000.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. HOLMAN. I should prefer not to act on this question without a regular report. This is a very extraordinary measure.

Mr. TARBOX. May not the report be read?

The SPEAKER. There is no report here; that is the difficulty.

Mr. TARBOX. I send to the desk and ask to have read the report of the Committee of Claims upon a House bill similar in terms to this.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee of Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 4035) for the relief of Julius S. Bohrer, United States Navy, having had the same under consideration, submit the following report:

Bohrer entered the naval service in 1839, and was retired as a master in 1855. In 1861, while on the retired list, at the commencement of the civil war, he volunteered into active service, and served through the war with the rank and pay of a retired master. On December 30, 1865, he was dismissed the service by order of Secretary Welles, in consequence of the findings of a naval court of inquiry. He immediately demanded a trial by court-martial, and renewed his demand often and persistently, but was unsuccessful in his application until May, 1876, when his trial by court-martial was had, and the findings of the court fully exonerated him from all charges and specifications and declared his dismissal null and void. He seems to have presented his demand for a trial with as much vigor and diligence as was possible under the conditions of his health, it appearing that for a great part of the time he was in a most critical state of bodily and mental health, such as disabled him for business affairs, due chiefly, if not wholly, to injuries sustained by him while in the service. This bill proposes payment to him, or his legal representative, of his pay as retired master from the date of his dismissal to the date of his restoration. The order restoring Bohrer to the retired list is as follows:

[General Order No. 210.]

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, June 5, 1876.

The order of December 30, 1865, dismissing Julius S. Bohrer, master in the United States Navy, from the naval service, is hereby declared void, and Mr. Bohrer, under and by virtue of the Revised Statutes of the United States, title 15, chapter 10, article 57, restored to the retired list as master.

GEO. M. ROBESON,
Secretary of the Navy.

By the act of March 3, 1865, it is provided:

"That in case any officer of the military or naval service who may hereafter be dismissed by authority of the President shall make an application in writing for a trial, setting forth under oath that he has been wrongfully and unjustly dismissed, the President shall, as soon as the necessities of the public service may permit, convene a court-martial to try such officer on the charges on which he was dismissed. And if such court-martial shall not award dismissal or death as the punishment of said officer, the order of dismissal shall be void; and if the court-martial aforesaid shall not be convened for the trial of such officer within six months from the presentation of his application for trial the sentence of dismissal shall be void."

Master Bohrer did in fact promptly make his application for a trial by court-martial, but no court was convened within six months, and so, it seems, by the operative force of the statute the order of dismissal was rendered void.

But the act of July 22, 1874, prohibits the accounting officers of the Treasury from making any allowance to any officer of the Navy dismissed from the service and restored under the provisions of the act of March 3, 1865, section 12, except to the extent of six months' leave pay, unless it shall appear that such officer has demanded and continued to demand in writing, as often as once in six months, a trial by court-martial. The officers of the Treasury decline to allow Bohrer his pay from December 30, 1865, to June 5, 1876, because of the prohibition of the last-named statute and the absence of any appropriation available for the purpose.

Without attempting to define the just legal effect of the statute of 1874 as touching vested rights and imposing conditions which the officer in the pursuit of his rights could not anticipate, the committee have no doubt that Mr. Bohrer is entitled to the relief the bill provides. He performed long and honorable service. He voluntarily left a retirement in which he might honorably have remained in safety to serve the country in a season of public peril. He was wrongfully subjected to the painful indignity of dismissal in disgrace, and the consequent loss of emoluments, fairly the meed of his public service, in his age and infirmity. The Government having admitted the injustice done him and restored him to this rank, cannot justly refuse him the pecuniary benefits of which he has been unjustly deprived.

The committee recommend that the bill pass, with amendments as follows, namely:

First. Strike out the preamble.

Second. Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to pay to Julius S. Bohrer, retired master United States Navy, or his legal representatives, the pay and allowances of a retired master from the 30th day of December, 1865, the date of his wrongful dismissal from the naval service, to the 5th day of June, 1876, the date of his restoration to the retired list, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated."

Mr. SPRINGER. Let me ask the gentleman from Massachusetts whether the pay which this bill proposes to allow is the pay of a retired master.

Mr. TARBOX. Yes, sir; precisely the pay this officer would have received had he not been illegally dismissed from the service.

Mr. SPRINGER. The pay of a retired officer?

Mr. TARBOX. Yes, sir.

Mr. SPRINGER. Well, I think it ought to pass.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. HOLMAN. I insist it should come from a regular committee of the House.

Mr. ROBERTS. It has come from a regular committee of the House. This bill has passed the Senate, and the subject having already been acted on by a regular committee, I hope there will be no objection to passing it at this time.

Mr. HOLMAN. I must object.

The SPEAKER. The bill remains upon the Speaker's table.

COMMITTEE CLERKS.

Mr. KNOTT. Mr. Speaker, I send to the desk to have read a report I am instructed to make from the Committee on the Judiciary.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Judiciary Committee, to whom was referred a resolution of the 20th of December, 1876, instructing the committee "to inquire whether by the appropriation act of August 15, 1876, the twenty-one clerks to committees therein mentioned are entitled to receive as compensation during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, the amount per diem designated in said act for their actual services," have had the same under consideration and make the following report:

The bill begins with this provision:

"That the following sums be, and the same are hereby, appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated in full compensation for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, for the objects hereinafter expressed." (Page 143.)

On page 146 the following provision occurs:

"For twenty-one clerks to committees at $6 per day during the session, $15,120."

Your committee believes that the construction of the last-named provision, in connection with the first, is that the twenty-one clerks named are entitled to $6 per diem from the 30th day of June, 1876, to the 30th day of June, 1877, for each day during the first and second sessions of this Forty-fourth Congress embraced within that fiscal year.

Your committee therefore report the following resolution, and recommend that it be adopted by the House:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay out of the contingent fund of the House, at the rate of $6 per day from July 1st to August 31st, 1876, inclusive, to the clerks of the twenty-one committees designated by the Committee of Accounts as the committees for payment of clerks to which provision was made in the act of Congress approved August 15, 1876, entitled "An act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes," deducting therefrom any amount which the clerks of said committees respectively may have heretofore received during the time named.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, during the expensive period of 1871–'72–'73, under a policy which the country has condemned, we were in the habit of allowing to the employés of the House the balance of a month's pay whether we adjourned on the 4th of March or any other day. It was never done in the administration of this House at a period when the party now in power controlled the administration of the Government. I know of no reason why it should be done now. I know of no excuse for it. I do not see why the Government should pay gentlemen for the greater portion of a month when they render no service at all to the Government, and that, too, when we pay them beyond the compensation of other employés of the Government. It does not seem to be a proper thing, and I therefore must object.

Mr. KNOTT. I should like to make a remark. The gentleman from Indiana does not comprehend the nature of the resolution. I would like to explain to him that this resolution is simply the construction of an existing statute, which it is necessary should be done in order that the disbursing officers of the House may make up their accounts. And I wish further to state I have information that resolution was drawn at the request of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations and met his approval. It does not give any clerk one solitary cent more than the law allows, but simply construes the law so the disbursing officers may make up their accounts.

Mr. HOLMAN. I should not hold myself severely responsible for suggestion made of what might be done in a given emergency. I have no recollection, though, of it.

Mr. KNOTT. I move to suspend the rules.

The SPEAKER. There is no quorum and the gentleman will interfere with every other member.

Mr. KNOTT. If the gentleman from Indiana is to run this House, why then we might as well adjourn.

C. G. FREUDENBERG.

Mr. HARDENBERGH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. No. 189) placing the name of C. G. Freudenberg upon the retired list of the United States Army, and put it on its passage.

There was no objection, and the bill was taken up and read a first and second time.

The bill, which was read, directs the proper authorities to place the name of C. G. Freudenberg upon the retired list of Army officers, under the rank and grade of lieutenant-colonel, instead of captain, the rank now held by him on said retired list; and that said promotion take effect from the 15th day of December, 1870.

Mr. HOLMAN. I should like to have an explanation of that bill.

Mr. HARDENBERGH. I ask that the report of the committee in the Senate be read.

The report was read, as follows:

This bill is intended to place said Freudenberg upon the retired list with the rank of lieutenant-colonel instead of that of captain, as he now stands.

Charles G. Freudenberg was mustered as captain Fifty-second New York Volunteers, 1st November, 1861; promoted major 9th November, 1861, and lieutenant-colonel 24th November, 1862, same regiment, and resigned 11th December, 1863. He was appointed major Veteran Reserve Corps 10th December, 1863; promoted lieutenant-colonel 26th April, 1864, and was honorably discharged 9th March, 1866. He was appointed captain Forty-fifth United States Infantry (Veteran Reserve Corps) 28th July, 1866; transferred to Fourteenth United States Infantry 22d July, 1869, and retired with the rank of captain 15th July, 1870. He has been brevetted major and lieutenant-colonel United States Army and colonel of volunteers.

The records show that at the battle of Fair Oaks, Virginia, he received on June 1, 1862, "a gun-shot wound through the upper and outer part of his left thigh, which disabled him for two months to resume his duties; and also that he was severely wounded at the battle of Gettysburgh, Pennsylvania, July 2, 1863. He was examined by a retiring board in September, 1870. He was retired by a retiring board in September, 1870. The board reported him "incapacitated for active service by reason of wound in the left leg, received in the battle of Gettysburgh, July 2, 1863; and also incapacitated for active service in consequence of enlargement of the heart, which incapacitated him for any active exertion, and that it is impossible for the board to determine the cause of said incapacity." At the time he received the wound mentioned he was lieutenant-colonel Fifty-second Regiment, and in command of his regiment. As section 32 of the act of July 28, 1866, authorized retirement with the rank of command, &c., for disability resulting from wounds alone, Captain Freudenberg was, under the finding of the board, retired with the rank he held at the date of retirement, (that of captain.) He subsequently claimed that his disability is due to wounds alone; that he should have been retired with the rank of colonel, under section 32, act of July 28, 1866, and that under the act of March 3, 1875, (for the relief of General Crawford,) section 2, he should be given the rank of lieutenant-colonel.

The following certificates and letter bearing upon this case explain themselves:

NEW YORK, November 25, 1875.

Captain Charles Freudenberg, now on the retired list of the Army, served throughout the late war with distinction in the grades of captain, major, and lieutenant-colonel of the Fifty-second New York Volunteers. While major of that regiment he was severely wounded at the battle of Fair Oaks, Virginia; and again, while lieutenant-colonel commanding his regiment (in the Second Army Corps, Army of the Potomac) at Gettysburgh, under my command, he received three severe wounds while intrepidly leading his regiment against the enemy. These wounds disabled him for life, and compelled him to resign on account of disability, in December, 1863. He was afterward, in 1864, appointed a major and lieutenant-colonel in the Veteran Reserve Corps, and was subsequently commissioned as captain in the Forty-fifth United States Infantry.

During the whole period of his service under my command he was distinguished for good conduct and marked gallantry in battle, and I had frequent occasion to mention him for these qualities.

He received the brevets of major, lieutenant-colonel, and colonel for gallantry and meritorious service during the war.

WINF'D S. HANCOCK,
Major-General United States Army.

I hereby certify that Colonel C. G. Freudenberg was under my treatment while residing in Columbus, Ohio, for hypertrophy or enlargement of the heart, neuralgic pains, and lameness consequent upon wounds received in the service of the United States. Said wounds were one flesh-wound in the right arm, one through the left hip, and one through the upper part of the left leg, all from musket-balls, and a contusion or contused wound from a piece of shell on the spine and left side.

I further declare my belief that the consequences of said wounds are incurable, and that they totally disable the said officer for military duty.

STARLING LOVING, M. D.

COLUMBUS, O., November 8, 1875.

REMEDIAL INSTITUTE, SARATOGA SPRINGS, NEW YORK,
November 9, 1875.

We hereby certify that Colonel C. G. Freudenberg has been under our medical care between three and four months, a part of the time in the early summer, and the remainder during early fall. His wounds on the left side give him continual, and at times severe pain, and frequently make him so lame that he walks with difficulty. He also suffered from nervous palpitation of the heart, produced, as we believe, by an injury of his spinal cord by a piece of shell.

S. S. & S. E. STRONG.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, BOARD OF HEALTH,
Office of Registrar, Washington, May 2, 1876.

I certify that C. G. Freudenberg, late lieutenant-colonel Fifty-second Regiment New York Volunteers, has been under my professional care for the last past eight months, and that, upon a most careful physical examination of his case, I find that he has received a gunshot wound in his hip, passing downward and inward and emerging on the inner surface of the upper third of the left thigh, producing lesion of important branches of the external cutaneous and anterior crural nerves, causing several neuroma of the nerves named; and also a gunshot wound passing through the anterior muscles of the left thigh. The present condition of the important branches of the external cutaneous and anterior crural nerves is such as to produce constant and severe neuralgic pains, and render the patient unable to perform either continuous physical or mental labor; in short, producing permanent disability.

D. W. BLISS, M. D.

HOBOKEN, NEW JERSEY, December 17, 1870.

This certifies that Colonel C. G. Freudenberg, United States Army, was under my treatment from July 21 to August 26, 1863, from wounds received in battles of the late war of the rebellion. Of these wounds, if I recollect right, one was in the elbow, another in the thigh, and when he left here they were healing; but a contusion of the spine, being the effect of a shell explosion, showed still alarming symptoms of impeded respiration and heart disorder, the real nature of which I had no opportunity of more closely observing, as the patient left the place.

C. J. LOEWENTHAL, M. D.

It will be seen by reference to these reports that if the retiring board had been in possession of all of the facts, they would have reported that the incapacity in consequence of an enlargement of the heart resulted from a wound or contusion of the spine, in which case he would have been retired under section 32, act of 28th July, 1866, as colonel, the command held by him when wounded, and would have been reduced to the rank of lieutenant-colonel under the Crawford bill, section 2, act March 3, 1875.

Your committee therefore recommend that said C G. Freudenberg be placed upon the retired list with the rank of lieutenant-colonel.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HARDENBERGH moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ADVERSE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. JOHN REILLY. I ask unanimous consent that adverse reports from committees may be handed to the Clerk at the desk and an order made that the bills adversely reported be laid on the table and the accompanying reports printed.

The SPEAKER. The bills embraced in this proposition, on which adverse reports are made, are practically killed; and the adverse reports accompanying the bills are printed so that they may be filed for reference. Is there objection to the proposition of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection and it was so ordered.

ROBERT C. BUCHANAN.

Mr. A. S. WILLIAMS, by unanimous consent from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4701) for the relief of Robert C. Buchanan, colonel (retired) and brevet major-general of the United States Army; which was read a first and second time, recommitted to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

FORT UNION MILITARY RESERVATION.

Mr. STRAIT. I ask unanimous consent to report back from the Committee on Military Affairs, with amendments, and to have put upon its passage at this time, as amended, the bill (H. R. No. 4304) to authorize the United States to secure a title to the Fort Union military and timber reservation in New Mexico.

The SPEAKER. The bill and the amendments will be read for information; after which objections, if any, will be in order.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enactedt &c., That upon the owner or owners of the lands embraced within the limits of the Fort Union military and timber reservation, situated in the county of Mora and Territory of New Mexico, as surveyed and platted by John Lambert, in March, 1868, and as declared and set apart by the President of the United States by proclamation, filing in the office of the Commissioner of the General Land Office good and sufficient deeds in law conveying to the United States all the right, title, and interest of such owner or owners in and to said land, such owner or owners, his or their legal representatives, thereupon, in lieu of the land so conveyed to the United States may select and shall be allowed patents for an equal quantity of the unappropriated public lands of the United States in tracts not less than the subdivision provided for in the United States land laws, and if surveyed when taken, to conform, when surveyed, to the general system of the United States land surveys; and the Commissioner of the General Land Office, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, is hereby authorized and directed, upon the filing of said deeds as aforesaid, to issue certificates of location, in legal subdivisions, to the grantor or grantors in said deed or deeds, his or their legal representatives, in accordance with the provisions of this act.

Add to the bill the following:

Provided, That the acceptance by the grantor or grantors of any certificate of location provided for in this act shall be taken and held as a full and complete relinquishment by such grantor or grantors, his or their legal representatives, of all right, claim, and demand of every kind, nature and description, he or they may have against the United States for the use and occupation of the premises conveyed by him or them and for any damages to said premises: And provided, That the certificates of location herein provided for shall not be located upon any lands known to the law as double-minimum land.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask from the gentleman an explanation of the purpose of that bill.

Mr. STRAIT. Let the report of the committee be read.

Mr. HOLMAN. A few words of explanation may probably answer the purpose as well.

Mr. STRAIT. These lands on the Fort Union military reservation have been patented to the owners. They are situated in the Mora grant. The Government has about half a million dollars' worth of property there. The amendment reported by the committee provides that no double-minimum lands shall be taken by the parties in lieu of these lands.

Mr. TERRY. I think that is as good as the Government can do.

Mr. HOLMAN. The Government wishes to get possession of these lands?

Mr. STRAIT. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOLMAN. This is the recommendation of the Secretary of War?

Mr. STRAIT. Yes, sir; and of the Land Department.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think I begin to understand this matter. The Government wishes to get this land for the purpose of a fort and to give these parties other lands in lieu of them. Am I right?

Mr. STRAIT. Yes, sir; and it is provided that they shall have, in lieu of those, lands other than double-minimum lands.

Mr. HOLMAN. After that explanation I have no objection to the bill being passed.

The amendment of the committee was adopted.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

WITNESSES IN CONTEMPT.

Mr. TUCKER, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and adopted:

Whereas all the investigations that have been directed by this House have been virtually closed, and no more testimony can be taken by reason of the near adjournment of the House, and the further imprisonment of witnesses in contempt of the authority of this House cannot conduce to the truth sought by said investigations; Therefore.

Resolved, That the Sergeant-at-Arms be directed to discharge all persons held by him under order of this House for contempt of its authority.

SIGNAL-SERVICE.

Mr. SINGLETON. I ask unanimous consent to report back from the Committee on Appropriations, with amendments, the bill (S. No. 731) to limit and fix the Signal-Service, and that it be put upon its passage as amended.

The bill was read. It authorizes the President to appoint, as assistants to the Chief Signal Officer, two majors, six officers who shall have the rank and pay of captains of infantry, six who shall have the rank and pay of first lieutenants mounted, and six who shall have the rank and pay of second lieutenants of infantry, or to detail as such assistants the said number of officers who shall have respectively the said rank and pay while so serving.

The bill in its second section provides that the enlisted force shall be maintained as hitherto upon duty, and not to exceed one hundred and fifty sergeants, thirty corporals, and three hundred privates; and the enlisted men of the Signal Service shall receive pay at the rates formerly fixed for enlisted men of the Signal Corps of the Army of similar grades, provided that all acts or parts of acts relating to the duties of the Chief Signal Officer and the Signal Service shall remain in force.

The amendments of the Committee on Appropriations were read as follows:

Amend section 1 as follows:

In line 1 of the section strike out the word "appoint" and insert in lieu thereof "detail from the line of the Army."

In line 3 of the section strike out the words "who shall have" and insert the word "of."

In line 4 of the section strike out the words "of infantry," and strike out the words "who shall have" and insert the word "of."

In line 5 of the section strike out the words "of infantry."

In line 6 of the section strike out the words "who shall have" and insert the word "of."

Amend section 2 as follows:

In line 4 of the section strike out the word "three" and insert the word "two;" and after the words "one hundred," in the same line, insert the words "and twenty."

And strike out all after the words "privates," in the said line, down to and including the word "grades," in line 8.

Mr. KASSON. Will the gentleman from Mississippi state what force is left under the proposed amendments?

Mr. SINGLETON. This does not add one dollar of expense to the service as provided by the appropriation bill of last year, except that it details two majors of the Army.

Mr. HOLMAN. The effect of the bill as proposed to be amended by the gentleman from Mississppi, [Mr. SINGLETON]——

Mr. SINGLETON. By instructions of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HOLMAN. The effect of the bill is this: As the law now stands there is one chief of the Signal Corps with the rank of colonel, six first lieutenants, and twelve second lieutenants; making nineteen officers, including the chiefs, employed in that service. The effect of this amendment is, first, to increase the number by two majors.

Mr. SINGLETON. It does not increase the expense.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then the effect is to increase the grade of the officers, and to increase the number so as to make twenty in all. The amendment provides for the detail of these officers, and not for their number being increased by appointment in civil life. The number of men engaged in the service remains as now at three hundred.

But the point I have to make is this: This bill as proposed to be amended is not specially objectionable, because it provides simply for a detail of these officers from the Army. As it came from the Senate it would allow appointments from civil life and the promotion of lieutenants in the Army to the rank of major. In the closing hours of this session, if it is the understanding that these amendments are to be made here and the subject sent to a committee of conference, and then the conferees on the part of the House are to yield to the plan of the Senate and pass the bill in its original form, then I must object to this increase of rank in this service.

Mr. KASSON. The object of my inquiry was to ascertain if it was intended to increase or diminish the efficiency of this service.

Mr. SINGLETON. There is not one dollar increase of expenditures.

Mr. KASSON. It is an object of great interest to me to see this service made more efficient, and whatever is proposed in that direction I should be in favor of.

Mr. SINGLETON. I am surprised at the objection of my friend from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN,] because he is a member of the committee that instructed me to report this bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. If my friend from Mississippi [Mr. SINGLETON] will say that he will not ask the House to recede from these amendments——

Mr. SINGLETON. I cannot say anything at all of that kind, because I do not know that I shall be upon the committee of conference, if there be one, and for me to make a promise of that sort would be entirely nugatory.

Mr. HOLMAN. I understand that the Committee on Military Affairs is opposed to this bill.

Mr. SINGLETON. It does not add one single dollar of expense; it simply allows the detail of officers of higher rank in order to make this service more efficient.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is true of the bill as proposed to be amended, but it is not true of the original bill as it passed the Senate, for that increased the grade of officers from lieutenants to majors and provides for the appointment of officers from civil life. I hope the House will not consent to amend this bill further; I cannot object to these amendments being adopted, but I certainly will ask the House not to pass the bill in its original form.

Mr. SINGLETON. "Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof." The gentleman is anticipating what he does not know will happen at all. The Senate may concur in these amendments; I think it likely they will. If it goes to a committee of conference, I cannot bind myself or any man here as to what our future action will be. All I can say is, that the only object is to make this service more efficient.

The amendments were adopted; and the bill, as amended, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BOARD OF COMMISSIONERS OF CLAIMS.

Mr. EDEN. I ask unanimous consent to report from the Committee on War Claims for present consideration Senate bill No. 1128, to extend for two years the act establishing a board of commissioners of claims, and the acts relating thereto, with an amendment.

The bill provides that sections 2, 3, 4, and 5 of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the year ending June 30, 1872, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1871; and the act entitled an act to authorize the commissioners of claims to appoint special commissioners to take testimony, and for other purposes," approved May 11, 1872, be, and the same are hereby, extended and continued in force for two years from March 10, 1877, provided that nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to extend the time for filing claims before said commission, or to enlarge its jurisdiction, or to authorize the filing of new claims.

The amendment reported from the Committee on War Claims was to add to the bill the following:

SEC. 2. That the commissioners of claims shall not receive any evidence on behalf of any claimant or claimants for the allowance of any claim or claims, unless such evidence shall have been taken and presented and filed by the 10th day of March, 1878, except in rebuttal of evidence introduced on behalf of the Government; and all claims wherein the evidence of claimant or claimants is not filed within the time herein limited shall be deemed barred forever thereafter.

Mr. HOLMAN. I did not understand the bill fully when it was read. I would inquire how long the time is extended.

Mr. EDEN. The Senate bill proposed to extend the commission for two years. The amendment proposed by the Committee on War Claims of the House goes upon the theory that this commission ought to be closed up as soon as the business now on hand before it can be disposed of. In order to facilitate that object we propose to amend so as to provide that the original evidence on the part of the claimants shall all be taken by the 10th of March, 1878.

There are now pending before the commission about two thousand five hundred claims in which the evidence has been taken in whole or in part. There are pending over eight thousand claims in which there has never been any evidence taken at all, although the time for filing claims expired on the 3d of March, 1876. It is necessary that this business should be disposed of, and the committee are of the opinion that it will take two years to do it. In order that it may be done we propose that all evidence shall be closed in one year, except testimony in rebuttal of evidence introduced on behalf of the Government.

Mr. GARFIELD. It may be said that we are presented with a choice between two evils, if we can call them evils. We must either continue this commission and finish its work, or we will have these nine thousand claims brought into this House to be acted upon in the uncertain way in which claims are frequently acted upon in this House, overburdening our records and really interfering with the current legislation of the country. I think the bill itself is eminently judicious, and, if passed, will protect Congress against a vast avalanche of claims.

The amendment was agreed to, and the bill, as amended, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. EDEN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, informed the House that the Senate had passed, with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House was requested, a bill of the following title:

A bill (H. R. No. 4680) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the sundry civil appropriation bill, just returned from the Senate, with amendments, with the view of non-concurring in the Senate amendments, and requesting a committee of conference thereon.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The SPEAKER subsequently appointed as managers of the conference on the part of the House Mr. HOLMAN, Mr. EDEN, and Mr. WALDRON.

JOHN N. HALL.

Mr. DUNNELL. I move to suspend the rules so as to discharge the Committee of the Whole from the further consideration of the House bill No. 3833.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is now entertaining business by unanimous consent.

Mr. DUNNELL. Very well; then I ask unanimous consent for that purpose. I will state that the bill has the unanimous indorsement of the Committee on the Judiciary, and I hope there will be no objection to it.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to adjust and settle the claims of John N. Hall, late collector of internal revenue in and for the first district of Minnesota, for moneys paid to deputy collectors by him for services rendered during the months of July, August, September, and October, 1866, and for clerk hire in his office as such collector during the quarter ending September 30, 1866, and for moneys paid by him for hire of clerks in his office in making out the accounts and returns thereof between October 1, 1866, and June 30, 1867; said adjustment and settlement to be made upon the principles of equity; and whatever sums may be allowed thereon shall, together with interest from the date of disbursement, be credited upon two judgments obtained against said Hall and others by the district court of the United States for the district of Minnesota on the 6th day of June, 1872.

Mr. DUNNELL. I desire to say also that this is recommended by the Treasury Department.

There being no objection, the Committee of the Whole was discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and the same was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

JOSEPH W. PARISH.

Mr. BUCKNER. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar be discharged from the further consideration of Senate bill No. 830, and that the same may now be put upon its passage. It is a bill for the relief of Joseph W. Parish.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, directed to pay to Joseph W. Parish, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, $4,280 and interest thereon at 6 per cent. per annum from the 22d day of July, in the year 1865, to the date of payment under this act, in full for that amount paid over by him in cash to the Commissary Department of the Army on the day aforesaid.

Mr. HOLMAN. We are getting into that noisy state when it is impossible to hear what is being read at the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. Gentlemen will resume their seats, so that order may be restored in the House.

Mr. STEVENSON. If there is a report upon this bill I ask that it may be read.

Mr. BUCKNER. I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read a report made by the Committee of Claims of this House. It will show that there never was a more meritorious claim than this, and it ought to have been paid long ago.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee of Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 830) for the relief of Joseph W. Parish, submit the following report:

In December, 1863, Hadley & Co. had a transaction with the commissary of subsistence at Louisville, Kentucky, by which they agreed and undertook to deliver two thousand barrels of pork. This they failed to do.

In 1865, Joseph W. Parish, the party asking relief under this bill, had (for the firm of Parish & Co.) a large contract, which he was then engaged in fulfilling, to furnish ice to the medical department of the Army at New Orleans, was under heavy bonds, and this contract demanded his constant attention; any day's delay or neglect endangering its violation and rendering him liable to heavy penalties.

He was in Saint Louis, and an order was issued from Louisville for his arrest, because it was believed that he was interested in the Hadley & Co. bid, either as a silent partner or in some manner, and, as the Government had suffered a loss by such failure and such loss had not been made good otherwise, Parish should be held for the same. He protested against such liability, but was, nevertheless, taken before the proper authorities, and, after taking counsel, in view of his other engagement, (on his ice contract, the neglect of which would be most disastrous,) it was deemed advisable to pay the amount demanded, to wit, $4,280, which he accordingly paid under protest, and was thereupon released from the military arrest. The object of this bill is to refund this amount with interest.

The matter was long pending before the proper executive officers. On the 7th of April last, the Third Auditor held that there was no law under which the accounting officers of the Treasury could entertain such claim, and it was therefore disallowed for want of jurisdiction.

The Second Comptroller held and found, on the 12th of the same month, that Mr. Parish appeared, from the evidence, to have a just and meritorious claim against the United States to the amount of $4,280, but that settlement of such questions did not lie within the jurisdiction of the accounting officers of the Treasury, nor was there an implied assumpsit for the torts of its officers.

Under such circumstances, if Mr. Parish cannot be relieved by Congress he is without remedy.

It seems to be quite clear that the officer ordering the arrest acted upon a mere suspicion that Parish was interested in the bid of Hadley & Co., a suspicion quite unfounded. He is vouched for by several persons as a man of integrity and veracity, and in his petition and papers denies under oath most flatly such interest. In this he is corroborated by other witnesses.

Under such circumstances, we cannot doubt his right to relief, and we therefore report back the accompanying bill with the two amendments of the Senate, and recommend its passage.

Mr. BUCKNER. This bill is unanimously recommended by the committee in each House. I hope there will be no objection to its passage.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RECLAIMED LANDS IN ILLINOIS.

Mr. LE MOYNE. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Public Lands be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. No. 732) to dispose of the lands formerly covered by the water of Pistakee Lake, in the State of Illinois.

The bill was read.

Mr. WALLING. This bill has been considered in the Committee on Public Lands, and that committee, if it had been permitted to report, would have reported the bill favorably. I think it should be passed.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. Has the report actually been made?

Mr. WALLING. No, sir; the committee has not been called.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. Then I must object.

SHIP CANAL, LAKE GEORGE, FLORIDA.

Mr. JONES, of Kentucky. I move to suspend the rules and to pass the bill (H. R. No. 4456) to authorize William H. Dorner and others to construct a ship canal at the head of Lake George, Florida. This bill has received the unanimous approval of the Committee on Railways and Canals.

The bill was read.

Mr. CONGER. I object.

Mr. JONES, of Kentucky. I move to suspend the rules.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is now entertaining business for which unanimous consent is requested, with the understanding that if a motion to suspend the rules is entertained the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER] shall be recognized.

Mr. JONES, of Kentucky. My original motion was to suspend the rules.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman had not the floor for that purpose.

Mr. JONES, of Kentucky. I withdraw the bill for the present.

W. H. WOODWARD.

Mr. TERRY. I ask unanimous consent to have taken up and passed the bill (S. No. 845) for the relief of W. H. Woodward, of Indianola, Texas.

The bill was read. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury, out of any money not otherwise appropriated by law, to pay to W. H. Woodward, of Indianola, in the State of Texas, without interest, the sum of $588, the amount due him on account of property rented from him by the United States military authorities.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TAX ON SAVINGS-BANK DEPOSITS.

Mr. HAYMOND. I ask unanimous consent to report from the Committee on Banking and Currency for action at the present time a bill relating to the tax upon deposits in savings banks. It is the unanimous report of the committee.

The bill was read. It provides that all deposits made in institutions which do business only as savings banks, and are recognized as such by the laws of their respective States or by Congress, shall be exempt from taxation in the same manner as deposits in associations or companies known as provident institutions, savings banks, savings funds, or savings institutions having no capital stock and doing no other business than receiving deposits to be loaned or invested for the sole benefit of the parties making such deposits, without profit or compensation to the association or company, although they have a reserve fund or capital, stock or bond, or both capital, stock or bond, and reserve fund, so long as no part of said reserve fund is disposed of for the benefit of other parties than those making the deposits; nor shall any tax be hereafter collected which may have been assessed or which shall have been liable to be assessed upon such deposits prior to the passage of this act.

Mr. MORRISON. I object.

Mr. HAYMOND. I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot give the gentleman the floor for that purpose.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I ask unanimous consent to have taken up and passed the bill (S. No. 973) for the relief of Elizabeth Carson. This bill has been twice passed by the Senate, but has failed in the House for want of action. It has been unanimously reported by the appropriate committee in each House.

The bill was read. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay to Elizabeth Carson, of Bourbon County, Kentucky, $2,630.40, in full satisfaction for subsistence, use of jail, fuel, fire, care, and attention furnished by her to conscripts, deserters, and rebel prisoners confined in the jail of Bourbon County, Kentucky, by the military authorities of the United States in the years 1862, 1863, 1864, and 1865.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. I desire to hear the report read, if there is one.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I call upon the chairman of the Committee on War Claims [Mr. EDEN] to state whether this bill has not received the unanimous sanction of his committee.

Mr. EDEN. It has been recommended by the Committee on War Claims.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Unanimously?

Mr. EDEN. I think there was no objection.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. I desire to hear the report read.

Mr. BLACKBURN. The report was with the papers in the case. This bill was reported to the House by my colleague, [Mr. MILLIKEN.]

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I recollect very distinctly when the bill was acted on by the committee. There was a full committee; we inquired carefully into the case, and I believe it is right. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MILLIKEN] who was directed to report the bill has gone home by leave of the House. The committee think the bill all right.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GEORGE FOSTER.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of New York, by unanimous consent, moved that the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions be discharged from the further consideration of the petition of George Foster, and that the same be referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions; which motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS.

Mr. HARRISON, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 534) for the relief of Rosetta Hert, (late Rosetta Scoville,) Charles C. Benoist, Emily Benoist, and Logan Fanfan, half-breed Indians;

An act (H. R. No. 1238) granting a pension to Esther P. Fox;

An act (H. R. No. 2019) for the relief of Edwin Morgan, late captain of Company G, Seventy-seventh Regiment, Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry;

An act (H. R. No. 3011) granting a pension to Mrs. Ann Annis; and

An act (H. R. No. 4198) to authorize the President to restore Thomas J. Spencer to his former rank in the Army.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Indiana, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled an act (H. R. No. 2694) for the relief of W. W. Van Antwerp, late major of Fourth Michigan Cavalry; when the Speaker signed the same.

Mr. HARRIS, of Georgia, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 4306) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes; and

An act (H. R. No. 4559) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878, and for prior years, and for other purposes.

FRANCIS M. STRONG AND THOMAS ROSS.

Mr. J. H. BAGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask, by unanimous consent, that the bill (H. R. No. 4397) for the relief of Francis M. Strong and Thomas Ross, with an amendment which was pending in the morning hour, be taken up and passed.

Mr. HOLMAN. After this bill is reported, I give notice, in the interest of members of the House on conference committees, that I shall ask the House to take a recess for one hour.

The bill, which was read, provides that Francis M. Strong, of Vergennes, in the county of Addison and State of Vermont, and Thomas Ross, of Rutland, in the county of Rutland and State of Vermont, have leave to make application to the Commissioner of Patents for an extension of the letters-patent numbered 24161, granted to them for an improvement in weighing-scales, of date the 24th day of May, 1859, for the term of seven years from and after the expiration of the original term of fourteen years for which said letters-patent were granted; such application to be made in the same manner as if the same had been filed not less than ninety days before the expiration of the aforesaid original term of said patent; and upon such application so filed, the Commissioner of Patents shall be authorized to consider and determine the same in the same manner as if the original term of said patent had not expired; provided that no person shall be held liable for the infringement of said patent, if extended, for making use of said invention since the expiration of the original term of said patent, and prior to the date of its extension.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Strike out the words "the expiration of the original term of fourteen years for which said letters-patent were granted," and in lieu thereof insert the words "the date of such extension."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. I ask that the report in this case be read, and I hope we will have order in the House so we can hear what it is.

The SPEAKER. The officers of the House will request gentlemen who are not entitled to the privilege of the floor to vacate the lobby, and for the rest of the session the Doorkeepers will not, in any particular, vary from the rules.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Patents, to whom was referred the petition of Francis M. Strong and Thomas Ross, for an extension of letters patent for improvements in weighing-scales, submit the following report:

The evidence submitted in this case shows that Francis M. Strong, of Vergennes, and Thomas Ross, of Rutland, Vermont, are the joint inventors of certain improvements in weighing-scales, for which letters-patent were granted them May 24, 1859.

Within ample time, as prescribed by law, these inventors placed in the hands of the Brandon Manufacturing Company a signed petition for the extension of said letters-patent, that it might be forwarded and filed with the Commissioner of Patents. Fearing, however, that some mistake might occur they forwarded to their attorney at Washington a duplicate petition with instructions that he should file it in case it was not filed in time by other parties. This attorney made frequent inquiries at the Patent Office, and was at length assured that the petition had been filed. The event proved, however, that the clerk in charge was in error and that the petition was not filed, as stated. The mistake occurred through the filing of another application by the same parties for the extension of another patent of the same date. But the error was not discovered until too late to rectify it under the statute, and for this reason the petitioners pray for the passage of an act to enable them to make application, as they certainly would have done if not misled by the information given their attorney at the Patent Office. In view of these facts, the omission to act having arisen by no fault of the patentees, but by the inadvertence of a Government employé, this committee recommend the granting of the prayer and the passage of the accompanying bill.

Mr. J. H. BAGLEY, Mr. Speaker, this is one of the simplest matters presented to Congress. These applicants merely applied for the correction of an error by a clerk in the Patent Office. Under the statute they were entitled to a seven years' extension of their patent. Of this right they were deprived by the error of a clerk in the Patent Office. This bill does nothing more than correct that error.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. The discussion the other day in the House on this subject brought me to the conclusion that the passage of this bill might involve danger to innocent parties.

Mr. J. H. BAGLEY Not in the least. Mr. Speaker, is it in order to move to suspend the rules?

The SPEAKER. Not now.

Mr. J. H. BAGLEY. In my judgment it is gross injustice to these parties not to allow the correction of the error.

Subsequently, Mr. BAKER, of Indiana, withdrew his objection.

The bill was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. J. H. BAGLEY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

REAL ESTATE POOL.

Mr. GLOVER, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on the Real-Estate Pool and Jay Cooke & Co.'s Indebtedness, reported the following resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Real-Estate Pool and Jay Cooke & Co.'s Indebtedness be, and they are hereby, allowed the service of a clerk during the present session of Congress, commencing December 4, 1876, and such clerk be paid $4 per diem for his services.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. GLOVER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SOLDIERS' AND SAILORS' RE-UNION AT MARIETTA.

Mr. BANNING. I ask unanimous consent to report back from the Committee on Military Affairs with a favorable recommendation the joint resolution (H. R. No. 179) granting the use of artillery, blankets, &c., at the national soldiers' and sailors' re-union, to be held at Marietta, Ohio. I ask that the resolution may now be put upon its passage.

I desire to say just one word in explanation of this resolution. It has been customary to pass this each year. It was passed last year. It costs the Government nothing; and the Committee on Military Affairs have unanimously agreed to report the resolution favorably.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was read the third time, and passed.

CATHARINE WINSLOW.

Mr. PIERCE. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Private Calendar and have put upon its passage at this time the bill (S. No. 599) granting a pension to Catharine Winslow, widow of the late Rear-Admiral John A. Winslow.

Mr. RUSK. If the pension-list is to be touched at all, I want it to be taken up as a whole. I have been struggling for two weeks to get the floor for the Pension Committee in order to have the whole pension-list passed.

Mr. PIERCE. I hope the gentleman will not object to the passage of this bill.

Mr. RUSK. They are all equally meritorious.

The SPEAKER. There will probably be time enough to get all these pension bills through.

Mr. PIERCE. This bill has passed the House heretofore, and the Senate also.

The SPEAKER. This is a Senate bill.

Mr. RUSK. I have in my desk a number of Senate bills granting pensions, and I have been struggling in vain for two weeks to get them before the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin objects.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move that the House take a recess for one hour.

A viva voce vote being taken, the Speaker stated that in the opinion of the Chair the "noes" had it.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. I call for a division.

Mr. SAMPSON. I rise to a question of order. It is now twenty-five minutes to twelve o'clock, and if the House takes a recess we will be carried beyond the commencement of a new legislative day.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thanks the gentleman for his suggestion. The motion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] would take us further into to-morrow than we desire to go.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then I move that we take a recess till twelve o'clock.

Mr. KNOTT. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion of Mr. KNOTT was agreed to; and accordingly (at eleven o'clock and thirty-five minutes a. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented at the Clerk's desk under the rule, and referred as stated:

By Mr. FRYE: The petition of citizens of Marshalltown, Iowa, for cheap telegraphy, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. GOODIN: Concurrent resolution of the Legislature of Kansas, favoring the passage of a law in aid of the construction of the Texas Pacific Railroad, to the Committee on the Pacific Railroad.

By Mr. RICE: The petition of the orphans of Captain Presley N. Guthrie, for an increase of their pension, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. STRAIT: The petition of 120 citizens of Renville County, Minnesota, that Congress declare the lands granted to the State of Minnesota to aid in the construction of a railroad from Hastings to the western boundary of the State forfeited to the United States Government unless the construction of said road is proceeded with immediately, to the Committee on Public Lands.

IN SENATE.

SATURDAY, March 3, 1877.

The Senate met at eleven o'clock a. m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. BYRON SUNDERLAND, D. D.

On motion of Mr. INGALLS, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of yesterday's proceedings was dispensed with.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a report from the Second Comptroller of the Treasury, and accompanying papers, relative to the decision of the Supreme Court in the matter of land-grant railroads; and recommending such legislation as will remove the prohibition imposed by law upon any payment to such railroad companies; which, on motion of Mr. WEST, was referred to the Committee on Railroads, and ordered to be printed.

VISITORS TO WEST POINT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. BLAINE and Mr. MAXEY members of the board of visitors on the part of the Senate to attend the annual examination of the cadets at the United States Military Academy at West Point, New York.

He also presented a memorial of the Legislative Assembly of Montana Territory, in favor of a donation by Congress of the alternate sections of land for a distance of twenty miles on each side of the line of the Northern Pacific Railroad in aid of said road; which was referred to the Committee on Railroads.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of Michigan, in favor of a survey of Portage Lake in Manistee County, with a view to constructing a harbor of refuge; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. COCKRELL presented concurrent resolutions of the Legislature of Missouri, protesting against the special tax imposed on leaf tobacco; which were read as follows, and referred to the Committee on Finance:

Whereas it is or should be one of the prime objects of our Government that the burden of taxation should rest equally and alike upon all classes; that there should be no distinction or unjust discrimination against any section, class, industry, or profession; that we, as one people, are entitled alike to all the enjoyments and benefits of our noble system of Government, and subject alike to all the burdens incident to the support of its institutions;

And whereas we regard the special tax imposed by act of Congress (as construed by the United States district courts of this State) on leaf tobacco as an unjust discrimination not only against one of the principal industries of our commonwealth, but against that class of its citizens, the producers, who are the very foundation of its past, present, and prospective greatness;

And whereas the effect of said law applies with equal force to the planter or producer, as to other parties dealing in tobacco, thereby working serious hardships not met with in other callings or pursuits;

And whereas in view of the peculiar adaptability of our soil and climate to the production of this crop, and of its commercial value as an article of export, it behooves us to foster, encourage, and extend its productions: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring therein,) That our Senators be instructed and our Representatives in Congress be earnestly requested to use their utmost exertions to secure such a modification of said law as will relieve our people of the effects of this enactment, so onerous and oppressive in its operations upon producers.

Be it further resolved, That the secretary of state be instructed to transmit a copy of these resolutions to each of our Senators and Representatives in Congress.

Approved February 23, 1877.

MICH'L K. McGRATH,
Secretary of State.

Mr. DAVIS. I present the memorial of Hon. W. T. Willey, formerly a member of this body, and 100 other citizens of West Virginia, in regard to pensions, in favor of the removal of what they think an unjust limitation. I should like to have favorable consideration from the Committee on Pensions to this petition, which is signed by the leading men of West Virginia; but I understand they have already reported. I therefore move that the petition lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BOGY presented concurrent resolutions of the Legislature of Missouri in favor of a modification of the law imposing a tax on leaf tobacco; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

CREDENTIALS.

Mr. ALCORN presented the credentials of L. Q. C. LAMAR, elected by the Legislature of Mississippi a Senator from that State for the term commencing March 4, 1877; which were read and ordered to be filed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. KERNAN, from the Committee on Patents, to whom was referred the petition of Professor E. N. Horsford, praying for an extension of his patent, submitted a report thereon accompanied by a bill (S. No. 1289) for the relief of E. N. Horsford.

The bill was read twice by its title, and the report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. BARNUM, from the Committee on Patents, to whom was referred the petition of George W. Hubbard and W. E. Conant, of Brooklyn, New York, praying for the extension of their patent for improvements in double-acting steam engines, submitted a report thereon accompanied by a bill (S. No. 1290) for the relief of George W. Hubbard and William E. Conant.

The bill was read twice by its title, and the report was ordered to be printed.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Mr. PADDOCK asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1291) to establish certain post-roads in the State of Nebraska; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CHAFFEE. I move that the Senate take up the bill (S. No. 1219) authorizing the Commissioner of Patents to extend the patent of Horace A. Stone for improvement in the manufacture of cheese.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the motion?

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not think we ought to proceed to the consideration of the bill with only a few Senators in their seats. There is not a quorum here.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Missouri object?

Mr. COCKRELL. There is no quorum here, and we cannot transact business without a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair accepts that as an objection and cannot entertain the motion.

Mr. SPENCER. Last night when we adjourned, the Senator from Nebraska, [Mr. HITCHCOCK,] who is not here now, called up the bill providing a territorial government for the Black Hills country, and I ask the Senate to resume its consideration. It is really the unfinished business.

Mr. COCKRELL. I say there is no quorum here, and we cannot consider a bill without a quorum. I have objected, and I will not withdraw my objection for any cause or consideration. There is no use to appeal to me.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri objects.

Mr. SPENCER. If the Senator does object I presume I have a right to say something. It would take some time to read the bill, ten or fifteen minutes perhaps, and by that time there may be a quorum present. The Senator from Missouri, I suppose, has no objection to the bill being read. It is quite a lengthy bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. What would be the use of reading the bill to the empty seats of the Senate? I do not think the seats can understand it.

Mr. SPENCER. The bill has to be read at some time or other.

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not think when Senators come back to their seats that they would be any wiser for having the bill read in their absence.

Mr. BLAINE. I wish to give notice that in a very few minutes I shall propose to call up the Army appropriation bill and I shall press it to the exclusion of all other orders before the Senate.

Mr. SPENCER. In the mean time this bill can be read.

Mr. BLAINE. I will not object to its reading.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the reading of the bill?

Mr. COCKRELL. If I have not sufficiently protested, I will again enter my protest against doing business without a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator did it indirectly and he does it now pointedly, as the Chair understands.

Mr. SARGENT. There is no doubt about it now.

Mr. SPENCER. I think that the Senator from Missouri would not be so unkind and ungenerous and hard-hearted as to object to the reading of this bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is not an unkindness to prevent the doing of business when there is no quorum here, and it is useless for Senators to appeal to me, for I will not withdraw my objection.

Mr. SPENCER. How can the Senator tell that there is no quorum here?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri objects, and debate is out of order.

Mr. SPENCER. Does the Chair decide that there is no quorum present?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The attention of the Chair being called to it, there is no quorum. The Chair will order the roll of the Senate to be called, there being no quorum present.

The Secretary called the roll of the Senate, and twenty-two Senators answered to their names.

Mr. RANSOM. My colleague [Mr. MERRIMON] has been called home necessarily. If he were in the city he would be here. I am instructed to say that he is paired on all questions with the Senator from Alabama, [Mr. SPENCER.]

Mr. DAVIS. I wish to state that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. THURMAN] is confined to his house by sickness.

Mr. SARGENT. I am informed that that is the condition also of the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS.]

Mr. SPENCER. A number of Senators have just come in, and I am quite satisfied that there is now a quorum here. I should like to have the unfinished business of last night read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is not quite satisfied. It lacks ten of a quorum.

Mr. SARGENT. I move that the Sergeant-at-Arms be instructed to request the attendance of absent Senators.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That has already been done. The Chair anticipated that such a question might arise.

After a delay of a few minutes, the President pro tempore announced that a quorum was present.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 4680) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes, and asking a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. WINDOM. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments and agree to the conference asked by the House.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. WINDOM, Mr. DORSEY, and Mr. WALLACE were appointed.

COPIES OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. CHRISTIANCY, it was

Smith, esq. upon payment of the fees therefor, have leave to take copies of journal of the commission who negotiated the treaty of the 26th and 27th of October, 1834, with the Pottawatomie Indians of Indiana and Michigan, together with the message of the President transmitting the same to the Senate and the report of the commission; also the letter of the Secretary of War of March 18, 1833, requesting the loan of the report to the commission.

BILL RECOMMITTED.

On motion of Mr. HARVEY, it was Ordered, That the vote postponing indefinitely the bill (S. No. 1092) for the relief of Jerome Kunkel be reconsidered, and that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Military Affairs.

COWAN & DICKINSON.

Mr. COOPER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 811) for the relief of Perez Dickinson, the surviving partner of James Cowan, deceased, heretofore trading and doing business under the firm name and style of Cowan & Dickinson, of Knoxville, Tennessee.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It appropriates $38,476.80 to Perez Dickinson, the surviving partner of the firm of Cowan & Dickinson, of Knoxville, East Tennessee, in full compensation for two hundred and fifty-six bales of cotton belonging to them, and which was by them furnished and delivered to Major-General BURNSIDE, at his request, on the 17th and 18th days of November, 1863, and by him used in the fortifications for the defense of Knoxville, and the Army under his command at the time of the assault by the forces under the command of General Longstreet, and the subsequent attack by him upon that city, and for other subsequent purposes it was used; and for which cotton they have never been paid anything, or received compensation, directly or indirectly, for any part thereof.

Mr. INGALLS. Let us hear the report in that case read.

Mr. BLAINE. If there is not much time to be occupied in the pending matter I will not interrupt it, but the Senate I know is very anxious to proceed to the consideration of the Army bill, and having it in charge I shall feel bound to insist upon its consideration.

Mr. COOPER. I hope the Senator will at least let us have the morning hour.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Senators are entitled to the morning hour with other business. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. WADLEIGH, from the Committee on Claims, May 3, 1876:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 811) for the relief of Cowan & Dickinson, who pray compensation for the loss of two hundred an fifty-six bales of cotton, seized by order of General BURNSIDE, on the 17th and 18th days of November, 1863, and used for strengthening the defenses of Knoxville, make the following report upon said claim:

At the second session of the Forty-third Congress, Mr. Pratt, from the Committee on Claims, made a report upon this claim as follows:

"The memorialists, Cowan & Dickinson, of Knoxville, Tennessee, present the following claim against the United States:

"'KNOXVILLE, TENNESSEE, January 1, 1864.

"'The United States to Cowan & Dickinson, Dr.

"'To two hundred and fifty-six bales cotton, taken by order of Major-General BURNSIDE, on the nights of the 17th and 18th of November, 1863, for the use of the fortifications of Knoxville during the siege by the rebel forces under Longstreet; average marketable weight, five hundred and one pounds per bale, (625 bales, 501 pounds) ..... 128,256 pounds.'

"Perez Dickinson, a member of the firm, appends to the account his affidavit that they have not been paid for the cotton; that its value is justly due them, and that the firm have severally always been and are loyal citizens of the Government. In a subsequent affidavit he swears the cotton belonged to them exclusively, and no other party had any interest in the same.

"In a letter to Major-General Schofield, commanding Department of Ohio, dated February 23, 1864, the firm gave a more circumstantial account of their claim; and as their statement cannot well be abridged the committee insert it at length:

"KNOXVILLE, TENNESSEE, February 23, 1864.

"SIR: On the nights of the 17th and 18th of November last, two hundred and fifty-six bales of cotton (average weight five hundred and twenty-six pounds) were taken from us by order of Major-General BURNSIDE, when here commanding, for use on the fortifications then erecting for the defence of Knoxville against the impending attack of the rebels under Longstreet.

"The cotton, we are gratified to know, was of great service, and a very valuable aid in the necessarily hasty preparations for a successful defense of the town. A portion of this has been taken, we learn, for sanitary purposes, &c., and the remainder is still in the works. Much of it has been wasted and all of it more or less injured by constant exposure, the breaking of ropes, and destruction of the baling. This cotton is of great pecuniary value to us, and we consider it due to us, old citizens of known, unswerving, and uncompromising loyalty, that our interests should be fully protected and feel entire confidence that is the wish and intention of the Government.

"We would therefore respectfully call your attention to this subject. We believe justice and equity to us under the circumstances would be that the Government should give us a voucher for this cotton at New York market value, deducting a liberal price of transportation and internal revenue.

"If this arrangement is not consistent with the policy of the Government in such cases, we would suggest that the cotton should be immediately collected and sent forward to Louisville or Cincinnati, and fair-ascertained damages for loss, &c., awarded us.

"We would also say that General BURNSIDE, the 20th of September last, agreed to furnish transportation for our cotton, with other produce we had on hand. He forwarded one hundred and one bales in pursuance of this arrangement, but owing to the military situation and demands upon him for transportation the balance was not forwarded. General BURNSIDE regretted the detention as well as ourselves.

"We herewith inclose General BURNSIDE'S receipt and certificate, which were given to our Mr. Dickinson, and he expressed an earnest wish that the matter might be satisfactorily adjusted.

"Hoping this matter may receive your early consideration,

"We are, very respectfully,

"COWAN & DICKINSON.

"Major-General SCHOFIELD,
"Commanding Department Ohio, Headquarters, Knoxville."

"The receipt and certificate of General BURNSIDE referred to in the above letter are as follows:

"KNOXVILLE, December 12, 1863.

"Received of Messrs. Cowan & Dickinson eighty (80) bales of cotton, for use in the fortifications erected for the defense of the city during the siege.

"A. E. BURNSIDE,
"Major-General."

"BOSTON, MASSACHUSETTS, February 4, 1864.

"This is to certify that during the siege of Knoxville, in East Tennessee, a quantity of cotton, say some two hundred and fifty-six bales, was taken from the store-house of Messrs. Cowan & Dickinson, in Knoxville, for the use of the fortifications around the city. This cotton was, as I believe, the property of Messrs Cowan & Dickinson, and was imperatively needed for the good of the public service. I had no time after the raising of the siege to take account of this property and to give the proper vouchers for the same. Captain Davis, of the Twenty-first Massachusetts Volunteers, and provost-marshal, has given a certificate for eighty (80) bales taken by him, by order, and for which the above receipt is a voucher, and I am satisfied that the remainder was taken and used as set forth in the affidavit of Messrs. Cowan & Dickinson.

"A. E. BURNSIDE,
"Major-General."

"On the 26th of February, 1864, Major-General Schofield issued Special Orders No. 57, directing the chief quartermaster of that department to proceed to collect all the cotton that had been used in the construction of fortifications, and for other purposes, in the vicinity of Knoxville, not absolutely necessary for the public service, and ship the same to Louisville, to be turned over to the chief quartermaster there, to be disposed of for the benefit of the Government, according to existing regulations. He was directed to ascertain the parties to whom the cotton belonged, the amount taken from each party, their loyalty, and to give the proper vouchers therefor, according to the loyalty of each.

"In a subsequent order, dated March 8, 1864, directed to Colonel Ransom, chief quartermaster, General Schofield directed that the vouchers to be given for the cotton used on the fortifications about Knoxville should be qualified, to be paid only upon the order of the War Department.

"The execution of this order was committed by Colonel Ransom to Captain Whitman, assistant quartermaster, who, on the 28th day of April, 1864, two months after the order, made report to his chief, as follows:

"'I have the honor to report in regard to the claims for cotton alleged to have been taken by the military authorities for the defenses of Knoxville, and the disposition made by the same, as follows:

6 bales; weight, 2,269 pounds; claimant, I. L. Cain; (Exhibit A.)
7 bales; weight, 3,500 pounds; claimant, A. A Kyle; (Exhibit B.)
10 bales; weight unknown; claimant, A. Kennedy; (Exhibit C.)
34 bales; weight, 17,303 pounds; claimant, J. W. C. Hazen; (Exhibit D.)
256 bales; weight, 133,120 pounds; claimants, Cowan & Dickinson; (Exhibit E.)

313

"'The above constitutes all the cotton for which claims are made. The following are the facts in relation to the disposition made of it, as far as known:

158 bales and parts of bales, weight not known, collected from fortifications by order of General Schofield in March, 1864.
20 bales and parts of bales, weight not known, collected from fortifications by order of General Schofield in April, 1864.
40 bales and parts of bales, weight 20,448 pounds, used by the Medical Department by order of General Foster.

218

"'Ninety-five unaccounted for and locality unknown.

"'Of the above there are at present eight bales in the hands of the Medical Department unexpended, and twenty bales at the depot.

"'The one hundred and fifty-eight bales collected from the fortifications in March were ordered to be put into a building at the depot, but permission being refused by the railroad authorities, on the ground that it would be exposed to fire from the engines in passing, it was deposited in a secure place on the hill-side at a safe distance from the railroad, and was so packed and subjected to such oversight as to protect it from being pilfered, as it had been while at the fortifications. Soon after it was placed there, and while preparations and plans were being matured to put it in a condition to be shipped, it was set on fire by three truant boys at play in the neighborhood. By strenuous exertions for two days and nights a portion was saved, and still lies upon the ground, amounting, it may be, when properly secured, to from twelve to twenty bales. The frequent rains of the season have so washed and bleached it that, when dried, it will prove of tolerable quality. The great press of business in the Quartermaster's Department, the scarcity of help, and the frequent rains of the season have rendered it necessary and advisable to allow it to remain where it is for a while under proper watch. With a short period of steady dry weather it may be got into a condition to be sacked and sent away. At present there are no sacks to be obtained here. The twenty bales on hand have but recently been collected from the fortifications.

"'It is proper to add that the incendiaries were arrested, and, after a rigid examination before the post commander, were discharged on want of proof of anything more than a childish desire to see what they could do in their play by touching a lighted match to a bale of cotton.

"'Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

"'E. B. WHITMAN,
"'Captain and Acting Quartermaster.'

"This report was forwarded by Colonel Ransom to General Schofield, who forwarded the same to the War Department, and on the 14th day of June, 1864, the Secretary of War referred the same to General S. P. Carter, provost-marshal, East Tennessee, to cause an investigation to be made as to the facts respecting this cotton, to determine what had become of the ninety-five missing bales, through whose negligence or other fault the one hundred and thirty-eight bales were burned, and whether any part of that which was rescued from the conflagration had been restored to the claimants.

"On the 27th day of September, 1864, General Carter made report to the Secretary of War, in which he states, substantially, that reliance was to be placed in the statements of the claimants, under oath, as to the quantity of the cotton bales taken; that the officers connected with the taking of the cotton belonged to the Ninth Army Corps, then with the Army of the Potomac; that as to the ninety-five bales unaccounted for, he had made all possible efforts to learn what had become of them, and had come to the conclusion that they were partly used by the troops encamped around the fortifications, who were in want of clothing and blankets to fill their bunks with, and after they vacated their encampments the cotton was partly taken by poor people and partly scattered by the winds. It also appeared that some of the cotton was taken from the fortifications after the siege and during the night-time by the people of the neighborhood and sold or secreted. Search had been instituted by his orders, but nothing except two small lots was discovered, amounting to two hundred and fifty pounds. He proceeds to say that some cotton was taken from the fortifications by Lieutenant-Colonel Babcock, chief engineer, to calk a number of ponton-boats, but the amount so used could not be ascertained. In relation to the one hundred and fifty-eight bales collected by Captain Whitman and piled near the railroad depot, as above stated, General Carter, in his report, says:

"'The cotton near the railroad depot was piled up, exposed to the air, without any shelter whatever, and it seems also without a sufficient guard, but as to who should be held responsible for this neglect is left for the decision of the War Department. The cotton was not under the control of this office.'

"The report concludes as follows:

"'The cotton saved from the conflagration, and estimated as aforesaid at about eight thousand four hundred pounds, was used, according to the report of Captain E. B. Whitman, assistant quartermaster, for various purposes, except about six thousand pounds, which are still in the hands of the Quartermaster's Department; twenty bales, (weight not known,) collected from the fortification after the conflagration, were sent, in accordance with Special Orders No. 57, before mentioned, to Brigadier-General Allen, chief quartermaster at Louisville, Kentucky.

"'The disposition of all the cotton can be reduced to the following:

	Bales.
Amount collected from the fortifications previous to the conflagration	158
Amount collected after the conflagration	20
Amount collected for use of Medical Department	40
	218

Consumed by fire	138	bales.
Saved, about	20	"
Used by the Medical Department	40	"
Sent to Louisville, Kentucky	20	"
		218'

"Captain Whitman, as assistant quartermaster, in a report dated September 26, 1864, to Major Gratz, assistant adjutant-general, thus states the cotton account:

Amount saved from the fire, fifteen to twenty bales	8,400 lbs.
Amount used by the Medical Department	1,500
Amount furnished for stuffing cushions	500
Amount furnished for calking pontons	200
Amount furnished for packing ammunition	200
Amount on hand in gunny-sacks, smoked and singed, about	6,000
	8,400

"'Sent to Brigadier-General Allen, chief quartermaster, Louisville, Kentucky, twenty bales, (weight unknown.) This last lot was not collected from the fortifications until after the conflagration.'

"The general result may be thus summed up:

Number of bales taken for use in the fortifications	313
Of these there belonged to Cowan & Dickinson	256
Leaving belonging to others	57
Of the whole number, 313, there were consumed by fire	138
Unaccounted for	95
	233

"This left in the possession of the Government eighty bales, of which twenty were shipped to Louisville. What the quartermaster realized from this sale does not appear.

"It appears from the evidence that Cowan & Dickinson forwarded one hundred and eleven bales of cotton in October, 1863, which was sold, a part in Cincinnati, and a part in New York, in December, 1863, and January, 1864. The average to each bale was five hundred and one pounds. That sold in Cincinnati brought seventy-five cents per pound; that sold in New York, eighty cents. What were the expenses of transportation, commission, insurance, &c., does not appear.

"It appears in evidence that the claim of Cowan & Dickinson was, on the 15th December, 1866, referred to the military commission on claims for examination. They report that they have examined the account of that firm for cotton taken for the use of the fortifications, and that they are satisfied that the number of bales as specified (two hundred and fifty-six) were taken from them; that the average marketable weight of the same was five hundred and one pounds; that James H. Cowan and Perez Dickinson, composing the firm of Cowan & Dickinson, always have been and are consistent and strictly loyal citizens of the United States Government, and that they are entitled to payment for the cotton thus taken from them.

"At a subsequent date, however, Colonel Clinton, recorder of the claims commission, reports to the Secretary of War, in respect to this claim, that the claimants present ample proofs of loyalty, and under the ruling of the commission in similar cases they would be entitled to the return of the cotton, or if sold, to its net proceeds, but that under the ruling of the War Department, based on the opinion of the Judge-Advocate-General, in Elliott's case, it would seem the claim was barred by congressional legislation.

"Upon the reference of this case by the War Department to the Judge-Advocate General, Judge Holt indorses the following opinion:

"BUREAU MILITARY JUSTICE,
"December 4, 1867.

"Respectfully returned, and the opinion expressed that, under existing legislation, the executive department of the Government has no authority to allow this claim. The cotton was seized in the enemy's country, and on the theater of the war, and was appropriated to the strengthening of one of our forts then threatened with an attack by an advancing column of rebel forces. For this act of legitimate warfare the Government incurred no responsibility, and if the payment claimed is hereafter made, it will be a mere gratuity bestowed, and not the satisfaction of any legal liability. Under the extremely liberal proviso in favor of the State of Tennessee this claim might be rightfully adjusted, could the cotton seized be held to have been either quartermaster or commissary stores. Most clearly, however, under the circumstances, it was neither the one nor the other.

"J. HOLT,
"Judge-Advocate-General.

"The committee, in concluding the insertion of documentary proof in this report, call attention to the following letter of General BURNSIDE, by whose authority this cotton was taken, written on December 10, 1866, to General Canby:

"'I take great pleasure in representing to you the claim presented by Messrs. Cowan & Dickinson, of East Tennessee.

"'At the time the forces under my command were besieged at Knoxville by General Longstreet, it was necessary to fortify the place as rapidly as possible; and in the exigencies of the time a quantity of cotton—say some two hundred and fifty-six bales—belonging to Messrs. Cowan & Dickinson was taken and used by our forces for fortifications around the city. The necessity for this step was imperative, and the cotton was taken without waiting to give the usual and necessary vouchers for it, and after the raising of the siege my time was too much occupied to take the proper steps to secure the claims to Messrs. Cowan & Dickinson.

"'These gentlemen are, and have been, thoroughly loyal to the United States Government, and have yielded their property without complaint, and they only ask a just compensation for their loss. I hope they may receive from the United States Government a sufficient sum to make good the amount of property yielded to the public service.'

"It may be added, without quoting the proofs, that the loyalty and upright character of this firm are established beyond a doubt.

"What, then, are the rights of these claimants? Were they constructive enemies? Was the district where their property was seized 'enemy's country,' in the sense of that expression? Was the seizure a military capture of hostile property?

"Upon the solution of these questions, the actual loyalty of the claimants being conceded, their title to compensation must depend.

"The committee do not regard Knoxville, at the time of the seizure of this cotton, as enemy's country. If not, then the claimants were not constructive enemies. The historical facts of this period of the war are very clear. General BURNSIDE occupied Knoxville with the Union forces early in September, 1863. He was welcomed, says the historian, with such an outpouring of enthusiastic loyalty and gratitude as had rarely been equaled. East Tennessee, amid all the persecutions to which the friends of the Government had been subjected, had remained invincibly loyal throughout the war. The army was welcomed with cheers and fond greetings; the national flags which had been secreted for many months now waved from almost every house, and the people manifested the sincerest joy at the restoration of the national authority and protection, which, amid all the varying fortunes of the war subsequently, were never superseded in that locality. The city was beleaguered by Longstreet on the 17th day of November, but the assault upon the defenses was not made until the 28th of the month, which was directed upon an unfinished work known as Fort Sanders. In this assault, made by a picked storming party of three brigades, the loss of the assailants was about eight hundred, while on our side the entire loss was only about one hundred—only fifteen of these in the fort.

"The evidence shows that these cotton bales, so seized, were used on the works of defense for the purpose of making parapets and traverses. Says Captain Poe, who so skillfully engineered the defenses: 'In my opinion the emergency was very great and the use of the cotton necessary. It certainly answered an important end in Fort Sanders, at which point the assault of the enemy was repulsed with terrible slaughter, with very slight loss to ourselves. In the fort every traverse and bomb-proof was of cotton, as were also the cheeks of some of the embrasures.'

"The siege of the city was raised on the 5th day of December, and the enemy left that section of country.

"But the important fact to be noticed in this connection is that from the arrival of BURNSIDE's forces on the 3d day of December, 1863, the national authority was established and protection was extended over persons and property, and this authority was continued ever afterward. On the 17th and 18th days of November, when this cotton was seized, the military occupation by the national military forces had been continuous and uninterrupted for two months and a half. General BURNSIDE had entered East Tennessee with an army of 20,000 men, and maintained his position and authority there. His occupation and control of the country were actual and substantial, not illusory, imperfect, or transient. Being such, according to the decision in the Venice case, (2 Wallace Rep., 259,) his military occupation of the place drew after it the full measure of protection to persons and property consistent with a necessary subjection to military government.

"As Knoxville was not at this time enemy country, so the seizure of the cotton was not placed on the ground of a military capture of hostile property, but it was taken from acknowledged friends of the Government, for the sole purpose of being used in defending the city, and with the avowed purpose of the commanding officer under whose order it was seized of giving them a voucher for the same, which the committee interpret to mean an obligation binding the Government to return or account for the value of the cotton. In no just sense can this cotton be deemed captured or abandoned property. It is doubtful if the law requiring the Treasury agent to sell captured property extended to this cotton.

"If Knoxville was not enemy country at this time, its loyal inhabitants stood in the same relation to the Government as the citizens of Philadelphia or Washington. There is no intermediate condition of country between enemy and friendly. Knoxville was one or the other, and the committee are of opinion that the Supreme Court has decided its status. If upon the approach of Early's forces in July, 1863, when he menaced Washington, General Augur could have seized the cotton bales of loyal citizens of the latter city and used and destroyed them in the defenses without creating any liability on the part of the Government, then these claimants have no case. But the committee are of opinion that the claimants have a clear title to compensation, and the only doubt has been as to its extent. For all except one hundred and thirty-eight bales burned and ninety-five bales missing, the liability rests upon the ground that the United States have used the cotton in part and sold the residue. The commanding general had given a voucher for this amount. This disposes of eighty bales, of five hundred and one pounds each.

"How stands the case as to the remainder? Suppose that General BURNSIDE had given, as he purposed doing, a voucher for the whole two hundred and fifty-six bales, instead of the eighty, could there be any reasonable doubt that it would have created, according to the purpose of the maker of it, an obligation on the part of the Government to return the cotton or pay for its value? Is that the fair interpretation of the one he gave for eighty bales? If it does not mean that, what was the purpose of giving it? Had General BURNSIDE the power to bind the Government in a transaction of this nature in a friendly country? If he had not, who connected with that army had? His commission and assignment to the command of that military district gave him the immediate control of the military forces under his command and the power to employ all necessary means to expel the enemy and maintain there the authority of the Government. If a thousand laborers outside the army were necessary to work on the fortifications, could he not employ them and bind his Government to pay them their wages? Could he not purchase provisions and forage for the use of the army and tools to work on the fortifications? If not, why not? And if he could do this, why could he not bind his Government to return or pay for cotton bales used to defend the city and the army? If he could, then it is clear, from the evidence, that he intended to supply a voucher for the remaining one hundred and seventy-six bales.

"It is clear that General Schofield, the successor of General BURNSIDE, recognized the right of these claimants to the value of their cotton, when, three days subsequent to the letter of Cowan & Dickinson, he issued his order of February 26, 1864, to his quartermaster to collect all the cotton not absolutely necessary for the public service, with a view of having it sold and a voucher being given to them for the amount.

"The commission on claims was instituted for some purpose. They assumed jurisdiction of this case, examined it, and made their report. That report was not objected to on the ground that they had exceeded their authority. Of course, if they have any authority at all, their very name would import that their business was to ascertain facts and report their conclusions. It was organized, we suppose, in the interest of truth and justice. If it could report against a claim it could report in favor of it. Its decision was either entitled to respect or no respect. If entitled to no respect, why was it organized at all? Well, this commission has spoken in this matter and settled these facts:

"1. That the claimants are loyal men and ever have been.

"2. That two hundred and fifty-six bales of cotton, of five hundred and one pounds to each bale, were taken from them.

"3. That they are entitled to payment for the same.

"This commission has returned this verdict to the War Department, which recognizes its authority to speak in the matter by accepting the report and dissenting from its conclusions.

"The committee accept the facts as found by the commission, and concur in its conclusions. If there was such a public emergency as justified the military authority in seizing this friendly cotton for the public good, in a section of the country where the authority of the Government was established and ever afterward maintained, the committee think it was the duty of that authority to restore it as soon as the emergency passed. Pass it soon did, and Knoxville was not afterward in danger; and yet the military authorities allowed this cotton to remain in the defenses, exposed to the elements and to theft, until late in February, before any effort was made to collect it. A large body of troops during all this time had remained stationed at Knoxville, with little to do, and yet ninety-five bales of cotton have been abstracted from the fortifications under their very eyes, so negligently had it been guarded. When, more than three months after its seizure, upon the urgent application of the owners, what remained had been collected, one hundred and fifty-eight bales were placed in an exposed situation, without cover or guard to protect it, and it is scarce to be wondered at that such combustible material was ignited and nearly all consumed. It is a matter of regret that the United States should be made responsible for so great a loss in consequence of the sheer and unpardonable carelessness of their military representatives, and it were much to be desired that the officers in command, charged with the protection of this property, should be held responsible for their neglect of duty. Still, whether there be or be not a recourse, there can be little doubt of the duty of the Government to make the petitioners whole.

"The committee have fixed upon fifty cents a pound as the fair value of the cotton at Knoxville at the time of its seizure. Estimating the bales to average five hundred and one pounds each, the claimants are entitled, for the two hundred and fixty-six bales taken, to the sum of $64,123, and the committee now report back the bill granting that sum to them, and recommend its passage."

Your committee, though agreeing in the main with the conclusions of the foregoing report, believe that the same fixes too high a price upon the cotton. At the time it was taken it was in imminent danger of falling into the hands of the enemy and being lost to the owners. Your committee believe that under the circumstances thirty cents per pound was a fair price for the cotton, and accordingly report back a bill for the payment of the sum of $38,476.80, and recommend its passage.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WATER POWER IN MOLINE, ILLINOIS.

Mr. LOGAN. I ask leave to take from the table a joint resolution of the House appointing a commission to investigate the question about the Moline water-works in Illinois.

By unanimous consent the Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution (H. R. No. 194) to appoint a commission to examine into the matter of contracts made by and between the United States and the Moline Water Power Company, as to the water power at Moline, Illinois, and to report to Congress as to the same.

Mr. LOGAN. This is the mere appointment of a commission to make a report to Congress.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was read three times and passed.

REDICK M'KEE.

Mr. MORRILL. Some days ago I entered a motion to reconsider the vote passing the bill (H. R. No. 620) for the relief of Redick McKee, at the request of my colleague, [Mr. EDMUNDS,] who is now too ill to be present, and who thinks the bill a very bad one; but I do not myself feel authorized to stop the passage of the bill any longer. I therefore withdraw the motion to reconsider.

The PRESIDENT The motion to reconsider will be withdrawn if there be no objection. The Chair hears none.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WINDOM. Mr. President, I submit a report from the committee of conference on the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, and ask for its present consideration.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the report.

Mr. SARGENT. There seems to be no use in reading the report which consists of so many matters. It would be better to explain it.

Mr. WINDOM. It would be impossible to make an explanation of each of the four hundred and eighty-three amendments in detail. I will state in general terms the character of this report. The House bill undertook to revise and reduce a very large number of salaries which were fixed by the compromise act of last summer. The Senate committee restored all those salaries to the amounts agreed upon in the bill of last year. To this the House conferees have agreed. A very large number of the amendments made on which the House recedes are consequently of that character. There are no material changes made in salaries except in a dozen or perhaps twenty instances; I do not remember the exact number. In a few cases salaries have been slightly reduced, but very few. There is some change made in the clerical force of the Departments from the last year's bill. The increase in the Sixth Auditor's Office, in the Post-Office Department, and in the Treasurer's Office is one-half of the increase made by the Senate; that is, the conference committee agreed by taking one-half of the increase authorized by the Senate.

The conference committee have agreed upon every proposition with the exception of the amendments numbered 76 and 77, which are on the question of the reduction of the President's salary. The conference committee has disagreed upon that, and the motion that I propose to make is that the Senate agree to the conference report as presented, and insist upon its amendments numbered 76 and 77, which relate to the President's salary.

I think I shall be able to answer any questions that may be put with reference to any of these amendments, but time will not permit me to go into them in detail. I move that the Senate concur in the report of the conference committee; and if proper to add the additional motion now, I move also that the Senate insist upon its amendments relating to the President's salary, which are numbered 76 and 77, and request a new committee thereon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota moves that the Senate concur in the report of the conference committee and that the Senate insist upon its disagreement to the amendments relating to the President's salary.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that the motion be divided.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A division of the question is called for. The question will be first on concurring in the report of the committee.

The report was concurred in.

Mr. ALLISON. On the question of insisting upon the disagreement of the Senate to the amendment relating to the President's salary, I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. BLAINE. What is the object of the Senator? For instructions? If the Senate insist nem. con., why are the yeas and nays necessary?

Mr. MORRILL. A motion to recede takes precedence.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It does.

Mr. ALLISON. The object is to obtain the vote of the Senate upon the question of the President's salary.

Mr. BLAINE. If nobody objects to insisting upon the disagreement, it is not necessary to have the yeas and nays.

Mr. WINDOM. It is not necessary to have the yeas and nays.

Mr. ALLISON. If nobody objects to the motion, I shall withdraw my call.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Minnesota, that the Senate insist on its disagreement with the House on amendments Nos. 76 and 77.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WINDOM. I move that a new committee of conference be appointed.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the committee of conference on the part of the Senate, and Mr. WINDOM, Mr. ALLISON, and Mr. DAVIS were appointed.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 4699) to remove the disabilities imposed by the third section of the fourteenth article of the amendments of the Constitution of the United States, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The bill (H. R. No. 2386) for the relief of Moses F. Carleton, late second lieutenant of Company I, Fourth Michigan Infantry Volunteers, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BLAINE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 4691) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Appropriations with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause, and in lieu thereof to insert a substitute.

Mr. BLAINE. I do not know that it will be necessary to read the bill; it ought to be sufficient to read the matter which the Committee on Appropriations recommend as a substitute.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection such will be the understanding.

Mr. DAVIS. The bill as it passed the House differs so widely from the substitute of the Senate committee that I think both should be read.

Mr. BLAINE. If the Senator from West Virginia will pardon me one moment, before the bill is read I will explain precisely what the Committee on Appropriations recommend. Will the Senator yield a moment?

Mr. DAVIS. Certainly, I will yield.

Mr. BLAINE. I may do that as well before the reading as after.

Mr. DAVIS. I have no objection, but my object is to have both bills read, the bill as it came from the House and the substitute.

Mr. BLAINE. Very well, if the Senator desires it I ask that both be read.

Mr. DAVIS. The bills are short, and they differ so widely that the Senate ought to know the difference between the two.

Mr. BLAINE. That is very proper.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator has that right. The Secretary will read the original bill and then the substitute proposed.

The bill of the House was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the following sums be, and the same are hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the support of the Army, for the year ending June 30, 1878, as follows:

For expenses of the Commanding General's office, $1,000.

For expenses of recruiting and transportation of recruits, $20,000. And no money appropriated by this act shall be paid for recruiting the Army beyond the number of seventeen thousand enlisted men, including scouts and hospital-stewards.

For contingent expenses of the Adjutant-General's Department at the headquarters of military divisions and departments, $3,000.

For expenses of the Signal Service of the Army, purchase, equipment, and repair of electric field telegraphs and signal-equipments, $5,000.

Pay Department:

For pay of commissioned officers, enlisted men, contract-surgeons, veterinary surgeons, paymasters' clerks and messengers, two hundred hospital-stewards, and hospital-matrons; for mileage to officers, postage, and cost of telegrams on public service; compensation of citizen witnesses attending military courts, and traveling expenses of paymasters' clerks, $10,800,000.

And hereafter the following-named officers of the Army shall be entitled only to the pay herein stated after their respective designations:

The General, $11,000 a year.

The Lieutenant-General, $9,000 a year.

A major-general, $7,000 a year.

And in lieu of the forage now allowed, they shall each be entitled to forage in kind for three horses, if they are kept and used by them in the performance of their official duties; and so much of sections 1261 and 1271 of the Revised Statutes as conflicts with this provision is hereby repealed.

Subsistence Department:

For subsistence of regular troops, Indian scouts, civilian employés, and Indian prisoners, $1,854,754; and the rations for the troops and the supplies for sale to the officers shall in all cases, when practicable, be furnished by contract under proposals invited by advertisement, which advertisement shall be posted at the military post requiring such subsistence, and at the towns nearest to said post, for a period of three months before the opening of proposals; and whenever purchases of supplies of the same quality can be made at points adjacent to said post, delivered at the same rates and cost as similar supplies would cost delivered if purchased elsewhere, preference shall be given to, and the purchase made at, such adjacent points: Provided, That the advertisements for subsistence hereafter shall be approved by department commanders, instead of requiring the approval of the Secretary of War: And provided, That $300,000 of the money thus appropriated, or so much thereof as may be necessary, may be applied by the Commissary-General of Subsistence, prior to the 1st of July, 1877, to the purchase of subsistence supplies required for advance shipments to posts situated on the Upper Missouri and Yellowstone, and in other remote regions; and this amount is hereby made available for disbursement from the passage of this act.

Quartermaster's Department:

For the regular supplies of the Quartermaster's Department, consisting of stoves for heating and cooking, of fuel for officers, enlisted men, guards, hospitals, storehouses, and offices; of forage in kind for the horses, mules, and oxen of the Quartermaster's Department at the several posts and stations and with the armies in the field; for the horses of the several regiments of cavalry, the batteries of artillery, and such companies of infantry and scouts as may be mounted, and for the authorized number of officers' horses, including bedding for the animals; of straw for soldiers' bedding; and of stationery, including blank books for the Quartermaster's Department, certificates for discharged soldiers, blank forms for Pay and Quartermaster's Department, and for printing of division and department orders and reports, and for incidental expenses, such as postage and telegrams or dispatches; extra pay to soldiers employed under the the direction of the Quartermaster's Department, in the erection of barracks, quarters, store-houses, and hospitals, in the construction of roads, and other constant labor, for periods of not less than ten days, under the acts of March 2, 1819, and August 4, 1854, including those employed as clerks at division and department headquarters; expenses of expresses to and from the frontier posts and armies in the field; of escorts to paymasters and other disbursing officers, and to trains where military escorts cannot be furnished; expenses of the interment of officers killed in action, or who die when on duty in the field, or at posts on the frontiers, or when traveling on orders, and of non-commis-

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WEST submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 4187) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

The House recedes from its disagreement to the amendment No. 32, and agrees to the same with an amendment making the amount $6,000.

Upon the amendments Nos. 12, 13, 34, and 35 the conferees have been unable to agree, and so report to their respective Houses.

J. R. WEST.
S. W. DORSEY,
L. V. BOGY,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
WM. S. HOLMAN,
HIESTER CLYMER,
CHAS. FOSTER,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. WEST. As this is the second conference on the post-office appropriation bill, I should like to submit to the Senate the points upon which the conference have found themselves unable to agree for such action as the Senate may see proper to take. The items numbered 12 and 13, upon which the two Houses have not been able to come to an agreement, refer to the railroad transportation of the mails. The original amount appropriated by the House of Representatives was $9,000,000. The estimate made by the Post-Office Department was $10,288,000. The Senate committee finally agreed to make the amount $9,300,000, but really consenting in their judgment to impair the efficiency of the service rather than let the bill fail. The House of Representatives advanced their amount from $9,000,000 to $9,200,000, and on that point the conference committee has disagreed. I regret that the chairman of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads is not here. I will state that the Postmaster-General, in referring to the railroad mail service in his last annual report, calls the attention of Congress to the fact that really that service has within the past year retrograded in efficiency instead of at least keeping up with the spirit of the times. In speaking of the service, he takes occasion to say that—

> Serious embarrassments have resulted from a discontinuation of these fast lines' which have been augmented by the refusal of the railroad companies to re-establish the incomplete accommodations they had previously furnished. The mails are now conveyed between the Atlantic seaboard and points in the West and Southwest with less dispatch, and with smaller facilities for distribution, than were provided before the inauguration of the fast-mail system.

In other words, by the reduction of 10 per cent. that was made by Congress last year in the amount of compensation paid to railroad companies, the postal service between the Atlantic seaboard and the great West is in a condition of less efficiency than in the year 1875, prior to the establishment of the fast-mail system.

The chairman of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads when addressing the Senate last on this subject explained that the railroad companies were not compelled to furnish cars of over a certain length, inasmuch as all their carriage was done by weight. Owing to the fact that we have but forty-five-foot cars between New York, Boston, Chicago, and Saint Louis, the distribution of the mails en route is very much retarded. With a view of restoring the service to its proper condition the conferees on the part of the Senate have felt compelled to refer the question to the judgment of the Senate. I should like have some views expressed in regard to that matter, as to the sanction or otherwise that the Senate propose to give to the action of their committee.

Mr. COCKRELL. I understand that on particular points the conference committee has not agreed.

Mr. WEST. That is what I have been trying to state.

Mr. COCKRELL. What are those particular points?

Mr. WEST. That is what I have been trying to state, too.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator has been very unfortunate, I think, with his statement, with all due respect to him, and I should like to know what the particular points are.

Mr. WEST. I will repeat for the benefit of the Senator, although it perhaps may be a little tiresome, that on the question of mail transportation on the grand trunk lines——

Mr. COCKRELL. What is the amount of difference between the two committees?

Mr. WEST. In the judgment of our committee the amount, although only $100,000, means the total and absolute impairment of the service. We have yielded from estimates of $10,288,000 down to $9,300,000, and that is as far as we thought we ought to go. I should like to have some expression from the Senate either by a motion to recede or otherwise. I believe the motion to recede takes precedence.

Mr. WHYTE. Does the Senator from Louisiana make any proposition either to insist or not?

Mr. WEST. I believe it is the parliamentary usage to allow any Senator who would propose to recede to have that motion offered first. If I hear no proposition of that kind I shall move——

Mr. WHYTE. I will move to recede, then, from the proposition which relates to the fast-mail service.

Mr. WEST. It does not. The Senator misunderstands it entirely. There is no proposition to re-establish fast mails whatever.

Now, upon the motion of the Senator from Maryland, the Senate is called upon to decide just this: Will you have your mails carried by weight in forty-five-foot cars between Boston, New York, Chicago, Saint Louis, and Cincinnati, or will you provide sixty-foot cars without increasing the speed at all; the sixty-foot cars affording the facilities of such distribution en route as in the opinion of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads will accelerate the delivery of your mails twenty-four hours between your great centers East and West?

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. BOOTH in the chair.) The question is on the motion of the Senator from Maryland, that the Senate recede.

The question being put, a division was called for.

Mr. DAVIS. I was unfortunate enough not to be present when the Senator from Louisiana explained the difference between the two committees; but if I understand aright from those who heard him, they differ as regards the amount appropriated in the amendments the Senate put on as to subsidies for the Brazilian and Pacific mail lines.

Mr. WEST. The Senator is mistaken totally. I am not treating of the subsidy but treating of the railroad communications between the East and the West by the main trunk lines.

Mr. DAVIS. Is that the only question?

Mr. WEST. That is the only question before the Senate at the present time. We shall come to the other in due time.

Mr. DAVIS. I ask the Senator what was the difference between the committees? He says I am totally mistaken as to the questions pending, and then when I ask whether the only question is the railroad, he tells me "no, we shall come to the other after awhile." I should like to know what he means by "coming to it after awhile."

Mr. WEST. When a Senator rises in the middle of a division of the Senate and takes the floor and addresses the Senate on a different subject, I think it would be perhaps well and a courtesy to the Senator who has spent some time in trying to explain the matter to the Senate that he should know what he was voting upon. If my friend from West Virginia asks whether I am coming to that question soon or not, I will tell him that the Senate was dividing on the proposition of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. WHYTE] to recede on a certain amendment relating entirely to railroads. It has nothing to do with the steamship question at all. That will come up on a motion of some other Senator and such explanations as I shall be able to make. After having by the solicitation of Senators tired the ear of the Senate three times by repeating myself, I think I ought to be excused further.

Mr. DAVIS. When I rose I said that I was unfortunate enough to be absent and I asked the Senator, in as courteous language as I could use, what was the difference, and he then stated what I understood to be the difference. It would have been just as easy for the Senator to have said "we are voting on a particular amendment now but there are other differences." However, that is a personal matter; let it go.

Mr. WEST. The Senator will pardon me. I did do that.

Mr. DAVIS. Do I understand now that there are several differences between the committee of conference? One of these questions may depend upon the other. I think I have a right to know. Now I ask the Chair to have reported, not in detail, but the substance of the differences, if the Senator from Louisiana does not think proper to do it. That will probably give the Senate an opportunity of voting understandingly. It may be that it was noticed when the Chair put the vote that perhaps not ten Senators voted. Why was that? Because the majority of the body, as I supposed, did not fully understand the question and did not desire to vote until they did, and I was one of that class. Now I ask that the Senate be informed what the differences consist in. I do not want to take up time; but it is necessary for us, if we are to vote intelligently, to know what the differences between the committees are.

Mr. BOGY. I will state very briefly, as I was a member of the committee of conference, that the subject before the Senate is confined entirely to the question of railroad transportation. The motion of the Senator from Maryland is that we shall recede from our amendment on that point. The bill as passed by the House appropriated $9,000,000 for railroad transportation for the great trunk lines. The Senate increased the appropriation to $9,600,000; in other words, they added $600,000 to it. Of this increase of $600,000, $250,000 were to be used for the purpose of enabling the Postmaster-General to procure what have been called mail facilities. These mail facilities were not at all fast mails. The mail was to be transported at the same rate of speed; but the object was to increase the cars from forty-five-foot cars, which do not carry the mail by weight, to sixty-foot cars, so as to enable those cars to distribute the mails at all the towns from New York to Saint Louis and west of Saint Louis. It was to make these cars postal cars, moving post-offices.

I remember when it was first proposed by the Senator from Maine [Mr. HAMLIN] I opposed it. On further investigation of the matter I have become satisfied that the amendment was correct, and therefore I sustained in the committee of conference the $600,000 addition. With a view, however, to some compromise, I agreed with my colleagues on that committee to come down to $9,300,000; in other words, to increase the amount of the House bill only $300,000. The Senate wanted an increase of $600,000, but we were informed by the Postmaster-General that although with the $300,000 he could not get along very well, yet it was possible he might go through, at all events until the next session of Congress and of the $300,000, $250,000 were to be used for the procurement of mail facilities. The House was willing to increase the amount $200,000. We were willing to come down $300,000, and they to go up to $200,000, leaving a gap of $100,000, and that is the only gap now on that point. There are of course other points in the report of the committee of conference which are not now before the Senate, because those all depended one upon the other.

My idea is that the Senate ought not to recede at present. I am satisfied in my own mind that the amendment of the Senate is fair. I am reminded by the Senator from Texas [Mr. MAXEY] that this increase is necessary for new railroad facilities in Texas to a large degree. I think we had better not recede, but make another honest effort to come to an agreement.

Mr. WHYTE. I withdraw the motion in view of the statement of the Senator from Missouri.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is withdrawn.

Mr. WEST. I move that the Senate insist on its disagreement and ask for a further conference on that amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WEST. Now, as I stated to the Senator from West Virginia, we come to the other points of disagreement; but we can only deal with one at a time.

Upon the amendment numbered 34, which provided that the sum of $500,000 should be appropriated for the carriage of the mails between the United States and China and Japan, and upon the amendment numbered 35, which provided that the sum of $500,000 should be appropriated for the carriage of mails between New Orleans and the Brazilian Empire, the committee was unable to agree, the conferees on the part of the Senate proposing to the House committee that they would abate those respective sums to $300,000 each, and that if the House committee would submit that proposition to the House, and the House should sustain their action in disagreeing, then the Senate committee would withdraw from the position they had assumed. As it is, therefore, we failed to agree upon a proposition for $300,000 for each of these items. I ask for the sense of the Senate.

Mr. WITHERS. Do I understand the Senator to say that the understanding of the committee is that that proposition is to submit the result of their conclusion to the House to pass upon it before they have another conference?

Mr. WEST. I am not aware whether the House committee will act upon the suggestion made by the Senate committee or not, but the Senate committee propose to abate the amount to $300,000 in each case, leaving the House to act upon it if they see proper. We can stand upon that proposition, subject to their action, if the Senate so see proper.

Mr. BOGY. The Senate amended the House bill by adding two provisions for subsidies, one appropriating $500,000 for the mail service from San Francisco to Japan and China and the other service on the Pacific Ocean to Australia, and one $500,000 for a monthly mail from New Orleans to Rio Janeiro. The House committee disagreed to these amendments entirely. The Senate committee then proposed to reduce the amounts to $300,000 in each case. Some of the House committee, I think, favored that, but the majority did not. It was proposed that the subject should be referred to the two Houses without an indorsement by the committee and let the Houses pass upon it themselves. That was declined. The matter stands in that way now, the Senate conferees insisting on the matter being referred to both Houses respectively, and as one of the amendments has got to go to another conference committee, and the passage of the bill will not be delayed by letting the other amendments go also, I would suggest that the whole subject be referred again to a conference committee, and I would furthermore suggest that it should be a new committee. I have been on the committee twice, I think our minds are set on that subject, and I would prefer myself that a new committee entirely should be raised. I hope, therefore, the Senate will insist on these amendments; as we have insisted on one and the bill cannot pass at present, I hope we shall insist on the others and make another effort. I hope, therefore, the motion made by the Senator from Louisiana will be sustained by the Senate and a new committee appointed.

Mr. WEST. I move that the Senate insist on its position on the amendments named and ask for a further conference with the House.

Mr. WADLEIGH. Let me inquire of the Senator from Louisiana whether or not the disagreement is upon the mail subsidies of $500,000 each.

Mr. WEST. The disagreements have been fully stated and they are all understood.

Mr. WADLEIGH. I did not happen to be in and did not understand.

Mr. WEST. I call for the question on my motion that the Senate insist and ask for a further conference.

Mr. DAVIS. The Senate has already passed upon the amendments relating to the railroad mail service. The item now before the House is the one I tried to get the Senator having charge of the bill to state previously so that we should know exactly what we had to vote upon. One, in my judgment, has some bearing upon the other; but in order not to take up the time of the Senate I yielded and did not require the reading of the whole at the desk. Now if it is the intention of the Senate committee of conference to adhere to the subsidies, I think the Senate ought to let the committee know at once what the wish of the Senate is. But if, on the other hand, the conferees believe that it would be better to let the two questions go together and make another effort, with the understanding that they shall not hold out so as to defeat the whole bill, owing to either one of these amendments, I agree at once to have another conference; but we are running along toward the end of the session. This is one of the most important appropriation bills we have. Without its passage the whole mail service of this country has to stop; and neither of these amendments is of sufficient importance for that. Having expressed myself in that way I make no opposition to the request of the Senator having charge of the bill.

Mr. BOGY. It seems to me the Senator from West Virginia makes a very great mistake. This bill has not been delayed, and no word has been said to delay its passage by the question of subsidies. It has been delayed by the fact that the committees could not agree with regard to the amount to be allowed for the transportation of the mail on the trunk railroads, not by the other question at all. The main point has been the trunk railroads.

Mr. SAULSBURY. As a member of the Post-Office Committee I was not present when the provision of the bill was incorporated into it. I should certainly have opposed it, had I been present in the committee, as I should have opposed it here if I had been present in the Senate when it passed. I shall not let this occasion pass without here stating that I am unqualifiedly opposed to these subsidies whether for the Brazilian line or the Pacific mail line. I am perfectly willing to pay to each of these lines a fair and proper compensation for carrying the mails, based upon the services they render to the Government; but I shall not consent by any vote of mine to subsidize either of these companies. I say here and now, if it puts in jeopardy the post-office bill, if my vote can determine it, these subsidies shall not pass by my consent.

I am perfectly willing to pay the Pacific mail line, which has had a subsidy for ten years of half a million dollars, the full compensation to which it is entitled for the service it renders to the Post-Office Department, and I am willing to pay the Brazilian line whatever may be a fair compensation for carrying the mails between New Orleans and Brazil; but when they come here and ask us to subsidize these lines, to take the money which the people, by taxes, have paid into the Treasury of the United States, and give it to corporations, I enter my protest against it.

I hope, therefore, we shall recede from this proposition, and that we shall not encumber this bill with any measure whatever to subsidize either the Pacific mail line or the Brazilian line.

Mr. BOGY. A motion to recede would test the whole subject. I am willing to go into it at length. I am perfectly willing to go into the subject at great length right off, if the Senate desire it. I am entirely prepared.

Mr. WADLEIGH. The Senator from Missouri intimates that he will consume the whole time that remains of this session in discussion. I am opposed to these subsidies. The public believe that they are too large. The public believe, and I think with truth, that the service can be performed at a much less rate, and that this is not a fair and a just compensation for the services which are to be expected of these steamship companies. I propose to vote against it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Louisiana, that the Senate insist on its amendments and ask for a further conference.

Mr. WITHERS. We have already determined that we shall have another committee of conference on this bill. As regards the subsidies, let the whole question go to the same committee of conference, and let them consider it. If they fail to agree, when they come back here, it will be time for us to yield to the House and give up the subject. We can gain no time by voting now on these various motions. We shall have to have another committee of conference anyhow.

Mr. WADLEIGH. It can do no harm to inform the committee what is the sense of the Senate on this question, and I hope there will be a vote so that they may know what it is.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I hope the committee of conference that may be formed may not be embarrassed by the consideration of the subsidy question. Let us now recede from that proposition. As the Senator from New Hampshire has said, I believe the judgment of the country is that it is too much to pay for the service that these companies propose to render to the Postal Department. Let us therefore not embarrass the conference committee with the consideration of this question at all. I move that the Senate recede.

Mr. BOGY. I do not believe that the judgment of the country is opposed to subsidies that are just and proper and clear of any fraud, and calculated to promote some great and necessary work or open some new and important channel of commerce. Politicians have used this question as a most popular one for declamation. It is the abuse of this system which the people condemn, and justly, but not its judicious application for the public good. I certainly would not favor extravagant and corrupt subsidies; but this I will say, that you cannot restore the prostrate commerce of this country unless you use means of this kind. You never can bring back to the ocean the vessels that were swept away from it during the last war unless you use the same means that are employed by all the commercial nations of the present day the world over.

To-day we have no commerce of any consequence with South America; and if you strike down the line that crosses the Pacific Ocean and carries the mail to Japan, China, and Australia, and to the numerous islands of that ocean, you will sweep from the bosom of that vast sea the only American line in that quarter, and you will force the immense commerce of that region to Europe, and mostly to England.

At this time England has upward of one hundred steam-vessels running to the ports of South America. The United States, boasting to be a great commercial nation, and in close proximity to that country, has but very few indeed, and not one regular line. A man in New York desiring to send a letter to Rio Janeiro has to send it to England so that it may find a vessel there to carry it to its destination. A person in New Orleans who desires to correspond with South America has to send his letter to New York, and from there it goes across the ocean to England to find the means of transmission, and any one in New York who wishes to write to any portion of Mexico has to avail himself of a British line to carry his letter from the island of Saint Thomas to the city of Vera Cruz. And yet we profess to legislate in favor of commerce so as to find markets for the vast and increasing productions of our country. So far from being liberal and wise in our policy, we are pursuing a narrow and miserable system, crippling our foreign commerce. True economy dictates a different and more enlightened system. If we wish to attain the position intended by nature for us, that of a great, first-class commercial power, we must resort to the means that other nations employ, and not go back to the slow and sluggish instrumentalities used forty or fifty years ago, when we were only an agricultural, farming, and a rural population almost entirely.

I may disagree with a portion of the party leaders on this subject, but I think I am in accord with the sentiment of the people. I may disagree with the politicians who are willing to lead the people astray by crying out "subsidy" and "corruption" and "Credit Mobilier," and in this way obtain their confidence, at the expense, however, of the public good. I am opposed to corruption and to all Credit Mobiliers and to all jobs. In this I yield to no Senator; but, nevertheless, without fair and judicious subsidies to-day many of our great works would not exist. The West is covered with railroads, which would not now exist if the Government had not given to them millions of acres of public lands. The great road from the valley of the Missouri to the Pacific Ocean, once looked upon as a wild and visionary dream, would not exist without aid from the Government. There may have been very great frauds perpetrated in the management and the building of this road; nevertheless, its value to the commerce of the nation is beyond all calculation; and as a national work, binding the extremities of our country, it is equally impossible to estimate its importance.

Therefore, Mr. President, without detaining the Senate, I am willing to present that question to the mind of the country, that of reasonable subsidies as necessary to develop its resources. Subsidies, of course well guarded, are used by France, England, Germany, and indeed by the nations of Europe at the present day that are striving for the commerce of the world. We are holding back on this subject because, as I have already said, we are led by the demagogues throughout the country. The people are intelligent, and if allowed to act for themselves would regulate this, and keep all such things as subsidies within reasonable bounds; and it is within these bounds I am anxious to keep them. A line from New Orleans to South America would be of the greatest benefit to the section of country which I have the honor in part to represent upon this floor. I may say it is a part and parcel of that system which is destined some day to connect the southwestern country with the Pacific Ocean through what is called the Texas Pacific line of railroad, for which I am ready at this moment to vote a subsidy by guaranteeing the interest on its bonds. The southern man who does not see this, it seems to me, fails to appreciate the interest of his section.

The city of New Orleans is only sixteen hundred miles from the Pacific Ocean. The city of New York is three thousand miles from the same ocean. Hence, connect the city of New Orleans, which is a seaport, with the Pacific Ocean, and you bring to that city the commerce of Europe, which seeks the eastern world across our continent. To-day New Orleans, and all the Gulf States, are virtually cut off from any connection, commercial or otherwise, with the Pacific Ocean. A gentleman residing in New Orleans who desires to go to San Francisco has to make a long trip north before he can turn his way westward. Why should not this section be connected by railroad with the Pacific Ocean? This can only be done by Government help, and without that help it will be many years before the South can have any commercial relations with the Pacific.

South America is destined to be, if we are wise in our legislation, to this country what the East Indies have been to England, a source of inexhaustible wealth; inexhaustible because nature in that climate reproduces annually with boundless profusion. Shall we not have the wisdom and statesmanship to avail ourselves of our position so as to have some part and parcel in that trade, which is now all carried to England? A New York buyer of coffee in Rio Janeiro pays for his purchase by a bill on London; and so with the buyer from Baltimore. This should not be, and would not be if proper efforts were made to give direction to this trade. As it is now, no such effort is made, and none can be successfully made without a regular line of steamers; and New Orleans is the natural point for our trade with the republics of South America.

Therefore, Mr. President, I am in favor of a reasonable subsidy for this line. My section is immensely interested in the establishment of a line from New Orleans to Brazil. We have provided for an expenditure of $5,000,000 to $7,000,000 to open the mouth of the Mississippi; and what good will it do unless you encourage some trade from this point? I know it is said if the trade is profitable it will come of itself. That is true to a certain extent; but when competition is stimulated by the legislation of other countries you have to use the same means to accomplish the same object.

There is another point. The time will come when the appropriations for the Navy should be cut down to one-half what they are now; yet a Navy is not only of essential importance, but is indispensable to a nation. It is by building and maintaining a commercial navy that you will do away with one-half of the appropriations for the Government Navy. Train your seamen in the mercantile navy, let the merchant ships be so built that in the event of war they are ready at a moment's warning to be changed from merchant vessels to Government and war vessels, and those same seamen who have breasted the storms upon the mercantile vessels will be the seamen ready for war when it does come. It might be wise for us to spend $5,000,000 annually to encourage our merchant navy and spend that much less for the Government Navy. It would certainly be much wiser to spend some of this money in the way I have suggested, and encourage the commerce of the country by building a mercantile navy, than make the large appropriations which have been made from year to year. The men trained as sailors in the mercantile navy cost nothing, and all history proves their adaptation in times of war.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I never fail to listen with a great deal of pleasure to my distinguished friend from Missouri, [Mr. BOGY,] who always addresses the Senate ably and eloquently; but on this occasion I must be permitted to say, with all due deference to my friend, that he has but repeated the stereotyped arguments which have been used time and again on this floor and in these lobbies in favor of taking the money of the people out of the Treasury and giving it to these corporations.

My learned and honorable friend in the discussion of this question has seen proper to discuss the claims of the Southern Pacific Railroad and to enlighten us upon the question of the marine and the naval service of the country; but he has not, in my judgment, advanced one argument that ought to weigh in favor of the proposition now to subsidize these companies, the Pacific Mail Company and the Brazilian Mail Steamship Company. If it is put on the ground that it will build up commerce, I would enter into that argument. Our commerce to-day, notwithstanding for years past we have been expending the public money in the shape of subsidies to steam lines, is not what it was in former years, when the sturdy integrity and virtue of our fathers prohibited and restrained us from granting the public money to private corporations. No, sir, your commerce is not to-day in a waning condition because of the want of stimulus by the Government, but it is because the energies of the people have been directed in a different direction; and so long as men may look to the Government for aid, you will have no enterprise in the shape of commerce except such as the Government fosters. Let us alter our policy in this respect and again the sea will be whitened with the sails of our merchant ships. But while we adopt the policy of subsidizing one line we virtually exclude and drive from the sea all other lines. Let us pay these lines for the service they render the Government by carrying the mails, but let us not attempt to empty the coffers of the Government into the laps of these rich corporations. We have paid already for ten years a subsidy to the Pacific Mail Company, and if it is now not able to stand upon its feet the sooner it goes down the better for all concerned; the better for the corporation, the better for the men engaged in it. Let us at any rate guard the public Treasury, guard the taxes which the people have paid into the Treasury from depletion in favor of private corporations. For one, sir, I will not vote for this subsidy under any circumstances.

Mr. WINDOM. What is the question before the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Will the Senate insist on its amendments and ask for another conference?

Mr. WINDOM. Was there not a motion made by the Senator from Delaware to recede?

Mr. SAULSBURY. I did make that motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair was not aware of that. The motion to recede has priority.

Mr. WINDOM. I move that the five-minute rule be applied to this bill, and I hope that the motion made by the Senator from Delaware will be agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota moves that the five-minute rule be applied to this bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion to recede from these amendments.

Mr. BOGY. I ask for the yeas and nays on that motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. DAVIS. Is there not an error? The Senator from Delaware does not mean to recede from all amendments. I understood him to move to recede from the amendments as to subsidies. There is also another amendment in the bill relating to railroads.

Mr. SAULSBURY. My motion was to recede from the Senate amendments in reference to the steamship subsidies.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Both of them?

Mr. SAULSBURY. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There are only two amendments pending. The others have been disposed of.

Mr. WEST. I spent some time in stating the points of difference between the two committees. I stated that there were four amendments upon which the two committees failed to agree. The Senate has voted on two of those amendments relating to the railroad service. The question now embraced by the motion of the Senator from Delaware is, Will the Senate recede from its amendments providing for subsidies to the China mail and the Brazilian mail? and that is all the question. I believe the Senator from Missouri has called for the yeas and nays on that question.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SPENCER, (when his name was called.) Upon all political questions I am paired with the Senator from North Carolina, Mr. MERRIMON.

Mr. WEST. This is not a political question.

Mr. SPENCER. I do not regard this a political question; and as I suppose we should both vote the same way, I shall vote.

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 29, nays 12; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alcorn, Bailey, Bayard, Blaine, Chaffee, Christiancy, Clayton Cooper, Davis, Harvey, Hereford, Hitchcock, Johnston, Jones of Florida, Kernan, McDonald, Norwood, Ransom, Robertson, Saulsbury, Sherman, Spencer, Stevenson, Teller, Wadleigh, Wallace, Whyte, Windom, and Withers—29.

NAYS—Messrs. Bogy, Booth, Conover, Dawes, Ferry, Hamlin, Kelly, Mitchell, Morton, Paddock, Sharon, and West—12.

ABSENT—Messrs. Allison, Anthony, Barnum, Bontwell, Bruce, Burnside, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Cameron of Wisconsin, Cockrell, Conkling, Cragin, Dennis, Dorsey, Eaton, Edmunds, Frelinghuysen, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Hamilton, Howe, Ingalls, Jones of Nevada, Logan, McCreery, McMillan, Maxey, Merrimon, Morrill, Oglesby, Patterson, Randolph, Sargent, Thurman, and Wright—34.

So the motion to recede was agreed to.

Mr. WEST. I move that the House be informed of the action of the Senate on the other amendments and that a committee of conference be appointed.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the committee; and Mr. ALLISON, Mr. DAWES, and Mr. DAVIS were appointed.

SIGNAL SERVICE.

Mr. SPENCER. I move that the Senate non-concur in the amendments of the House to the bill (S. No. 731) to limit and fix the signal service, and ask for a committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the committee; and Mr. SPENCER, Mr. CLAYTON, and Mr. RANDOLPH were appointed the conferees on the part of the Senate.

COURTS IN WEST VIRGINIA.

Mr. CONKLING. Some time ago the late Senator from West Virginia [Mr. Caperton] was appointed a member of the committee of conference on the bill (S. No. 472) changing the times of holding terms of the district court for the district of West Virginia. I move that the vacancy created by his death be filled by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to.

AFFAIRS IN ALABAMA.

Mr. BLAINE. I hope we shall go on with the Army appropriation bill now.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. The subcommittee designated by the Committee on Privileges and Elections to investigate affairs in the State of Alabama are authorized by a majority to report, and I now present the report.

The report was ordered to be printed.

ELECTIONS IN SOUTH CAROLINA AND LOUISIANA.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I desire to make a request in behalf of the Committee on Privileges and Elections. A subcommittee of the Committee on Privileges and Elections was sent to South Carolina to investigate affairs in that State. On account of the delay in printing the testimony, the testimony taken by that subcommittee is not yet printed, and consequently the subcommittee has not yet been able to prepare a report. I am instructed by the Committee on Privileges and Elections to ask permission of the Senate to file a report after the 4th day of March. The report is partially prepared, and can be filed within a few days.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to this permission?

Mr. STEVENSON. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wisconsin make a motion?

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I think the Senator from Kentucky will not object when the case is known. The Senator from North Carolina, who was a member of the subcommittee, [Mr. MERRIMON,] informed me yesterday that he would probably have to be absent to-day, and he requested me to make this request of the Senate.

Mr. WADLEIGH. I move to amend the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin so as to include the subcommittee that went to Louisiana. They have been unable to prepare their report for the same reason.

Mr. BLAINE. If this gives rise to debate, I shall not yield to it.

Mr. COOPER. Is the motion in order after objection?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is.

Mr. COOPER. What is pending before the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Army appropriation bill. The Senator from Maine yields for this purpose.

Mr. COOPER. Must not the Senator from Wisconsin move to postpone the Army bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Strictly.

Mr. COOPER. Does the Senator from Maine give way?

Mr. BLAINE. I do not. Let us go on with the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Army appropriation bill is before the Senate.

SALE OF DESERT LANDS.

Mr. SARGENT. I ask leave to make a report from a committee of conference.

Mr. BLAINE. I yield for that.

Mr. SARGENT submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 4261) entitled "An act to provide for the sale of desert lands in certain States and Territories," having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 1, 2, 5, 6, 9, 13, 14, and 16; that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 3, 4, 7, 10, 15, and 17, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 8, and agree to the same, with an amendment to strike out all of said amendment after the word "however," and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That the right to the use of water by the person so conducting the same on or to any tract of desert land of six hundred and forty acres shall depend upon bona fide prior appropriation, and such right shall not exceed the amount of water actually appropriated and necessarily used for the purpose of irrigation and reclamation; and all surplus water over and above such actual appropriation and use, together with the water of all lakes, rivers, and other sources of water supply upon the public lands and not navigable, shall remain and be held free for the appropriation and use of the public for irrigation, mining, and manufacturing purposes, subject to existing rights."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 11, and agree to the same, with an amendment to insert before the word "sum," in line 13, on the first page of the bill, the word "additional;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 12, and agree to the same, with an amendment striking out all after the word "provided," in said amendment, and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"That no person shall be permitted to enter more than one tract of land, and not to exceed six hundred and forty acres, which shall be in compact form."

And the Senate agree to the same.

A. A. SARGENT,
R. J. OGLESBY,
J. K. KELLY,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

J. K. LUTTRELL,
L. F. LANE,
L. CROUNSE,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was concurred in.

WARREN MITCHELL.

Mr. DORSEY. I move to reconsider the vote by which the Senate yesterday recommitted to the Committee on Claims the bill (S. No. 1145) for the relief of Warren Mitchell. I do not wish the motion called up at the present time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion will be entered.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BLAINE. Let us go on with the Army bill.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 4691) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, each paragraph of the committee's amendment will be considered by itself.

Mr. BLAINE. There is no necessity for reading the amendment by paragraphs, because the design is to take a vote of the Senate upon the substitution of that which is printed in italics for the bill that comes from the House, and I will state very briefly the reasons that governed the Committee on Appropriations in making this recommendation.

The bill comes to us very late in the session, and it is a bill that presents a great many points on which there would be sharp differences. There is a great deal of legislation in the bill that comes from the House. To begin with, there is a proposition to reduce the Army by eleven regiments, to reduce the aggregate of enlisted men from 25,000 to 17,000. There is a proposition in the bill to reduce the pay of all the leading officers in the Army, beginning with the General. There is a proposition also to entirely re-organize several of the departments; in effect, the different bureaus of the War Department; and there is a proposition at the end of it of a nature which undoubtedly would give rise to very prolonged and possibly animated discussion. So it seemed to the Committee on Appropriations that if they should recommend the traversing of this bill it would only be to invite a discussion which would inevitably end in having the bill go over and be lost. It does not seem to me, and I think in stating that I state what is the impression of a majority of the Committee on Appropriations, that it would be a possible thing to pass an Army appropriation bill at all if we assumed the basis of that bill to be the bill that comes from the House.

Now, in the absence of that consideration, I desire to say that the committee have agreed to take, and do recommend the Army bill of last session, which was a very thoroughly considered bill, after very great investigation and elaboration, probably one of the most thoroughly considered Army bills that has passed Congress for many years. The recommendation of the Committee on Appropriations is that we take that bill, merely leaving out of it the legislative provisions, which it is not necessary to repeat.

Coming to dollars and cents, I desire to state that the estimates of the War Department are $30,946,000; in round numbers, thirty-one millions. The bill of last session was $27,621,000. The pending bill is $21,992,000; in round numbers, twenty-two millions. The difference, therefore, between the bill that is recommended by the committee and the bill that comes from the House in the aggregate of money is about $5,700,000.

There is one other point very much in favor of the bill of last year. As I have already said, it was a carefully considered bill. It very minutely subdivided the heads and bases of expenditure. The bill that comes to us this year is very largely a lump bill, especially in the expenditures under the Quartermaster's Department, which was the most considerable, as every one knows, of the Army. It lumps them. It does not subdivide them. It is not nearly so well or so carefully drawn as the bill of last year, and the committee object to it on that account.

I therefore, without desiring to enter into a prolonged discussion, for it is my wish to have the five-minute rule applied to this bill, submit this brief explanation and ask that this bill may have the five-minute rule applied to it as in Committee of the Whole.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. DAVIS. I hope the Senator will not on so important a bill, and when there are but few provisions to be debated, ask for the five-minute rule, unless it should be seen that the time was going to be abused. The Senator well knows that this is probably the most important appropriation bill that we have before us; indeed, it is the only one now left. The five-minute rule, as a matter of course, sometime will have to be applied, but I think it too soon now.

Mr. BLAINE. The Senator from West Virginia cannot fail to see that if this bill be left open to general discussion, with all the points of difference in it, we might as well not spend time upon it at all, because it will be obviously impossible to pass it. We are now on the last legislative day of the session. To have this bill pass here and go back to the House, be reconsidered there, go to a conference on the points of difference, and have the bill as finally agreed on enrolled and presented to the President for his signature will certainly be all that we can hope to accomplish between now and to-morrow at twelve o'clock noon.

Mr. DAVIS. I believe this is the only appropriation bill left unacted upon. There are important, highly important, matters contained in the bill now before us; and, as I said a moment ago, unless the time appears to be abused, unless some Senator seems to be taking up all the evening, I hope the Senate will wait a little while at least before applying the five-minute rule.

Mr. BLAINE. I feel that I must insist that the Senate pass upon the question of considering the bill under the five-minute rule. I am very sure that to leave it open to discussion without limitation of the time would be simply to lose it, after a discussion which might itself be of no profit to either side of the Chamber. I believe that the bill can be passed satisfactorily to both sides under the five-minute rule, and that it can become a law; and therefore I insist on the motion that the five-minute rule be applied to the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine moves that the five-minute rule be applied to this bill during its consideration.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The words proposed by the Committee on Appropriations to be inserted will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed by the Committee on Appropriations to amend the bill by striking out all after the enacting clause, and in lieu thereof to insert the following:

Mr. WALLACE. It will be seen by an examination of the substitute that the Senate undertakes to occupy the field that has always heretofore been occupied by the House, by originating what is in effect an appropriation bill. The substitute is substantially a new bill. The Senate does not concede to the House the right to originate this bill if it adopts the substitute. This is the first objection which will be urged on the part of those who sustain the House bill.

The bill as it came to us from the House reduced the number of men from 25,000 to 17,000 and it reduced the total aggregate appropriations over $5,000,000 from those of last year. It makes legislative changes in the management of the Army and in the control of the several departments thereof, many of which are undoubtedly of value, but the Senate committee by the substitute refuses even to consider them. The representatives of the people are refused the privilege on this floor of being heard upon these questions of what is in their opinion necessary legislative change. Whether they are proper or improper it seems to me should be considered by the Senate, and not stricken out without deliberation thereon.

Besides, the question of the use of the Army in Louisiana and of the misappropriation of money by the executive arm of the Government, has also been considered by the House and included in its bill. I have no doubt this question has been gravely and earnestly considered by the House, and they have sent to the Senate a bill which contains their views upon that subject. It is their right, I apprehend, their constitutional and clear right, in voting money to carry on the affairs of the Government to place conditions upon the expenditure of that money. The Senate committee by its report does not permit the Senate even to consider this important subject, but on the contrary simply substitutes, by a sweeping provision for that and all the other provisions of the House bill, the bill of last year. In other words, they take the bill of last year as an appropriation bill and say this is that upon which we shall stand.

It seems to me that the proper course would have been to have taken up these amendments of the House, examine them seriatim, ascertain whether they were or were not proper, correct them where the judgment of the Senate did not accord with that of the House, increase the amounts appropriated by the House if a just view and a proper regard for the interests of the service required it, and then to have discussed the question of the conditions imposed by the House upon the use of the Army which they have imposed, and thus made up the judgment of the Senate upon that, and then to have finally settled the bill by a conference committee. A majority of the committee of the Senate has taken a different view. For my part, Mr. President, and for those who act with me, we must vote against the substitute proposed by the Committee on Appropriations. I cannot go into a detailed argument of the provisions of the bill owing to the shortness of the period of time to which we are limited.

Mr. DAVIS. On page 19, in line 131, of the substitute before "thousand," I move to strike out "twenty-five" and insert "twenty;" so that the proviso will read:

Provided, That such assignment of recruits shall not increase the total aggregate of the Army beyond the number of 20,000 enlisted men as provided in this act.

As has been said the substitute, as now proposed, increases the appropriation from that of the bill as it came to us from the House between five and six million dollars. The amendment offered by myself would reduce that amount, or, in other words, be a saving of probably between three and four million dollars, and cause the Army to stand at 20,000 men instead of 25,000 men as the enlistments are now required. My impression is that 20,000 men are ample for an Army at any time, and that 20,000 men probably would be better employed on the western frontier than where many of the troops now are.

Mr. BLAINE. The Senator from West Virginia will observe that by the operation of this bill 2,500 cavalry authorized by the act of August 16, 1876, are disbanded. It reduces the Army 2,500, which I think is quite as much as it ought to be now reduced.

Mr. DAVIS. As I understand the provision for the 2,500 men, last year we passed a bill allowing that number of cavalry if necessary, if wanted for public use, for one year, for the year only, and this bill does not reduce the Army and does not refer to those troops at all.

Mr. BLAINE. But by not referring to them it allows them to drop out. It does not revive them; it does not continue those organizations; and therefore the Army, in consequence of this bill, in propria vigore becomes reduced 2,500 men.

Mr. DAVIS. As I understand it, the 2,500 men were allowed for a special purpose, in the event of there being service for them, and they do not belong to the regular service and cannot be considered a part of the Army. They were enlisted for a special service, for a special time, and a special appropriation was made for them. Therefore they cannot be considered in any sense as a part of the Regular Army; and on that point I think the Senator from Maine will agree with me.

Mr. BLAINE. Of course that is true, but the Senator will observe that whereas last year we appropriated for 27,500 men, this year we are only proposing to appropriate for 25,000 men, and the difference is at least $1,600,000. It is just as vital to the Treasury as though we took that number from the regulars. They were called into service for a specific duty. That duty is done, and they are disbanded, and a saving of course comes to the Treasury.

Mr. DAVIS. The Senator probably recollects that the 2,500 men were not provided for in the Army appropriation bill. It was a separate bill, according to my recollection, and a separate appropriation entirely from the regular appropriations for the Army.

Mr. BLAINE. It costs the Treasury just as much, however.

Mr. DAVIS. Of course, but that matter is not now before the Senate, and the question does not come up. I believe that 20,000 men are ample. Of course the number of 25,000 men would remain until the Army is decreased by the expiration of the terms of the enlisted men. They drop out in the ordinary way. The bill provides that no further enlistments shall take place. When the term of service of these 2,500 men who have been spoken of expires they will drop out. Probably there has never been any use for them, but whether that be so is another question. My judgment is that 20,000 men are ample. Probably 17,000 men would be ample. The popular branch of this Government believes that 17,000 men are ample, and they have provided for that number in the bill which they sent to us. The amendment offered by myself would make the Army in the course of time, not at once, come down to 20,000, which I hope and believe a majority of the Senate are in favor of doing. We no longer have the same disturbances on the western frontiers that we had last year when the Army appropriation bill was passed. When 25,000 men were designated as the number last year we well recollect that the country and Congress took into consideration that there were then disturbances on the western frontier, and disturbances that were likely to require all the Army there; but the result has been that a part of the Army has been used elsewhere, and I think very improperly. However, that I need not refer to in a discussion of this bill.

My belief is that the amendment offered by myself is proper and should be adopted. I indeed hoped that the Senator from Maine would find that it was right within itself, and that it would save this Government probably between three and four million dollars within the next fiscal year, and that therefore he would not object to the amendment. As the Senator will see, it is a number fixed between that of the bill as it came to us from the House and the substitute which the Senator from Maine has in charge. I am now almost persuaded to think (knowing as I do and as the Senator knows the wants of the country full well, and knowing that there are no troops wanted where now there are a good many in the southern country, and that there is much less necessity for them in the western territory than there was a year ago, when the number was put at 25,000,) that the amendment will not be opposed reducing the Army to 20,000 men, which would be a fair adjustment probably; for certainly it is a number between what the popular branch of the Government has fixed and the number provided in the substitute before the Senate.

Mr. LOGAN. I am opposed to this amendment, and I will briefly give my reasons. I believe since I have been in Congress I have never known a session to pass without some proposition on appropriation bills cutting at the Army. I ask the Senator from West Virginia to give me his attention for a moment.

Mr. DAVIS. I will try to do so.

Mr. LOGAN. I think I can give him good reasons why his amendment ought not to be adopted. I suppose from his argument that the adoption of the amendment is suggested on account of economy. I presume that is the reason for it.

Mr. DAVIS. That is one of the reasons.

Mr. LOGAN. And the other reason is on account of the number of the Army being more than is necessary for the service of the Government. Any gentleman who is well acquainted with the organization of an army knows that all the time striking at the private soldier in the Army is not an economical measure at all. If you want an army of 20,000 men, make your Army of that status, and let the men who serve as private soldiers correspond in number with the officers of the Army. On every Army appropriation bill some would provide that the Army shall not consist of more than so many enlisted men. Why not say of not more than so many officers also?

Mr. DAVIS. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. LOGAN. I will, certainly.

Mr. DAVIS. The Senator is chairman of a committee that has that matter in charge. If the Committee on Appropriations should attempt to reduce the number of officers already in line, that Senator no doubt would think that the Appropriation Committee was getting on ground that belonged to his committee. I have been in hopes for several years that the Senator from Illinois would bring in some bill or other which would remedy the very evil that he now points out.

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator did not exactly understand the point I was getting at, which I will try to arrive at soon. When I ask why not strike at the officers as well as the soldiers, I do not mean that I am in favor of reducing the Army to 20,000 men, but I mean that whatever the number of the Army may be, the number of men and officers ought to correspond; the Army ought to have a certain status, and then it ought to be let alone. You ought to organize the Army either with 20,000 men, or 25,000 men, or 30,000 men, or whatever number you require, and fix it and then let it alone; but when you cut it down the whole force should be cut down correspondingly. The private soldier in the Army is the cheapest element in the Army, and costs less money than any other portion of the Army; but somehow or other there is an attempt made at every session of Congress to strike the private soldier out of the Army; in other words, to cut down the number of enlisted men and not to touch anybody else. I do not believe that our Army is large enough.

Mr. DAVIS. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him again?

Mr. LOGAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. DAVIS. I know the Senator is very familiar with all things in regard to the Army. My idea is—and he will correct me if I am wrong—that a provision reducing the Army as the enlistments of the men expire is just what would take place in regard to the officers.

As the officers drop off from any cause, whether they die or resign, I ask him whether or not their places now are filled, or, in other words, whether there is an addition made if an Army officer resigns. I know the grade goes up, but whether the number is increased or not I do not know, and the Senator can inform me.

Mr. LOGAN. Certainly. The officers of the Army are not reduced at all. If an officer dies to-day his place is filled to-morrow, or if he resigns, or if he is put on the retired list. When he is placed on the retired list, instead of reducing the Army it is making a duplicate of officers, for his place is filled in the line and he occupies a place on the retired list and draws his pay just the same as he did in the line.

Mr. DAVIS. I ask the Senator whether or not that rule applies to the lowest officer?

Mr. LOGAN. It applies to all officers of the Army alike.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time of the Senator from Illinois has expired.

Mr. LOGAN. I, of course, then have no further time, but I should like to explain further in reference to this matter.

Mr. DAVIS. Some Senator can yield five minutes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield his time to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. DAVIS. Yes, sir; if I have it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois has five minutes additional time.

Mr. LOGAN. I do not believe that 25,000 men are sufficient. I do not say that for the reason that I think the Army should be used in any particular locality, but my judgment has been for years that our Army ought to be established at about 30,000 men, and I will give my reasons for it. We have the capacity in the officers' department of the Army to-day for over 30,000 men. We have 30,000 private soldiers in the Army to-day, and about 25,000 effective men, and not more. If you reduce the Army to 25,000 soldiers, we should have perhaps 17,000 effective men and not more. The details in the Army, sickness, hospital service, and everything of that kind, reduce the Army to about that ratio. In my judgment 30,000 men is about such an Army as the Government ought to have in time of peace. We ought to have at least a sufficient Army to form a nucleus if the Government should get in trouble or in danger, so that a large Army might be established and organized; and, certainly, that would not be too small for any emergency that might arise. Now, I do not believe that it is correct in principle or correct economy to reduce the Army; but if there is a desire for the reduction of the Army let a commission be appointed for the purpose of a re-organization of the Army, and when it is re-organized, let the re-organization ramify and affect all parts of the Army alike. We had a re-organization of the Army a few years ago, and put it on a basis of about 30,000 men. We thought that would stand; but at every Congress since there has been a change, either an increase or a reduction, without affecting the officers or the frame-work of the Army in any way whatever. There was a commission appointed at the last session of Congress for this purpose. They have not completed their report. A portion of that commission belong to the Congress of the United States, and their terms expire on the 4th of March. Hence a new commission will have to be organized. I say to the Senate that that is the proper way to re-organize this Army and reduce its force, if any reduction is required whatever; and it is the only proper way. If you reduce your Army in the way proposed here, you will be legislating every Congress, either increasing the private soldiers in number or decreasing them. There is no economy in that method. Their muster-out and their muster-in, their enlistment and their re-enlistment, is a continuous expense. I say to the Senator from West Virginia there is no economy whatever in this proposition, and I will venture the assertion that if you will examine the records to-day you will find that by reducing and increasing the Army one Congress after another, counting the enlistment, the muster-out, and the marching from the place at which they are mustered out to their homes, you have not saved the Government five dollars.

Mr. DAVIS. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. LOGAN. Certainly.

Mr. DAVIS. How is it, then, that when you reduce the number from 30,000 down to 25,000, which has been done, or to any other number, the Army appropriation bill has been reduced about a thousand dollars a man? In such cases of reduction the decrease of the amount appropriated for the support of the Army has been about a thousand dollars a man, or about $5,000,000 in a reduction of 5,000 men It does not quite average that sum, but is very near it. Do I understand the Senator to say that there is no economy in such a reduction? The bill before us reduces the Army to 17,000 men, and, as a consequence, the bill appropriates nearly $6,000,000 less than the substitute reported from the Committee on Appropriations. Therefore there must be a saving of $6,000,000.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time of the Senator from Illinois has expired.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, aside from the general inexpediency of reducing the Army, or increasing it, for that matter, on an appropriation bill, I desire to invite the attention of the Senator from West Virginia to one or two facts connected with the Army. The proposition now, as it comes from the House, is to make the Army of the United States 17,000 men. Long prior to the war, thirty-five years ago, when the population of the country was about 17,000,000; when the area of the country was not one-half what it now is; when the Indian frontier was nothing compared to what it now is; when the warlike tendencies of the tribes were nothing to be feared as they now are, we had an army of twelve thousand men. Instead of the Army growing beyond the growth of the country, it has not at all kept pace with it. The Army is smaller now in proportion to the aggregate population, to the area of the country, to the lines of unsettled and savage frontier, to the great extent of coast, to all the points of defense at which an army may be called upon to act, than it has ever been in time of peace since the Government of the United States was organized; and when you compare it with the armies of other nations, it becomes infinitely small. There is not a little kingdom in Europe, not equal to one of our States in size, and some much less than one of our States in population, that does not have an army quadruple that of the United States. Our Army is absolutely inconsiderable in number to-day when you estimate the magnitude of the nation, the possible service it may be called upon to perform, the needs at any hour that may break out for its use. I should consider it extremely imprudent, without advice, without consultation with the authorities of the War Office, without any report, as the Senator from Illinois suggests, from the commission which has had the subject under consideration, right here in the rush and roar of the last twenty-four hours of the session to propose to reduce the Army of the United States upon an appropriation bill.

Every man in the country is interested in having the Army just as small as it can be with safety; every man in the country is interested in having the Army just as large as safety requires it to be. Whether that point is precisely where we now stand or not, I do not pretend to say. Whether the Army may not be somewhat smaller, I do not know; whether it might not be reduced with safety, I do not propose to say; but I do propose to say that neither the Senator from West Virginia nor any other Senator on this floor has the requisite data to form a judgment upon which legislative action should be based. Therefore I think it is safe and prudent and wise to stand by the military establishment as it is until it shall be changed with due consideration and on that evidence which should be before any legislative body before acting upon so important a subject. I hope the amendment of the Senator from West Virginia will not prevail.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, in matters touching appropriations for the public service it has been my habit to seek instruction from the committee properly charged with the subject, and not undertake to interpose vague ideas of my own in respect to matters in relation to which their opportunities for information were so much better. Therefore it is that I have held myself in a great degree bound by the reports of the appropriate committees on this subject. There is not sufficient time left at the present session for a proper discussion of all the important questions involved in the present bill and the Senate amendments, and I shall briefly signify my position in regard to it, not desiring to delay the Senate and not desiring to make an extra session of Congress necessary.

Between the two Houses there exists a difference as to the amount of money to be expended under this bill, a very serious difference. The cost of the military establishment proposed by the House of Representatives is $6,000,000 less than is proposed by the Senate in round numbers. The difference as to numerical armed force is about eight thousand men, the House proposing an army of 17,000, rank and file, and the Senate of 25,000. Serious as may be the question of expenditure, it seems to me that a far graver question accompanies it for consideration. It is not the mere number of troops authorized; it is not merely the cost of the Army; it is the question of the employment of the Army. That is the cause of the deep feeling which pervades the people of this country to-day, and which forms the chief difference between the two Houses of Congress in respect to the present bill. It is not worth while to attempt to disguise it; the fact is that a widespread belief exists that the Army of the country has been employed and is still being used for purposes dangerous to the liberties of the country. That forms the objection to the increase of the military establishment and forms the reasons for the reduction proposed by the Representatives of the people. I only speak of that which we all know, which the whole country knows, of the improper uses to which the Army has been put in certain States of the Union during the last few years.

It is now apparent that the outgoing administration tardily admit this policy in the use of the Army to have been a serious mistake and it seems are taking steps to abandon it. We hear something of a similar suggestion, a faint adumbration of opinion, from the incoming administration that they are in accord with these last expressions of opinion on the part of the present administration. I sincerely hope this may be so. In my judgment it would have been wiser had the House of Representatives moved directly, not by way of lessening appropriations, but directly, for the repeal of all those war measures authorizing the use of the Army in the several States which have found place upon our statute-books in the last fifteen years. The use of military force of the nation for the execution of the laws should certainly be the very last resort, and not, as of late years, the very first. I hope the day is near at hand when we shall repeal all this military legislation which has sprung up under a semirevolutionary condition of affairs, and permit us to return where the Constitution intended our administration of government should be restricted, only to enforce laws by the military power as a last resort, and even when the military power was called in in aid of the civil power it was to be the militia of the States, and not the Army of the nation.

Mr. President, I had rather meet these questions directly and speak of them candidly that they may be understood. Economy is essential; I have no question of that; and yet there may be a false economy in disproportionately small expenditure. It is the other question to which I refer that causes the feeling and real difference between the Houses, and therefore it is that I propose to give my vote in favor of the general line of action adopted by the House of Representatives in this bill.

After all, I do trust that our liberties have not reached that point that upon the difference between 10,000 and 25,000 men shall depend the safety of the American people, for then it would seem to me that a system of government so illy calculated to preserve itself against the aggressions of one arm of its own service would scarcely be worth preserving.

After all, the cure for such evils must be in the public opinion of an intelligent and courageous people, and that public opinion will practically enforce itself upon the exigencies of the occasion. We know there were emergencies, ten or twelve years ago, which, thank heaven, no longer exist, and there can be no doubt that laws for which there was a pretext or a real cause at that time are no longer the meet and proper laws for a peaceful establishment. It is not the size of the Army, it is the use to which the Army is applied; it is the extraordinary laws under which the Army can be unjustly used and has been used. It is the repeal of those laws that I seek, in order that the country may be put in statu quo ante bellum. It is that the use of the military as an aid to civil power should be the very last resort in a government of laws, and that, under our system, where the laws are to be enforced in aid of the State, the State militia, and not the Army of the United States, should be called upon.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator's five minutes have expired.

Mr. BLAINE. On this amendment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On this amendment.

Mr. WHYTE. I yield the five minutes to which I would be entitled to the Senator from Maine.

Mr. BLAINE. I am very much obliged to the Senator from Maryland for his courtesy. I have great respect for the opinion of the Senator from Delaware on questions of law. I suppose he refers in his remarks to the sixth section of the House bill as the point of difference between the two branches.

Mr. BAYARD. As to number?

Mr. BLAINE. I understood the Senator to say that he did not make the issue so much upon numbers, but as upon the uses of the Army, and it is that to which the Senator objects rather than the numbers especially, if I understood him.

Mr. BAYARD. The question of numbers is to me quite secondary as compared with the use, or misuse rather, of the Army.

Mr. BLAINE. I suppose the Senator referred to the essential difference between the two branches as existing in the sixth section of the House bill.

Mr. BAYARD. There is where the idea appears.

Mr. BLAINE. As I remarked, I have great respect for the opinion of the Senator as a lawyer, however much I might differ with him on other points. Would he consider it to be quite within the scope of the constitutional powers of the President to say that, in a given instance, the President should command the Army in one way and in another way that he should not command it?

Mr. BAYARD. I have grave doubts upon the subject, but there is no time now given for due discussion. The language of the House bill is perhaps not such as I would have adopted. I think it may be open to criticism. I have stood here very often as a constructionist in favor of the rights and powers of each branch of the Government, and I am not disposed in the least to embarrass or hamper the Executive in the just exercise of any rightful power with which he is invested by the Constitution.

Mr. BLAINE. I have a very great desire that the Army bill should pass without any angry discussion or without any introduction of the controverted points that lie just in that section. I have very decided views upon the subject, but I do not know that the expression of them would do any good. I cannot believe that there is a lawyer on either side of this Chamber who will assert in his place that he believes that the Congress of the United States has the right to say to the President, who by the Constitution is the Commander-in-Chief of the Army and Navy, that in a particular exigency he shall not command the Army and in another exigency he shall command it in a certain way. If that does not constitute a clear invasion of the powers of the President, conferred upon him by the organic law of the land, then I cannot read it. The Senator from Delaware must know and himself see that with that provision in the bill, it would be simply impossible to get the Army appropriation bill passed.

Mr. BAYARD. And yet the Senator understands that the power of Congress to regulate the use of the Army is undoubted.

Mr. BLAINE. It is perfectly undoubted that the President of the United States must command the Army under the provisions of law, but that is a very different thing from saying that in a particular instance you shall command the Army in this way and in another particular instance you shall not command it in that way. I think the Senator from Delaware does not need to be reminded that there is a world-wide distinction just there, and one which I am very sure he would not cross.

I do not desire to go into a discussion on that point. I have offered on behalf of the Committee on Appropriations the bill that was matured, and say that to the Senator from Pennsylvania, [Mr. WALLACE,] who I regret is not in his seat, because he said that we had invaded the privileges of the House in proposing an amendment. We are taking the bill that was so elaborately matured last session by this identical House of Representatives with scarcely the dotting of an i or the crossing of a t. The changes are wholly immaterial. The changes in amount do not constitute $100,000 in the whole. It is conforming precisely to what last year was considered the standard of economy and of prudence. I have offered that on behalf of the Committee on Appropriations and I beg that we may have a vote upon it without prolonged discussion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from West Virginia has exhausted his time.

Mr. COOPER. I take the floor and yield my time to the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. DAVIS. The clause in the fifth section referred to by the Senator from Maine [Mr. BLAINE] a moment ago we have not reached yet. What we are discussing is the relative numbers and cost of the Army.

The Senator a moment ago spoke of the number in the Army, and said in substance that the proportion per capita of the Army to the population was less than in former years. That may or may not be so. If he recollects positively I have nothing to say about that. I have sent to get the numbers so as to test it. I have in my hand the report of the Secretary of the Treasury for the last fiscal year. As to cost you find a very different state of things formerly to that which prevails at present. If you take it by decades and commence in 1820 you find that our Army then cost $2,000,000. Probably we had 20,000,000 people then; I do not recollect the exact number. In 1830 the cost of the Army was $4,000,000. In 1840, if my recollection serves me right, we had about twenty-three million people——

Mr. BLAINE. Seventeen million.

Mr. DAVIS. In 1840 we had then only 17,000,000, and the cost of the Army that year was $7,000,000.

Mr. WEST. Let me ask the Senator if he has any data giving the number of men in the Army at the same time.

Mr. DAVIS. I have sent to the library for that; I have it not now. I am now taking the expenditures as reported by the Secretary of the Treasury in his report for the present year, by decades, so as to be fair and not select any particular years, and to show the difference in the cost.

That proportion was only about one-third of a dollar to each one of the population in 1840. We spent for military service about $7,000,000. In 1850 the expenditure was $9,000,000. We had, I believe, about thirty-one million people in 1850, and we expended for the Army in every way in connection with the military service $9,000,000, which was less than a third of a dollar per capita. In 1860 what do we find? We find that we had nearly forty million people, thirty-eight millions and a half, probably, and expended $16,000,000.

Mr. BLAINE. The Senator confuses the eighth and ninth censuses. In 1850 the population was only 23,000,000; in 1860, 31,000,000. He is just ten years ahead of time.

Mr. DAVIS. I must have miscalled the year, but I did not the amount. In 1860 the expenditure was $16,000,000. For the last fiscal year we expended $38,000,000, which shows that we expended in the neighborhood of $1 per capita.

Mr. ALLISON. How much?

Mr. DAVIS. Thirty-eight million dollars.

Mr. ALLISON. For the Army?

Mr. DAVIS. For the military service. I take the same service all the way through. I am not speaking of the Army bill, but of the military service of the Government. The year before, which was 1875, our military service cost $41,000,000; the year previous, 1874, $42,000,000.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator knows that that includes the river and harbor expenditures and all the various items expended under the War Department.

Mr. DAVIS. I do not know any such thing. I know right the reverse, that it does not.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator is mistaken.

Mr. DAVIS. No, I am not mistaken.

Mr. ALLISON. I should like to know when the Army cost $38,000,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time of the Senator from West Virginia has expired.

Mr. DAVIS. I think I am right as to the amounts, at least the reports bear me out.

Mr. WEST. Some inquiries that I have had occasion to make on this subject, in connection with the duties assigned to me as a member of the Army commission, enable me to say that I disagree with the Senator from West Virginia when he states that the expenditures of the Army of the United States as aggregated in the report of the Secretary of the Treasury do not include rivers and harbors and the signal service.

Another piece of information that I was enabled to acquire was this, that the expense per capita in the Army in the last five years is less than it was in the year 1850.

Mr. DAVIS. If the Senator will allow me, that is a strange statement in the face of the official report that in 1850 the expenditure for the military service—and if it includes rivers and harbors now it did then—was $16,000,000, and last year it was $38,000,000. There is in these tables a miscellaneous column which in my judgment includes the rivers and harbors and other things of that kind, which shows an expenditure under that head of $48,000,000 last year; and if it did not include such things as river and harbor appropriations, where did the $48,000,000 go? What was it for?

Mr. WEST. The Senator sustains his argument by giving the aggregate of the expenditures of the military establishment. I differ with him entirely in his view that the expenditures for rivers and harbors are not included in this aggregate.

Furthermore, he does not state how many men there were in the Army. I asked him that question awhile ago; and I venture to tell him that if he will extend his researches a little further he will find the fact I now mention, that the expenses of the Army of the United States per capita to-day are less than they were in 1850. Such is the fact. That the great increase of the aggregate should be presented we ought not to be surprised at. We know what it comes from. We know it comes from the extension of our frontiers and our contact with hostile Indian tribes, involving transportation of large bodies of men from one point to another, and therefore the greater expense has been entailed upon the country; but really, so far as my researches have enabled me to judge, the economy of the Army to-day and the application of every dollar of the money appropriated judiciously and economically exceed anything known in our history.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. DAVIS. I think this is probably the most important of all questions in this bill. If the number of the Army is not reduced, then of course we cannot reduce the amount of money to be expended, because one goes with the other. I think we ought to have the yeas and nays to know whether or not we shall keep the Army up to its present status or whether it will be reduced. I therefore ask for the yeas and nays on this question. It is not my desire to call the yeas and nays so as to delay on every matter as we go along; but this is a test question.

Mr. BLAINE. That is correct; it is a test question. Let us have the yeas and nays.

Mr. EATON. I suggest to the Senator from West Virginia that we can have the yeas and nays quite as well on the amendment of the committee. That will be a general vote which will test the question as well as the vote on this amendment.

Mr. DAVIS. I think we had better have the yeas and nays on this question.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 25, nays 34; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alcorn, Bailey, Barnum, Bayard, Bogy, Cooper, Davis, Dennis, Eaton, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Hereford, Johnston, Jones of Florida, Kelly, Kernan, McCreery, McDonald, Maxey, Norwood, Ransom, Saulsbury, Stevenson, Whyte, and Withers—25.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Anthony, Blaine, Booth, Boutwell, Bruce, Burnside, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Cameron of Wisconsin, Chaffee, Christiancy, Clayton, Conkling, Conover, Cragin, Dawes, Ferry, Frelinghuysen, Hamlin, Harvey, Ingalls, Logan, Mitchell, Morrill, Oglesby, Paddock, Patterson, Robertson, Sargent, Sherman, Teller, Wadleigh, West, and Wright—34.

ABSENT—Messrs. Cockrell, Dorsey, Edmunds, Hamilton, Hitchcock, Howe, Jones of Nevada, McMillan, Merrimon, Morton, Randolph, Sharon, Spencer, Thurman, Wallace, and Windom—16.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

REPORTERS FOR UNITED STATES COURTS.

Mr. WRIGHT submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 4476) to provide for the appointment of an official short-hand reporter of the United States courts in and for the district of California, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to said bill, and that the bill as thus amended be further amended by adding to the second section thereof the following:

"Provided, That it shall be competent for the circuit or district court justice or judge to appoint the same person to the office of reporter in their several courts."

And that the two Houses agree herein.

GEORGE G. WRIGHT,
T. O. HOWE,
HENRY COOPER,
Conferees on the part of the Senate.

GEO. W. McCRARY,
P. D. WIGGINTON,
Conferees on the part of the House.

The report was concurred in.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. WRIGHT. I am directed by the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 4433) making appropriations for the payment of claims reported allowed by the commissioners of claims, under the act of Congress of March 3, 1871, to report it with amendments, and I give notice that immediately upon the disposition of the pending bill I shall call it up and ask action upon it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will lie on the table for the present.

Mr. CRAGIN, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 335) authorizing a settlement of the claim of the estate of the late Rear-Admiral John A. Dahlgren, reported it without amendment.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. GEORGE M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House insisted on its amendments to the bill (S. No. 731) to limit and fix the Signal-Service, agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. OTHO R. SINGLETON of Mississippi, Mr. JAMES BLOUNT of Georgia, and Mr. JAMES WILSON of Iowa, managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House had concurred in the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 4261) to provide for the sale of desert lands in certain States and Territories.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Army appropriation bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole. The question is on the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations as a substitute for the bill.

Mr. KERNAN. Mr. President, I am opposed to striking out the entire original bill as it came from the House, and inserting this substitute. I concur in the views expressed by the Senator from Delaware, [Mr. BAYARD.] I understand the Senator from Maine [Mr. BLAINE] to question our authority under the Constitution to do what is proposed to be done by the fifth section of the bill as it came from the House. I think on more reflection he will admit that we have the constitutional power to say as we do by the House bill that the money appropriated by this act shall not be expended for certain purposes. It is clearly within the constitutional power of Congress to disband the Army entirely, to refuse to appropriate any money for its support. Indeed, Mr. Justice Story in discussing in his Commentaries the subject of the Army and the objections that were made on account of the danger that it might be used to overthrow liberty, says clearly Congress has a right to refuse to appropriate money to maintain an army. Nay, he says that Congress may by law disband the Army. His language is quite distinct. This is it:

Congress may indeed by an act for this purpose, disband a standing army at any time; or vote the supplies only for one year, or for a shorter period. * * * The Army cannot go without supplies; it may be disbanded at the pleasure of the legislature; and it would be absolutely impossible for any President, against the will of the nation, to keep up a standing army in terrorem populi.—Story's Commentaries on the Constitution, sections 1188, 1189.

The remedy is with Congress if it is believed there is danger that the Army will be used by the President for an improper purpose. The same power that authorizes Congress to disband the Army entirely would give it the power constitutionally in its discretion, for good cause, to do as it does in the fifth section of this bill, declare that the money appropriated in this act shall not be applied to sustaining troops to do certain things. Therefore I think there is power to restrict the use of the money appropriated to maintain the Army and say that it shall not be expended to maintain it in doing certain things.

Mr. BLAINE. Does the Senator from New York maintain that the power of the Congress of the United States over the Army of the United States is absolute, or any more so than that of the Parliament of Great Britain over the British army?

Mr. KERNAN. Going back to the reign of William III, you will find an act of Parliament declaring that he should keep only a specified number of soldiers in Ireland.

Mr. BLAINE. There is no doubt about that; but did you ever find an act of Parliament that said the King should command the army in a certain way?

Mr. KERNAN. This act does not say that.

Mr. BLAINE. It says so precisely.

Mr. KERNAN. Story says, in so many words, that Congress can constitutionally disband the Army and refuse to appropriate any money for its support; and he says this is the safeguard of the people. Now, if you can disband it and refuse to appropriate money to maintain it to prevent its being used for an improper purpose, may you not appropriate money and declare that none of it shall be expended in employing the Army for certain purposes? This is a different thing entirely from attempting to regulate the exercise by the President of his constitutional power as Commander-in-Chief of the Army. There was a bill passed by the House in the days of the Kansas trouble in which it was provided that the Army should not be used in Kansas. Congress may refuse to appropriate any money to maintain the Army, fearing that it will be used for improper purposes, and certainly Congress may enact that money appropriated shall not be used to maintain the Army in doing certain things. It is a question of congressional discretion.

Mr. BLAINE. Will the Senator from New York, before he takes his seat, state what became of that restriction put on the Army bill in regard to Kansas?

Mr. KERNAN. I understand that the Houses differed about it and that it did not become law. I find the same power operated in other laws long ago. There is the law of 1812 which authorizes troops to be raised by the President, and it is provided that they shall act on the frontier as rangers, and they are to be disbanded if they are used for anything else. I believe there was a law during the Mexican war to raise certain troops to be used in that country, and it was provided they should not be brought back here and used.

But I am not seeking to discuss the matter except to say that Congress having the constitutional power to disband the Army, to refuse to appropriate a dollar for its support, may appropriate money for its support, and insert in the act a provision that none of the money shall be expended to maintain the Army in a particular service. This is all that is proposed by the fifth section of the bill as it was passed by the House.

Mr. WITHERS. I do not wish to discuss the bill under the five-minute rule. It would be impossible to do so, and for my part I wish simply to indicate my views by my vote against the proposition of the committee. I do not desire to delay the bill or consume the time of the Senate when it is now so precious. I have an opinion very decided and very strong, which I should like to express on a suitable occasion; but I do not think the occasion presents itself now.

Mr. DAVIS. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported from the Committee on Appropriations as a substitute.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SPENCER, (after having first voted in the affirmative.) As I see this is a party vote, I will withdraw my vote. I am paired on all party or political questions with the Senator from North Carolina, [Mr. MERRIMON.]

Mr. BOGY, (after having first voted in the negative.) I desire to withdraw my vote. I am paired with the Senator from Indiana, [Mr. MORTON.] I presume, if present, he would vote "yea," and I should vote "nay." I furthermore take this occasion to say that I ought not to have voted on the previous vote; but my vote made no difference on the result. I forgot at the time I voted that I was paired with the Senator from Indiana.

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 31, nays 23; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alcorn, Allison, Anthony, Blaine, Boutwell, Bruce, Burnside, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Cameron of Wisconsin, Chaffee, Christiancy, Clayton, Conkling, Conover, Dawes, Ferry, Hamlin, Harvey, Howe, Ingalls, Logan, McMillan, Mitchell, Morrill, Oglesby, Paddock, Patterson, Robertson, Teller, West, and Wright—31.

NAYS—Messrs. Bailey, Barnum, Bayard, Cockrell, Cooper, Davis, Dennis, Eaton, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Hereford, Johnston, Jones of Florida, Kelly, Kernan, McCreery, Maxey, Norwood, Ransom, Saulsbury, Stevenson, Whyte, and Withers—23.

ABSENT—Messrs. Bogy, Booth, Cragin, Dorsey, Edmunds, Frelinghuysen, Hamilton, Hitchcock, Jones of Nevada, McDonald, Merrimon, Morton, Randolph, Sargent, Sharon, Sherman, Spencer, Thurman, Wadleigh, Wallace, and Windom—21.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

FORT UNION MILITARY RESERVATION.

Mr. CHAFFEE. I move to take from the table House bill No. 4304. It is the same as Senate bill No. 1257.

The bill (H. R. No. 4304) to authorize the United States to secure a title to the Fort Union military and timber reservation in New Mexico was laid before the Senate and read twice.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move that that bill be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, which has already had under consideration precisely such a bill, and if my recollection serves me right has reported adversely upon it, or has agreed to an adverse report.

Mr. CHAFFEE. The Senator is mistaken.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. BURNSIDE] had charge of the bill, and I know it was not the sentiment of the Committee on Military Affairs that a bill of that character should pass this body.

Mr. BURNSIDE. The Senator from Missouri is quite right in everything except that there was no adverse report ever made; but if a report had been made it would have been adverse.

Mr. CHAFFEE. The Senators are entirely wrong about it. This bill has received the careful consideration of the House committee and has passed the House without opposition. The facts of the case are these: Fort Union is located upon a grant of land which has been patented to individuals, and all that this bill provides is that the owners shall convey this land to the United States and receive therefor an equal amount of single minimum land elsewhere. The proposition is favored by General Sherman, General Pope, the War Department, and the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and the passage of this bill will save the United States a large amount of money. I hope the bill may be passed. There certainly can be no objection to it. I have the House report here if gentleman would like to hear that read.

Mr. COCKRELL. I rise to a point of order on that bill. I cannot consent to its passing in the present form as it comes from the House, even if it has passed the House by the unanimous consent of every member of it. It is to give to certain parties a roving patent for sixty-odd thousand acres of land situated in New Mexico; a right to take that patent and locate it on any of the public lands in the United States, when that land there to-day, or the greater portion of it, is not worth five cents an acre.

Mr. BOGY. My colleague's statement is incorrect. It seems to me that the whole of the bill is to enable parties who own a Spanish grant which has been confirmed and which is a perfect title to-day——

Mr. CHAFFEE. And patented.

Mr. BOGY. And patented, but upon which, by mistake, the United States located a military reservation, having therefore no title at all to the reservation, to locate their grant elsewhere. Now the owners of this land propose, to the extent of the occupation of the military and the appurtenances, a few thousand acres, to take certificates of float. I never heard of the bill before, but that I understand to be the bill. It does not give these parties an acre of land but what they own already and which they own by patent. They own not only that which is not covered by the military reservation but they own the reserve itself by patent, a fee-simple title absolute, or I misunderstood the reading of the bill.

Mr. GORDON. I think my friend from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] is entirely mistaken in his opinion as to the effect of this measure. I am satisfied from the examination I have made of it that it is a most judicious thing for Congress to do. This Government has no title whatever to this property and never has had any title. It occupies lands belonging to an old Spanish grant, has erected buildings upon it, costing the Government a million or more of dollars. It has remained upon this land for twenty-four years; it has cut all the timber and all the grass upon it, and has never paid the owners of this property one iota for the occupation of the property for twenty-four years and without any title to it. Why sir, the proposition is perfectly unsupportable in reason or in morals that the Government of the United States has the right to locate upon the land of private individuals and occupy it for a quarter of a century without rent, without having one iota of title to it, and then, when the owners of the property come to Congress and ask Congress to give them as many acres elsewhere, they are assailed here with the charge of having a fraudulent claim presented to Congress.

Sir, this bill only seeks to give to these owners of this property the number of acres which they have owned for this great length of time and for which they have had not one dollar of remuneration, although used by the Government for the space of a quarter of a century. This measure is recommended not only by the General of the Army, but by the Land Office and by the entire Military Committee of the House, and it has passed the House after thorough investigation without a dissenting vote. It strikes me as not only a judicious thing for the Government to accept this proposition, but it is a most liberal proposition on the part of the owners of this land; for were they to go before the courts there is not a shadow of doubt that they could secure very large damages from the Government if the courts could grant any citizen justice for the use of his property as against the Government.

Mr. COCKRELL. I did not propose to go into the discussion of this bill. With all due deference to the distinguished Senator from Georgia, I think I know as much about this bill as he does, and I think

I have examined it as fully, and I think I have as great admiration for the generosity and kindness of the owners of this reservation to the General Government, and I appreciate their sympathy for the General Government and their desire not to mulct the General Government in an enormous amount of damages for the use of these barren mountains in New Mexico. I object, and I appeal as a point of order, if that does not settle the matter now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator has sufficiently expressed his objection to send the bill to a committee.

Mr. CHAFFEE. Let it go to the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

SOUTHERN CLAIMS COMMISSION.

Mr. WRIGHT. There is a little bill on the table, and I ask that the Chair lay it before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. No. 1128) to extend for two years the act establishing the board of commissioners of claims and the acts relating thereto.

The amendment was, at the end of the bill, to add:

SEC. 2. That the commissioners of claims shall not receive any evidence on behalf of any claimant or claimants for the allowance of any claim or claims unless such evidence shall have been taken, presented, and filed by the 10th day of March, 1878, except in rebuttal of evidence introduced on behalf of the Government, and all claims wherein the evidence of the claimant or claimants is not filed within the time herein limited shall be deemed to be barred forever thereafter.

Mr. WRIGHT. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

AWARDS OF CLAIMS COMMISSION.

Mr. WRIGHT. I now ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 4433) to make appropriations for claims reported by the commissioners of claims, and I will then yield to the Senator from Ohio, who wishes the floor.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is before the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WRIGHT. I now yield to the Senator from Ohio.

RESUMPTION OF SPECIE PAYMENTS.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask the Senate to proceed to act upon a bill to aid in the resumption of specie payments; the bill reported from the Committee on Finance some days ago containing but two simple provisions. I am requested by the Secretary of the Treasury, and by various telegrams from different parts of the country, to present this bill on the statement that if it be now passed it will pass the House of Representatives, and I trust meet with the general consent of both Houses and both parties, and become a law. I ask that the bill be read. I do not want to discuss it because I know if there is a real opposition to the bill it cannot pass, but I appeal to every Senotor to hear the provisions of the bill. They are very simple and plain, and I think it will be a very great thing for the public credit and public interests to have this bill passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator asks for the reading of the bill. It will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the bill (S. No. 1267) to aid resumption of specie payments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is before the Senate by unanimous consent as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BOGY. I am not very well prepared to speak to the bill, so many gentlemen were speaking to me when the Clerk was reading it; but, if I understand the bill correctly, I have very great objections to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator desire to have it read again?

Mr. BOGY. I am waiting for a copy of the bill. It seems to provide for an issue of 4 per cent. bonds to the amount of $100,000,000. I have not seen it before.

Mr. SHERMAN. While the Senator is looking over the bill I will explain it. This bill is in substance what was recommended by the President in his recent message. The first section, which is the main part of the bill, has passed the Senate at least four or five times within the last six or seven years. It authorizes the issue of bonds bearing 4 per cent. interest in exchange for United States notes, but not to exceed in the aggregate in any one year $25,000,000 a year, or in any one month $4,000,000. My own impression has been that the general features contained in this bill are also to be found in the resumption act; but capitalists and others who deal in public securities are very anxious to have the specific provision made in the law, so that there can be no question as to the terms of the law. That is all there is in the first section.

The second section of the bill provides that the aggregate amount of silver coin shall not exceed $80,000,000. Under the present law it cannot exceed $50,000,000. We have now $28,000,000 of silver coin out. It is feared that when we get to the limit of $50,000,000, by the absorption of our silver coin, probably by the exportation of some, there will not be enough out to answer the purposes of change, and that the people of this country may be inconvenienced in that way. This section provides for an enlargement of the limit from $50,000,000 to $80,000,000. That is all there is of it. This bill has been very carefully considered by the Committee on Finance, and we have recommended it nearly every year. I did not call it up sooner, simply because I was assured that the House of Representatives would not have time to act upon it, pending the presidential count. I am now assured by gentlemen of both political parties that the House will act upon it and accept it. If either House really is opposed to the bill, of course it cannot pass.

My own impression is that this bill will tend greatly to promote the public interest, and probably by the next session of Congress it will lead us nearer to the specie standard and aid in the ordinary resumption of specie payments by the time fixed by law.

I do not wish to discuss the bill, because the subject has been discussed so often.

Mr. BOGY. Mr. President, I regret that I have not had an opportunity to study this bill. I never saw it before; but it strikes me on hearing it read by the Clerk that it is very objectionable. It provides for an issue of $1,000,000 of 4 per cent. bonds. We have now on the market a loan of 4½ per cent. bonds and trying to dispose of them. According to my information, these 4½ per cent. bonds are worth in New York about 105 to 106 in greenbacks. If you issue this 4 per cent. loan, and authorize the exchange for greenbacks, you are absolutely disposing of your bonds at about ninety-five and a half to ninety-six cents on the dollar, gold being worth now a premium of from 4 to 5 per cent.; I think about 4½ per cent.

What will be the effect of this hasty loan on the market? It will destroy the other loan, which is now rated in the market at 106 cents in greenbacks, by virtually agreeing to take for these 4 per cents, 95 or 96 cents on the dollar in gold. It is a matter to be studied very seriously whether we should do this, and I have not the time now, nor has the Senate. I do not see that we can put upon the market a 4 per cent. loan in this way without affecting very seriously and detrimentally the 4½ per cent., which, as I have said, is now worth 106.

Another objection is that it is contraction, plain and simple, of $25,000,000 a year. It is nothing but contraction; not very rapid, but enough to be very destructive. The greenbacks will diminish annually $25,000,000. What will take the place of these greenbacks? No doubt it is contemplated that the same amount of paper will be issued by the national banks. Now we do know that the national banks have not been sufficiently profitable the last two or three years to invite capitalists to invest very largely in them. Something more has got to be done to make that system work as it ought to work, and I do not believe that the vacuum created by withdrawing the $25,000,000 a year of greenbacks would be filled by national-bank notes. If I am correct in this, this would be a measure of contraction extremely injurious to the whole country; and this at a time when the business of the country is very much prostrated. It certainly cannot be considered a measure of relief. It may lead to resumption, but it leads to this in a most painful and destructive manner. Of course if you cancel the greenbacks to the amount of $100,000,000 there will be that quantity less to redeem when resumption day comes; but you may cancel the greenbacks and put nothing in lieu of them. This the country is not in a condition to stand.

Then, with regard to the third section of the bill, which authorizes an issue of $80,000,000 of subsidiary coin, or $30,000,000 in addition to what is now authorized, I am entirely opposed to that. We have already provided for an issue of $50,000,000 of subsidiary coin. The amount is sufficient for the wants of this nation. It is true we have only issued $28,000,000 to $29,000,000 of what is provided for, but the whole amount will be issued some time during this year. Now, to gorge this country with $80,000,000 of subsidiary coin, debased in weight as this coin is, being only 12½ grams, or 192 grains per half dollar, and it not being a legal tender, if you increase the quantity beyond the wants of the country it will be depreciated. The fractional currency now of ten cents, fifteen cents, and fifty cents is a legal tender without limit; but the fractional currency is to be withdrawn and its place filled with a coin debased in weight, and which is not a legal tender. No man could pay his rent with it, no person could do anything with it, and the consequence would be, as already said, great depreciation. Therefore I object to this section.

Again, to authorize this additional issue of silver in this manner would have an effect upon the price of bullion, which should not be done at this time.

It seems to me (and I say it with all possible respect to my distinguished friend from Ohio, who by the bye I understand is very soon to be at the head of the Treasury Department) that this bill is crude, and has not been sufficiently thought of; and as he is to occupy that very high position, it appears to me that he may not do his fame full justice in placing before us a bill of this kind, a measure of contraction, and which will affect the value of the present loan, and which increases the quantity of silver coin of a debased character. It is objectionable in every way. A measure of contraction at this time is not desired by the country, slow though it may be. Nor do we need any more subsidiary coin. Sir, I think it would be better under the present condition of things to stop the coinage of the subsidiary coin and put the power of all our mints upon the coinage of silver dollars of 399.9 grains, the relation of 15½ to 1. That would be, in my judgment, the part of wisdom.

To resume, you have got to increase your coin basis, let that be gold or silver or gold and silver; and whenever you attempt to resume by a measure of contraction you go through a painful ordeal. It is not the history of other countries when they have attempted to resume to accomplish it by contraction. If you pass this bill, although I repeat you may resume, but in doing so you will have to pass over the dead carcasses of all the business men of the country.

We ought not to contract, because contraction will increase the business paralysis of the country, and we ought not to augment our subsidiary coin at this time. When we issue silver it should be the silver dollar of 399.9 grains. Issue silver and make it a legal tender, with free coinage, and the silver dollar will be equal to a gold dollar.

Now, I desire to say to my friend from Ohio that I am seeking information. The bill strikes me as being objectionable, without having had much time to reflect upon it.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President, of course this bill cannot pass if it is to encounter any long discussion. It is a bill that received almost the unanimous support of the Committee on Finance. I do not think that the objections presented by the Senator from Missouri are well founded. The first named by him is that this measure will interfere with the further negotiation of our 4½ per cent. loan. Why, the difference between this and the 4½ per cent. loan is a half per cent. annual interest in favor of the loan that remains to be issued, and of course that makes the difference in the value of the two, and nothing more is needed to preserve the public favor towards the 4½ per cents.

The next point presented by the Senator from Missouri is that this is to cause a contraction. The contraction already exists. These legal-tender notes are held as reserves in banks to a greater amount than can possibly be used at the present time, and have been since 1873 almost continuously. Therefore it will not be a contraction. Besides that, I hold to the doctrine that you cannot expect to issue coin without first displacing paper. We must first get rid of some portion of our paper before its place can be supplied and filled with coin. Therefore I do not apprehend that there is to be any contraction.

Again, the Senator from Missouri objects to the last clause, which provides that the Secretary of the Treasury may exchange subsidiary coin for United States notes. That will not be done the moment the supply necessary for the wants of the country has been supplied. You cannot induce men to part with paper for subsidiary coin that they do not want. It strikes me that the objections made by the Senator from Missouri are entirely untenable. This bill is merely to facilitate and bridge over the time between this and the day of resumption. I think it would greatly facilitate the resumption act, although I confess that I am of the firm belief that the existing law is amply sufficient to enable any competent Secretary of the Treasury to bring about resumption, and that without distress to the country; but this certainly will not aggravate the toil and distress of bringing resumption about, but will greatly facilitate it.

So far as any expression that I have heard from members of both the Senate and the House, of all parties, it has been conceded that this measure would be a beneficent one. I hope that it may receive the favor of the Senate.

Mr. COCKRELL. I supposed from the remarks made by my colleague that the Senator from Ohio would give some explanation of the bill. Why the necessity of attempting to pass a bill of this importance just on the heel of the session, at the last and dying hours of the Forty-fourth Congress?

Mr. SHERMAN. I stated exactly the reasons. When this bill was reported, and reported with great unanimity, during the pendency of the electoral count, we felt that it was hardly worth while to try to pass it. Now I understand (and whether I am correct or not can soon be tested) from gentlemen of both political parties that there is an earnest desire on their part to pass the bill. It was recommended by the President of the United States sometime since, and was generally agreed to. In substance, the first section has passed the Senate four or five times and has been defeated in the House for fear of its operation in contracting the currency, and we have so modified it that I do not think it could possibly contract the currency to any considerable extent, because the banks can restore any currency needed, and it would greatly aid us in approaching to the par of specie.

I have received to-day a telegram from the Department calling attention to other telegrams from the State of New York, showing the condition of the money market to be so favorable that now we can probably sell a portion of these bonds at par in currency. It does not interfere at all with the 4½ per cent. loan for this reason: The 4½ per cent. loan is a fifteen-year loan, redeemable in thirty years. This is a thirty-year loan bearing 4 per cent. In the particular state of the money market now, with the large amount of money lying idle, it is probable that a long bond for thirty years at 4 per cent. will approach very near, within 5 or 6 per cent. at least, the value of 4½ per cent. fifteen-year bonds. My friend from Missouri [Mr. BOGY] knows the importance of time in the question of a loan. It is plainly manifest that it is the interest of the people of the United States to avail themselves of the present condition of the money market to pursue this funding system to such an extent as to enable us to resume specie payments. That is what is proposed to be done under this bill. Under the law for the resumption of specie payments the Secretary of the Treasury might to-day or to-morrow sell bonds bearing a higher rate of interest than these, but it would not be politic or wise for him to do it; and if he can sell 4 per cent. bonds to accomplish this purpose, how much better it is to save one-half of 1 per cent. I do not think there is in the country any general difference of opinion in regard to this bill. When the bill was reported, indeed when the message of the President was sent in and the bill was printed, it met with almost universal favor throughout the United States.

As for the second section, it is nothing but an enlargement of the amount of silver coin. The silver coin is largely being absorbed, so that we fear that the amount fixed last session, $50,000,000, will not be sufficient to supply change, because the silver is held and hoarded more, a good deal, than paper money. Some of it no doubt is melted down and destroyed and some exported, so that it requires a larger amount of silver coin to answer for change than it would of paper money.

It is proposed simply to allow the Secretary of the Treasury at his discretion to increase the amount, if demanded by the people, not to exceed $80,000,000. As a matter of course, if the people do not want this silver change they will not ask for it. They have to take it at par in greenbacks. If they ask for it they ought to have it, and we ought not to adjourn Congress leaving matters in such a condition that there may be a scarcity of change. The fractional currency is disappearing; probably the great body of that which existed has disappeared already; and if you are left now to rely and depend solely upon $50,000,000 of silver change, you might perchance have such a dearth of it as to create inconvenience among the people. This simply authorizes, on the demand of the people, for exchange of United States notes the issue of a larger amount of silver subsidiary coin.

There is nothing new about it, nothing that has not been discussed over and over and over again. I see no necessity for further discussion now. My friend from Missouri knows all about the bill. It simply revives and continues in operation to this extent the funding act of 1870, but provides for the issue of 4 per cent. instead of 4½ per cent bonds. In every stage of the operation of the law it must be for the benefit of the people of the United States.

Mr. BOGY. I cannot consent to the issuing of $80,000,000 of debased silver coin in this country which is not at the same time made a legal tender. My friend from Ohio says if the people do not want this money they will not take it. They will have no option. They will have no other but this debased silver coin. The greenbacks by the operation of this bill will disappear, the fractional currency will all have disappeared, and the people will have $80,000,000 of silver coin debased in weight and not a legal tender. How will the poor people get along in paying their rents or in complying with any obligation which is to be complied with under the forms of law? No man can pay an execution of $10; no person can pay anything with it. It would be perfectly disastrous to the country.

My friend speaks of change getting scarce unless the amount authorized be greater. We have already provided by an issue of $50,000,000, a sufficient amount for this country at the present time. Certainly I do not want to issue $80,000,000 of silver money and not make it a legal tender, and it ought not to be made a legal tender, because it is not of the proper weight.

Mr. EATON. Mr. President, on general principles I am in favor of a bill of this character; but this does not strike me very favorably. I do not like the bill introduced. In my judgment, bonds having thirty years to run, with interest payable in coin, sold in the open market, in the present condition of the money market to-day would save the United States from 3 to 5 per cent. I have no doubt about it; and if the Senator from Ohio would examine into this matter, it strikes me that he would make such amendments to this bill as would meet with the general approval of the Senate.

I admit that there is a plethora of money to-day. I say "plethora," because I know there are hundreds of millions of dollars seeking investment. This is the very best investment in the world; gold-interest-bearing bonds of the United States having not less than thirty years to run will be sought for; and the person who has $100,000 in greenbacks unoccupied and lying idle, will be glad to gobble up those bonds with his greenbacks at 96 or 97 per cent. Why not use the money thus saved for the benefit of the Government of the United States? It strikes me that that is what we ought to do. I have no fear of the contraction that so alarms the honorable Senator from Missouri.

Mr. HARVEY. Mr. President, I cannot give my vote for this bill, but I do not wish to detain the Senate by making a lengthy speech. I will only state in a few words some of the reasons why I cannot support it.

In the first place, it is, I think, a measure of contraction. The Senator from Ohio a few minutes ago said that the so-called resumption law made some provisions looking to this result. I see very plainly a feature in this bill that cannot be found in the resumption bill; I mean that clause in this providing for the cancellation and destruction of the legal-tender notes. Now, I understood the bill for the resumption of specie payments to have had for its object the making of the legal-tenders equal in value to coin, silver, and gold. With that view it was supported, not to destroy the greenback but to make it more valuable.

Now the value of legal-tender notes approaches already under that legislation and under the existing condition of things a value so nearly equivalent to the value of coin, that it must be evident to every gentleman that without any measure of contraction, without changing into bonds any portion of our non-interest-bearing debt by the 1st of January, 1879, the time fixed in the resumption act for the redemption, not the retiring and destruction, of the legal-tenders, their value will have so appreciated that there will be no necessity for any such legislation as that had in view in this bill.

Therefore, without continuing any further, I feel that I have given reason enough to justify my vote against the bill. I supported the resumption act and have sustained it to my cost; but I do not propose to support any legislation looking to a contraction of the currency or to changing in any manner the method provided in that act for the redemption of the legal-tender notes to make them equivalent in value to coin. I am ready to stand by that and I propose to do it, but not to do anything further in that direction than public interest and honor requires.

Mr. MAXEY. Mr. President, I am as decidedly in favor of the resumption of specie payments as any Senator on the floor or any gentleman in the country, but I am as earnestly opposed to any hasty legislation on a measure of so much consequence as this. A financial measure should be thoroughly discussed and thoroughly understood. We have been engaged here for weeks past, and our whole time occupied about other affairs, and this is the last day of the session, and it is impossible to discuss this bill so as to have it understandingly before the Senate. While I may not be opposed to its provisions, I do not understand it sufficiently to say affirmatively that it ought to pass. Therefore I think it would be better to have the matter deferred till the next session of Congress, when it can be thoroughly discussed and thoroughly understood. In the mean time the currency is not suffering; the condition of the greenback is every day getting better and better; gold is now less than 105; and therefore I can see now no special necessity for pressing a measure of this kind on the Senate at the very heel of this excited session, when the minds of Senators have been entirely occupied with other matters.

Mr. COCKRELL. I am unwilling to proceed with the consideration of this bill now. A great many Senators have had no time to make a thorough investigation of the bill, and it is not such a bill as we ought to vote upon without due consideration. I hope that by the meeting of the next Congress, the Forty-fifth Congress, in December, legislation may be unnecessary. Financial matters are regulating themselves very happily, and if we let them alone specie resumption will come of itself. The business interests of the country will bring about the resumption of specie payments.

Now I move that this bill be postponed until the first Wednesday in December next.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri moves that the bill be postponed until the first Wednesday in December.

Mr. BOGY and Mr. MORRILL called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 25, nays 24; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alcorn, Bailey, Bogy, Booth, Cockrell, Conover, Davis, Dennis, Ferry, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Harvey, Hereford, Ingalls, Johnston, McCreery, Maxey, Norwood, Patterson, Ransom, Stevenson, Teller, Wallace, Withers, and Wright—25.

FORT UNION RESERVATION.

Mr. GORDON. The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 4304) to authorize the United States to secure a title to the Fort Union military and timber reservation in New Mexico, have had the same under consideration and instructed me to report that they adopt the report of the House Committee on Military Affairs on this bill, and recommend the passage of the bill as a measure of interest to the Government. I ask for the immediate consideration of the bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. I object, and move that the report and bill be printed and placed on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill goes over.

FORTIFICATION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WINDOM submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same, with an amendment striking out the words "machine guns" in line 9 of the bill and the Senate agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 2, and agree to an amendment as follows:

On line 12 of the bill, after the word "dollars," add the following: "And for Gatling or other machine guns, $25,000."

And the House agree to the same.

WM. WINDOM,
JOHN A. LOGAN,
H. G. DAVIS,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

EUGENE HALE,
O. R. SINGLETON,
HIESTER CLYMER,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was concurred in.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SARGENT submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 4616) making appropriations for the naval service for the year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 6 and 10.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 8, and 11; and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same, with an amendment striking out the sum therein named and inserting in lieu thereof "$6,600,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3, and agree to the same, with an amendment adding at the end of the paragraph the following:

Provided, That $100,000 of the above sum shall be available for and be expended by the Bureau of Provisions and Clothing, for provisions; which sum shall be immediately available.

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its agreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 4, and agree to the same, with an amendment striking out the sum named therein and inserting in lieu thereof "$65,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5, and agree to the same, with an amendment striking out the sum named therein and inserting in lieu thereof "$20,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 7, and agree to the same, with an amendment striking out the sum named therein and inserting in lieu thereof "$1,750,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 9, and agree to the same, with an amendment striking out the sum therein named and inserting in lieu thereof "$942,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

A. A. SARGENT,
GEO. S. BOUTWELL,
R. E. WITHERS,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

JAMES H. BLOUNT,
JOHN T. HARRIS,
EUGENE HALE,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. SARGENT. The naval bill, as this report makes it, is substantially the same that it was last year, except that about $850,000 more is appropriated for all the Navy. I give notice that this, nevertheless, will leave a deficiency for the next fiscal year which will have to be supplied by a deficiency bill; but it being the amount, and all the amount, that the House conferees were willing to allow upon the principle which I stated yesterday with reference to the deficiency bill, I accept it.

I will state further in reference to some other items, and notably as to the appropriations for the Bureau of Construction and Repair and the Bureau of Steam-Engineering, that I am not satisfied with the report. The amount appropriated is entirely inadequate for the needs of the service. I move, however, the adoption of the report.

The motion was agreed to.

AWARDS OF CLAIMS COMMISSION.

Mr. WRIGHT. I now ask that House bill No. 4433, which was taken up and laid aside temporarily to give way to the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. SHERMAN,] be considered.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 4433) making appropriations for the payment of claims reported allowed by the commissioners of claims under the act of Congress of March 3, 1871.

Mr. WRIGHT. I suggest that we follow the same course with this bill that we have pursued with regard to other appropriation bills, and that the Clerk be only required to read the amendments. There are a few unimportant amendments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments will be read simply, if there be no objection.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments.

RECESS.

Mr. WINDOM. I ask consent of the Senate to move that a recess be taken at five o'clock until half past seven.

Mr. SARGENT and others. You had better say eight.

Mr. WINDOM. Very well; I move that the Senate take a recess from five until eight o'clock this evening.

The motion was agreed to.

THEODORE MOSHER, JR.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 4296) to authorize the appointment of a sergeant in the Signal Corps as a second lieutenant in the Army.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to the consideration of the bill. It authorizes the President to appoint and, by and with the consent of the Senate, to commission Theodore Mosher, jr., sergeant in the Signal Service of the United States, to be a second lieutenant in the Army, to fill any existing vacancy in any regiment, notwithstanding the provisions of section 1218, Revised Regulations; but he shall be duly found and deemed by the President to be otherwise qualified and eligible for such appointment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that this provision has been made in a conference report.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I understand it has not.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN N. HALL.

Mr. McMILLAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 3833) for the relief of John N. Hall. The bill has passed the House of Representatives, and comes here with a report made by the House committee, stating the facts, and also a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, which I will ask to have read if it is desired.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to adjust and settle the claims of John N. Hall, late collector of internal revenue in and for the first district of Minnesota, for moneys paid to deputy collectors by him for services rendered during the months of July, August, September, and October, 1866, and for clerk-hire in his office as such collector during the quarter ending September 30, 1866, and for moneys paid by him for hire of clerks in his office in making out the accounts and return thereof between October 1, 1866, and June 30, 1867.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DISABILITY BILLS.

Mr. HOWE. I have two bills here, and I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to reconsider the vote by which they were postponed indefinitely. They were reported adversely by the chairman of the Judicary Committee some days since upon the understanding that the parties who are petitioners to have their disabilities removed were defaulters. It turns out that the committee were misinformed, and the chairman of the committee, who is now sick and is not here, authorized me to have this done.

Mr. STEVENSON. What are the bills?

Mr. HOWE. One is a bill to remove the political disabilities of George Watson Carr, of Virginia, and the other to remove the political disabilities of Joel S. Kennard, of Georgia. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to reconsider the vote by which those two bills were postponed indefinitely.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. HOWE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 3892) to remove the political disabilities of George Watson Carr, a citizen of the State of Virginia.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed; two-thirds of the Senators present voting in favor thereof.

Mr. HOWE. I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 4475) removing the political disabilities of Joel S. Kennard, of Savannah, Georgia.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed; two-thirds of the Senators present voting in favor thereof.

Mr. HOWE. I now report from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the petition of John M. Haden, of Galveston, Texas, praying for removal of political disabilities, a bill to remove his political disabilities. I should like to have the Senate act upon it at the present time if there is no objection.

By unanimous consent, the bill (S. No. 1292) to remove the political disabilities of John M. Haden, of Galveston, Texas, was read three times, and passed; two-thirds of the Senators present voting in favor thereof.

Mr. HOWE. I am also directed by the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the petition of Theophilus H. Holmes, of Fayetteville, North Carolina, praying for the removal of his political disabilities, to report a bill for his relief. I ask the present consideration of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the bill (S. No. 1293) to remove the political disabilities of Theophilus H. Holmes, of North Carolina, was read three times, and passed; two-thirds of the Senators present voting in favor thereof.

POST-ROUTE BILL.

Mr. HAMLIN. I now ask that the Senate take up the report of the committee of conference on the post-route bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read if there be no objection.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 3628) establishing post-roads having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, to their respective Houses as follows:

The House agree to recede from their disagreement to section 8, and agree to the same, with an amendment that said section be amended by striking out the words "place and stead," and insert in place thereof "in the name;" and the Senate agree to the same.

The Senate recede from its disagreement to sections 5 and 7 of said amendments.

The House recede from its disagreement to sections 9, 10, 11, and 12.

The House recede from its disagreement to section 13, and agree to the same, with an amendment striking out all of the section after the word "mail" in the fifth line, and insert: "all public documents printed by order of Congress, and the name of each Senator, Representative, Delegate, Secretary of the Senate, and Clerk of the Houe shall be written theron, with the proper designation of the office he holds; and the provisions of this section shall apply to each of the persons named therein until the 1st day of December following the expiration of their respective terms of office;" and the Senate agree to the same.

The House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate amending the title of the bill.

The conferees of the two Houses, being unable to agree to sections 2, 3, 4, and 6, disagree to the same, and recommend to their respective Houses a separate vote upon the following proposition, to wit:

To strike out said sections and insert the following:

"The sum of $75,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated out of any unexpended balances made for the support of the Post-Office Department for the current year, to enable the Postmaster-General to obtain proper facilities from the great trunk lines of railroads for railway postal service during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878."

Said conferees further agree and recommend that the bill be amended by adding an additional section establishing certain new post-routes according to schedule hereto attached marked "A."

H. HAMLIN,
H. G. DAVIS,
Conferees on the part of the Senate.
JOHN B. CLARK, JR.,
J. G. CANNON,
Conferees on the part of the House.

Mr. HAMLIN. I will say that this conference report enables the two Houses to agree upon the whole bill with the exception of the sections which are there named, to wit, 2, 3, 4, and 6, which sections provided for additional fast-mail service. Those sections were incorporated in the bill during the last session of Congress. A commission was subsequently organized to investigate the railway service, and while that commission was discharging its duty it was deemed unwise to make an appropriation for fast mails; but it was deemed wise on the part of the committee of the Senate to make appropriation for additional post-offices on the railroads, so that the mail could be distributed along the route, thus facilitating the delivery of the mails to regions beyond Saint Louis and beyond New York some twenty-four hours. However, the committee of conference on the part of the House would not agree with the Senate to make that amendment. Subsequently it was recommended that a separate vote be taken in each branch upon that proposition. The House have voted, and they have voted against the proposition to allow the Department $75,000 out of the moneys already appropriated and unexpended, for that purpose. It was the object of the committee of conference to get a vote of the House upon that distinct proposition. I think I may say it was the understanding of the committee of conference that if the House would not agree to the amendment then at a subsequent conference the Senate would agree to abandon it. Now, if we insist upon our former vote it would lead to an additional conference. If we follow the direct line recommended by the committee of conference it would require an additional conference to effect that, instead of which I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to make a motion that the Senate recede from its vote on sections 2, 3, 4, and 6, the sections named, and agree to the passage of the bill. The motion that the Senate recede will supersede the motion to insist upon a new committee of conference, and so much time will be saved.

I want to say that I have labored long and hard to accomplish a result than which none can be more just to all the people of the country, and particularly to those who had most occasion to use the mail routes and who contributed most largely to its revenue. I regret to find myself in a position at this time to abandon that which I know is eminently just and right, but an additional conference would not save it, and the motion which I make is simply a saving of time. I therefore move that the Senate recede from its disagreement and concur in the passage of the bill with those sections omitted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine moves that the Senate recede from the amendments which he has stated and agree to the report of the committee of conference.

The motion was agreed to.

SARAH E. GARLAND AND FRANK M. HOPPIN.

Mr. OGLESBY. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of a bill of very little importance to the Senate, but of a great deal of importance to Sarah E. Garland and Frank M. Hoppin. It directs $338 to be paid out of the Treasury to them. The Committee on Claims have passed upon it and recommend the passage of the bill. I simply ask that it be disposed of.

Mr. COCKRELL. I hope the bill will pass. It has been passed upon by the Committee on Claims.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 515) for the relief of Sarah E. Garland and Frank M. Hoppin. It authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Austin M. Garland, for the use and benefit of Sarah E. Garland and Frank M. Hoppin, $337.82, being the amount of succession tax erroneously paid by them to the collector of the eighth district of Illinois.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LAW OF DOWER.

Mr. WRIGHT submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill from the House of Representatives No. 2043 entitled "An act to improve the law in relation to dower in the District of Columbia," after a full and free conference, beg leave to report as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate; and agree to the same.

GEORGE G. WRIGHT,
J. W. STEVENSON,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
WM. LAWRENCE,
WM. P. LYNDE,
SCOTT LORD,
Managers on the part of the House of Representatives.

The report was concurred in.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. ANTHONY. I move that the time for taking the recess be extended ten minutes, and I will then move an executive session.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS. I wish to call up Senate bill No. 1072, in order to leave it as the unfinished business.

Mr. WITHERS. I object to the consideration of that bill.

Mr. ANTHONY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After seven minutes spent in executive session the doors were re-opened, and (at five o'clock and two minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until eight o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The Senate re-assembled at eight o'clock p. m.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 2803) to provide that all pensions on account of death, wounds received, or disease contracted in the service of the United States since March 4, 1861, which have been granted, or which shall hereafter be granted on application filed previous to January, 1880, shall commence from the date of death or discharge, and for the payment of the arrears of pension, was read twice by its title.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Pensions, if there be no objection.

Mr. INGALLS. The committee having reported on that subject, I move that the bill lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Immediately before the recess the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. DAVIS] moved the consideration of a bill, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the bill (S. No. 1072) making an appropriation for continuing the improvement of the Monongahela River, in the States of West Virginia and Pensylvania, by its title.

Mr. DAVIS. I see there is a very thin Senate and I will not ask the consideration of the bill until a few more Senators at least get here. Ithink it would be wrong to consider it now.

Mr. ANTHONY. I wish to call up the resolution to print additional copies of the report of the Committee on Privileges and Elections in the Oregon electoral case.

Mr. COCKRELL. It may be very painful to Senators, but I do not think the seven or eight who are here should undertake to do business for seventy-six.

If the business is not of sufficient importance to draw the presence of Senators here it is not of sufficient importance to pass this body. I protest against the transaction of any business until there is a quorum here.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll of the Senate.

The Secretary called the roll of Senators; and twenty-two Senators answered to their names.

After some little delay, sixteen additional Senators having entered the Chamber, the President pro tempore announced that a quorum was present.

MONONGAHELA RIVER IMPROVEMENT.

Mr. DAVIS. I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 1072) making an appropriation for continuing the improvement of the Monongahela River, in the States of West Virginia and Pennsylvania.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It appropriates $150,000, to be expended, under the direction of the Secretary of War, for continuing the improvement of the Monongahela River between Pittsburgh, in the State of Pennsylvania, and Fairmont, in the State of West Virginia.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce, with an amendment to strike out "one hundred and fifty" and insert "ten" before "thousand;" so as to read:

That the sum of $10,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, &c.

Mr. DAVIS. I desire to make a short statement to the Senate. I regret that the Senator from New York, [Mr. CONKLING,] who is chairman of the Committee on Commerce, is not in his seat. The reason of the present appropriation is because there is an unfinished lock and dam on the river, which will cost about $10,000, and no use whatever can be made of the money already expended until this additional sum of $10,000 is appropriated. It is manifest that the river and harbor bill will fail, or I should not have called up this bill, which I introduced some time ago. The bill appropriates $10,000 for the completion of this lock, and the object is, as is plainly seen, to have that lock constructed so that the appropriation heretofore made, which was large, can be used.

Mr. DAWES. I do not know that I heard the Senator distinctly; I am afraid I misunderstood him. Am I to understand that the Senator from West Virginia proposes to reduce the appropriation in the bill?

Mr. DAVIS. The fact is that there is an unfinished lock on the Monongahela River which empties into the Ohio, as we all know, at Pittsburgh. Ten thousand dollars, which is the sum reported by the engineer department, will finish that lock and dam and put it into use.

Mr. DAWES. What surprised me was that we should find anybody proposing to reduce an appropriation in a river and harbor bill. I do not know that I understood the Senator; but is that true?

Mr. DAVIS. For once the Senator has found a man who is willing to do that.

Mr. EATON. I should like to ask the Senator from West Virginia what has become of the river and harbor bill?

Mr. DAVIS. The river and harbor bill, as I understand—I am not fully aware of the facts—is still in the House. It certainly has not come to the Senate, and it is believed by those having charge of it that it will not reach here. The object of this bill is to complete an unfinished lock which it will need $10,000 to do.

Mr. EATON. I certainly am opposed to taking up and completing an unfinished lock in this river in West Virginia, if works of national moment are to go by. Here is the great work in New York Harbor, in which the whole commerce of the world is interested. Is that to go by and this little appropriation pass here specially? I am opposed to it. I hope it will not receive any favor at the hands of the Senate. If that entire bill is to go by let this go by.

Mr. McMILLAN. May I ask the Senator from West Virginia if there has been a report from the Committee on Commerce upon this bill.

Mr. DAVIS. A majority of the committee, I believe all the members except the Senator from Minnesota, [Mr. McMILLAN,] were consulted. The chairman was consulted; he did not finally give his full consent to it, but the other members of the committee did. At the time that I saw the members of the Committee on Commerce, which was this morning, the Senator from Minnesota was not in the Senate, or I should have asked him. It comes with the recommendation, I believe, of all the members of the committee except the Senator from Minnesota, who was not here at the time, and the Senator from New York, who said he would make no objection; but he did not give his consent.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, this is the most extraordinary river and harbor bill that I have ever seen yet in this body, and how in the name of common sense my friend from West Virginia succeeded in getting it reported from the Committee on Commerce is more than I can tell.

Mr. INGALLS. Was this bill reported from the Committee on Commerce?

Mr. MITCHELL. Yes; it appears to have been reported from the Committee on Commerce, and that, too, by the honorable Senator from West Virginia. The heading of the bill reads in this way:

[Senate bill No. 1072.]

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, December 12, 1876.

Mr. DAVIS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to bring in the following bill; which was read twice, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. INGALLS. That does not state that the bill was reported.

Mr. MITCHELL. I do not know that it has been reported at all.

Mr. DAVIS. I see that the Senator from Oregon wants to have a little sport over this bill. I see from his eyes that that is what he means.

Mr. MITCHELL. I am in dead earnest.

Mr. DAVIS. I would say, for his advantage as well as of the Senate, that the Senator from Minnesota just interrogated me upon that point, and I thought I answered him as correctly as I knew how. The bill was reported by a majority of the committee; by all except two probably of that committee; not in the regular way, but I was authorized to report it.

Mr. MITCHELL. It may be a very meritorious river and harbor bill, but it occurs to me that it needs amendment.

Mr. DAVIS. O, certainly; I have offered an amendment to it myself, to strike out "one hundred and fifty" and to insert "ten," as

I understand that $10,000 will complete an unfinished lock and put in use a river in which Pittsburg, it is true, is more interested than the State I in part represent; but the lock happens to be located in the State of West Virginia.

Mr. MITCHELL. Then I understand from the Senator from West Virginia that the whole amount appropriated by this bill, as amended by him, is $10,000.

Mr. DAVIS. That is all. The amount of the appropriation is so small that I hope the Senator from Oregon will not talk further upon it, but will let the bill pass.

Mr. MITCHELL. I know my friend from West Virginia is a very modest man; but the fact that he has presented this bill at this time and seriously urges its passage leads me to believe that he is not so modest as I thought he was. Now, the idea of the Senator from West Virginia coming in here, at the eleventh hour, when no river and harbor bill has been reported from the House, or even from a committee of the House, I believe, and undertaking to slip through a little one-horse river and harbor bill for the benefit of a river in West Virginia, when great public improvements, as stated by the Senator from Connecticut, [Mr. EATON,] such as the Columbia River and others that I might refer to, are to have the go-by——

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon is entitled to the floor. Does he yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. MITCHELL. I yield to the Senator for a question.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I can stand almost any rub that the Senator chooses to give me, particularly when I want to accomplish my object, which in this case is to pass this little bill; but when the Senator talks about slipping through, I want to remind the Senator——

Mr. MITCHELL. I did not mean anything offensive to the Senator.

Mr. DAVIS. The Senator is so in the habit of slipping things through the Senate that he now thinks, after having got his matters through, this is also slipping through.

Mr. MITCHELL. No, this is not through yet; and if this river and harbor bill is to pass at all, I desire that the text should be perfected, and that it should be so amended as to be respectable, at least.

Mr. DAVIS. To include Oregon?

Mr. MITCHELL. And include some other great works as well as the one mentioned in this particular bill. The Senator from West Virginia talks about unfinished locks; he knows that there are unfinished locks on the Columbia River, and that an appropriation of $90,000 was made at the last session for the construction of these locks. That money has been expended, but the locks are not completed, and I scarcely think that the gentleman from West Virginia would, in seriousness, get up here and urge the passage of a special bill to improve his little one-horse river in West Virginia, and give the go-by to a great river like the Columbia, and all the other great rivers and harbors throughout the country.

I do not wish to amend the bill, but, if it is to be pressed, then I propose to offer an amendment something like this:

That the sum of $300,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, to continue the construction of canals and locks at the cascades of the Columbia River.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. Will the Senator from Oregon allow me to inquire whether it would be in order to add, by way of amendment, every other item of the river and harbor bill to the bill proposed by the Senator from West Virginia? If it will, perhaps that might be a practical mode of getting through with the bill.

Mr. MITCHELL. Certainly it will.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. I only suggest that, if he will accept that I shall not oppose his motion.

Mr. DAVIS. If other Senators have forgotten or, from some cause best known to themselves, have not arranged or got their bills in a shape to come properly before the Senate, for the amounts they desire to have appropriated for rivers and harbors in their States, it is not my fault. I hope that Senators now will not object to this small appropriation. I do not want to take up the time of the Senate in discussing it. It is meritorious; and I hope that Senators will not object to it from this fact: that probably this is the only bill that can be now offered under the rules of the Senate. I take it that the Committee on Commerce has not reported any other. I have not heard of any other.

Now, sir, if, from any cause whatever, I have been a little more industrious than some of my friends, I hope they will not take offense of that and defeat the only small appropriation that everybody who knows anything about it knows is necessary. I was disposed to run along in a joking way to some extent with my friend from Oregon, but I know he is not serious when he wants to cause the small amount I have asked for to be defeated. I hope he will withdraw all opposition and let the bill pass.

Mr. EATON. I do not quite like the remark which fell from my friend from West Virginia. He seems to intimate that other Senators have forgotten their duty, or, if they have not forgotten it, that they have been less urgent in carrying out the views of their constituents than he. Now, I had supposed the true course was that, when great public improvements were necessary, the proper committee should entertain the views of all the various Senators and take into consideration all great matters pertaining to river and harbor improvements, and then report fully. My State is as deeply interested in such improvements as any State in this Union, small though it may be. From her waters into New York every day of the three hundred and sixty-five days of the year there go by steamers a tonnage of 20,000 tons burden. But a great work which belongs not to Connecticut and New York alone, not to Connecticut, Massachusetts, and Rhode Island alone, but to the entire commercial world, is forgotten, and $10,000 must go out of the people's money to take care of a little river in West Virginia. Upon my word, Mr. President, I admire the talent of my friend from West Virginia, and if we could get rid of a river and harbor bill for this entire country for $10,000, we should do very well.

Mr. DAVIS. I agree with my friend from Connecticut, and I hope we shall get rid of this bill as quick as we can.

Mr. EATON. I will try to get rid of it. If there is to be no river and harbor bill, I move the postponement of this bill until the first Monday in December.

Mr. MITCHELL. I second the motion.

Mr. DAVIS. I believe I have a right to say a word upon that motion. My two friends each talk of the Monongahela River as a little river. Neither of them means that it is a small stream when he refers to it as a little river. We know that the Monongahela River is one of the principal rivers in this country; of course it is not the principal river, but it is one of them; and it would be economy on the part of the Government to complete the lock and dam that is now partly completed, and it will have to go over another year if this small amount of $10,000 is not appropriated. I do not think it makes any difference to Senators, and I do not see why they specially object to this appropriation because other improvements are not in the same condition. If the river and harbor bill comes here, I say to my friends frankly that I am willing to join with them and help them, and I will withdraw this bill at once.

Mr. MORRILL. I do not know whether this $10,000 would do the Monongahela any good; but I am quite satisfied that it would do my friend from West Virginia at least ten thousand dollars' worth of good, and that, I think, would be a public benefit, and therefore I propose to vote for it.

Mr. DAVIS. I thank the Senator very much indeed; it encourages me, and I believe with that speech I will stop talking and that the bill will pass. Of course I hope that the motion to postpone until the first Monday in December will fail and that we shall then pass the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion to postpone the bill until the first Monday in December.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. WRIGHT. I ask leave at this time to make a couple of reports. The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. No. 21) defining the meaning and intent of the act of June 11, 1870, entitled "An act in relation to the Hot Springs reservation in Arkansas," have had the same under consideration and have instructed me to report it back, with a recommendation that it lie on the table, the Senate having passed a bill in relation to the same subject.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. WRIGHT. The same committee, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. No. 23) in relation to the Hot Springs reservation in the State of Arkansas, have instructed me to report it back with a recommendation that it lie on the table, there having been a bill reported and passed on the same subject.

The report was agreed to.

CAPTAIN SAMUEL ADAMS.

Mr. WRIGHT. The bill (H. R. No. 3489) for the relief of Captain Samuel Adams has been, as I remember now, indefinitely postponed. I move that the order indefinitely postponing the bill be reconsidered, and that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

BENJAMIN P. RUNKLE.

Mr. CLAYTON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 1003) to restore Benjamin P. Runkle to the retired list of the Army.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and in lieu thereof to insert:

That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to convene a court of inquiry to investigate and report upon the proceedings of the court-martial before which Benjamin P. Runkle, late major United States Army, (retired,) was tried in 1872; that the court of inquiry shall be authorized to take new testimony, if the same shall be deemed necessary; that, upon a report by said court of inquiry acquitting the said Benjamin P. Runkle, the President shall be authorized to appoint said Benjamin P. Runkle a major in the Army of the United States, and to place him upon the retired list.

Mr. CLAYTON. There is a report accompanying the bill, but I will make a statement.

Mr. SARGENT. Is it the unanimous report of the Military Committee?

Mr. CLAYTON. Yes, it is a unanimous report.

Mr. INGALLS. I should like to hear the statement.

Mr. CLAYTON. This officer was tried in 1872 by court-martial. He had but a very short time to make his defense. He was put under arrest in Louisville, Kentucky, and was not allowed to visit Washington, where his papers were. He was detailed for service in the Freedmen's Bureau. His papers were all in Washington. He had not time to come here and get his papers, and therefore he could not make the defense which he now claims he can make and which the committee believes he can make. In fact the committee has seen testimony of a documentary character which would have had very great bearing on the case if produced before the court-martial. The bill is merely to authorize the Secretary of War to convene a court-martial to re-investigate the testimony in this case, and hear such additional testimony as he may bring, and then if he exonorates himself the President will re-appoint him.

Mr. SARGENT. Is that testimony newly discovered?

Mr. CLAYTON. He was held responsible for the act of a subagent, and the court-martial regarded that subagent as his subagent, when it turned out that this subagent was appointed by his superior officer. He had no control whatever over him, could not remove him, or anything of that kind, and therefore ought not to have been held responsible.

Mr. SARGENT. Why was he put upon the retired list?

Mr. CLAYTON. He was on the retired list and detailed to perform this service. I think the bill is all right. Out of abundant caution we thought it best to let the whole matter be re-investigated.

Mr. INGALLS. It appears to me the better plan would be, if injustice has been done this man, to authorize the Secretary of War to institute a court for the investigation of the offense for which he was tried.

Mr. CLAYTON. This bill does that.

Mr. INGALLS. And we should await the result of that investigation before providing that he shall be appointed a major if the result of that inquiry should happen to be favorable to the person named in the bill. It is an extraordinary proposition, and it seems to me to be one that ought not to be entertained. If any wrong has been done him, let us authorize a tribunal to try the case over again and not anticipate whether he will be found guilty or whether he will be acquitted.

Mr. CLAYTON. It is an extraordinary proceeding; but I think it is one that should be adopted in future. The proceeding heretofore has been for the Senate to restore to the Army; and I think that proceeding, very frequently, is not as thorough as it should be. This bill originally provided for restoration by an act of Congress. The Committee on Military Affairs thought it best and safest to require a board of officers to be convened, and ascertain whether this officer has been unjustly dealt with or not. If it so turns out that he has been unjustly dealt with, then it seems to me we should give the President authority to re-appoint him. The President is not compelled to do it, but he is merely given the power to re-appoint him.

Mr. INGALLS. It will be time enough to authorize the President to re-appoint him if he is found innocent.

Mr. CLAYTON. It ought to be done hastily. You cannot be too quick to do justice. If this officer has been unjustly treated, I do not think that justice can be too soon meted out to him. You can trust the Secretary of War to revise this proceeding; and you can trust the President, if the officer is found to be innocent, to re-appoint him.

Mr. SARGENT. Does the Secretary of War recommend the bill?

Mr. CLAYTON. I think the particular proposition was not referred to him.

Mr. SARGENT. Did not the committee ask the opinion of the De partment on this matter?

Mr. CLAYTON. We have all the papers here from the Department.

Mr. SARGENT. Does the Department recommend it?

Mr. CLAYTON. No; their recommendation was not asked for. We have the papers all here.

Mr. SARGENT. The committee did not ask the opinion of the Department about it?

Mr. CLAYTON. We had the report of the Judge-Advocate-General reviewing the case, and upon that report and the recommendation that this legislation should be had this bill is based. Before he was dismissed he was on the retired list.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title of the bill was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of Benjamin P. Runkle, late a major on the retired list of the United States Army."

WILLIAM L. SCRUGGS.

Mr. HAMLIN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 4418) to pay William L. Scruggs, late minister at Bogota, from October 10 to November 21, 1876.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to William L. Scruggs, late minister of the United States of America at Bogota, United States of Colombia, $854.17, the amount which would have been due him as minister from the United States of America from October 10, 1876, to November 21, 1876, the time actually and necessarily detained in Bogota after his recall, by reason of the siege of the city by the revolutionary troops.

Mr. HAMLIN. This bill received the approval of the House. It was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations of this body, and has been unanimously reported back. The facts in the text of the bill state the case. The minister was detained there something I think over two months, owing to the insurrectionary condition of the country and could not leave at the time of the notice of the Government, and it is believed that he is fairly and justly entitled to this small sum as the compensation which would have been due him had he not been recalled.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

J. B. M'CULLOUGH.

Mr. WITHERS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 1127) for the relief of J. B. McCullough, Mrs. L. S. Fountain, administratrix of James Fountain, and John Howze, surviving partner of the firm of Howze & Hendricks.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Claims, with amendments, so as to read:

That the proper accounting officers of the Treasury be, and they are hereby, directed to pay to J. D. McCullough, of Petersburgh, Virginia, the sum of $328.87; the said sum being for the rent of property belonging to the aforesaid party, and occupied under contract by the United States, and for which vouchers were given to him; and an amount sufficient to pay the same is hereby appropriated from the Treasury.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of J. B. McCullough."

STEVEN V. BENÉT.

Mr. WADLEIGH. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2952) authorizing the Commissioner of Patents to rehear the application of Steven V. Benét for patents for cartridges.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. SARGENT. Mr. President——

Mr. WITHERS. I should like to hear an explanation from the chairman of the committee reporting the bill stating why it is that it is necessary to review this case.

Mr. SARGENT. The Senator from Virginia has made my speech.

Mr. WADLEIGH. The bill passed the House upon a report which I send to the Clerk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no amendment, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

Mr. WRIGHT. I understood the reading of the report to be called for.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the report.

The Chief Clerk read the following report submitted by Mr. SAMPSON, from the Committee on Patents of the House of Representatives, March 31, 1876:

The Committee on Patents, to whom was referred the petition of S. V. Benét, praying the passage of an act authorizing the Commissioner of Patents to reconsider his rejected application for a patent on an improvement in the manufacture of metallic cartridges, beg leave to submit the following report:

In 1866 General Benét, then of the rank of brevet lieutenant-colonel United States Army, was in command of the United States arsenal at Frankford, near Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, and was charged in his official capacity with the manufacture, for the use of the military service, of metallic cartridges, and while thus employed designed an improvement therein, which he believed to be entirely novel and of sufficient importance to justify him in applying for a patent therefor, and, April 14, 1866, made such application in the manner prescribed by law.

On the 27th of the same month his application was rejected on the ground that there was no essential novelty in the invention. March 7, 1867, the specifications were amended as the law permitted, and again submitted for re-examination, and was, on the 14th of March, again rejected by the primary examiner for the same reason as before.

General Benét has long been in the Ordnance Department, is now Chief of Ordnance, United States Army, has had great experience and the best opportunities for acquiring information on the subject of the manufacture of cartridges, and with this knowledge, entitling his opinion to some consideration, expresses in his petition the belief "that in the start of the art in this country"—at the time of filing his application—"the importance of what appeared to be but slight alterations of form in his device was scarcely appreciated by practical experts and those skilled in the art, not to mention those by whose theoretical knowledge only the ministerial actions in the Patent Office in respect to his application for a patent were determined, and that, therefore, his application for a patent was mistakenly rejected," and your committee are not prepared to say that such was not the case.

If petitioner was in fact the inventor of an important and valuable improvement in this art, and has been mistakenly deprived of the honor and benefit of his invention—and on these points there is no doubt—a correct decision may be now obtained, if permitted a re-examination and to prosecute the appeals allowed by law, which before were not taken. Then assuredly he ought to have the privilege, at least, of making the attempt to have such mistake corrected, unless some valid reason can be urged against it.

If, in consequence of his official position, his relations to the Government or the public were such that a patent ought not to be granted; or from his own laches in failing to avail himself of the facilities which the law afforded him to secure a correct determination of his application he is not entitled to consideration; or the granting a patent now, if entitled to one, would work injustice to others, then the relief he is now seeking should not be given.

The fact that he was an officer in the Army will not of itself deprive him of the right to his invention. The law of Congress enacted in pursuance of the power given in the Constitution to secure to inventors, for a limited time, the exclusive right to their discoveries, provides that any person who has invented or discovered any new and useful art, machine, manufacture, &c., or improvement therein, may, by application in the manner prescribed by law, obtain a patent therefor, except officers and employés in the Patent Office. And this question has been decided by the Supreme Court in the case of The United States vs. Burns, (12 Wallace, 256.) Mr. Justice Field uses this language:

"If an officer in the military service not specially employed to make experiments with a view to suggest improvements in arms, tents, or any other kind of war material, he is entitled to the benefit of it, and to letters-patent for the improvement from the United States, equally with every other citizen not engaged in such service; and the Government cannot, after the patent is issued, make use of the improvement any more than a private individual, without license from the inventor or making compensation to him."

It is, therefore, settled that an officer of the Army may be entitled to a patent for the invention of an improvement in the materials of war, and even the Government liable for its use after patent is granted. But if the officer be assigned to the especial duty of experimenting and making improvements in the particular materials to which his invention relates, then it would seem a somewhat different rule should apply. In such case he is the servant of the Government, assigned by its command to do for the good of the service just what he has done, and the Government should not, because he has accomplished what he was assigned to do for its benefit, be deprived of that benefit; and this principle is recognized by the petitioner himself. He has offered in his petition to release to the Government all right to royalty or compensation for Government use of the invention.

But the further question is, Should an invention wrought out under such circumstances inure not only to the Government but to the benefit of all individual citizens of the entire country? True, he was the servant of the people, educated, perhaps, at their expense; was in their employ, and paid out of their Treasury; but what was the extent of that employment? It was only for governmental purposes. His duty was to make the improvement for the military service; and outside of that the products of his brain and his hands were as much his own property as the fruits of the labor of any other citizen, not in the service of the Government, would be his. But if it was all the Government's, should we not possess the grace to surrender to him so much of the right as we do not desire to use ourselves? He has well said, in his argument before the committee, he was employed to invent a cartridge for the military service of his own Government, not for individuals for sporting purposes, not for foreign governments or the world at large.

The next inquiry is, Has he reasonable excuse for not prosecuting his application to the court of last resort? When his claim had been rejected the second time by the primary examiner, he might have appealed to the board of examiners-in-chief, thence to the commissioner, thence to the supreme court of the District of Columbia, and on refusal there filed his bill in equity, had a hearing before a district or circuit court of the United States, and if error was committed, then gone to the Supreme Court. This he failed to attempt to do until too late. At the time of the rejection of his application there was no limitation, as now, by section 4894 of the revision, that upon failure for two years after any action therein, of which notice was given, to prosecute the application, it should be regarded as abandoned; but cases might be and were sometimes taken up again even eight or ten years after rejection. The rejection was in 1867, when there was no limitation. In 1869 he was ordered from Frankford arsenal to other important duties. July 8, 1870, this law of limitation was enacted, and gave only six months in which to resume the prosecution of rejected claims. In the engrossing cares of his official duties, this did not come under his observation until he undertook to renew the prosecution at the Patent Office, and was informed it was too late. In the judgment of the committee, these circumstances do show a reasonable excuse for failing to prosecute.

The remaining objection which might be urged is this: Several years have expired since the invention and application. The cartridge has been extensively manufactured and gone into quite general use. Should the public now be deprived of the use of that which it has long enjoyed, which it now supposed was public property, free and open alike to all, or pay a license or royalty therefor? If, through his misfortune, occasioned by change of the law, the public has enjoyed for several years, free, for what otherwise it would have had to pay a royalty, and all the present existing rights can be protected, then this can be no valid argument why he should not be permitted, for a limited time in the future, to enjoy some benefits from the fruits of his own invention; and these existing rights are carefully protected by the bill.

Your committee, therefore, submit the accompanying bill and recommend its passage.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, and was read the third time.

Mr. EATON. I ask for a division on the passage of the bill.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 19, noes 17; no quorum voting.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I trust that this bill will pass. I think it a meritorious bill. General Benét was in the employ of the Government making improvements in cartridges, and made a most valuable improvement. This bill carefully reserves to the Government, in whose employ he was, all the advantages for the future and for the past use of that improvement. The patent is inoperative as against the Government. There is no reason why foreign nations should have the benefit of his invention, and this is really only a protection against their use of it.

General Benét has an abundant excuse for suffering the limitation to expire before he took an appeal, inasmuch as the law was passed in 1870 and only six months was given in which he could take his appeal, and he was not informed of the change which had been made in the law. This only authorizes him to renew his application. If it is an invention worthy of being patented, it is to be patented; otherwise not. I think it is but justice to an American citizen to give him this protection against foreign nations.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, I am not going to make any opposition to this bill; but I desire, in order that it may be understood, to call the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Patents to one fact, if he will listen to me. The language of the bill is that the Government shall have the free use of this cartridge. Now, I want to know whether that includes the right to fabricate the cartridge?

Mr. WADLEIGH. It does.

Mr. LOGAN. I want it understood, for the reason that this bill was brought to me some time ago and I objected to it on the ground that the Government was not authorized to fabricate the cartridge. If it gives the Government that right, I have no objection.

Mr. WADLEIGH. The Government is entitled to the free use of the invention. That includes the right to manufacture.

Mr. LOGAN. I merely wish that statement to be made so that it may be understood hereafter.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. The language of this bill is this:

And the subsequent sale and use of those manufactured at the time of the issue shall not be held to be an infringement of said patent. And the Government shall be entitled to the free use thereof—

That is, the patent—for the military or naval service.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 32, nays 12; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Anthony, Barnum, Bayard, Blaine, Cameron of Wisconsin, Chaffee, Christiancy, Clayton, Conkling, Cragin, Dawes, Dennis, Dorsey, Ferry, Frelinghuysen, Harvey, Jones of Nevada, Kernan, McMillan, Maxey, Mitchell, Morrill, Morton, Oglesby, Paddock, Patterson, Sargent, Teller, Wadleigh, Windom, and Wright—32.

NAYS—Messrs. Alcorn, Bailey, Bogy, Davis, Eaton, Gordon, Hereford, Ingalls, Logan, Robertson, Saulsbury, and Withers—12.

ABSENT—Messrs. Booth, Boutwell, Bruce, Burnside, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Cockrell, Conover, Cooper, Edmunds, Goldthwaite, Hamilton, Hamlin, Hitchcock, Howe, Johnston, Jones of Florida, Kelly, McCreery, McDonald, Merrimon, Norwood, Randolph, Ransom, Sharon, Sherman, Spencer, Stevenson, Thurman, Wallace, West, and Whyte—31.

So the bill was passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. GEORGE M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 4691) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes, asked a conference on the disagreeing votes of the Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. J. D. C. ATKINS of Tennessee, Mr. ERASTUS WELLS of Missouri, and Mr. CHARLES FOSTER of Ohio managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had concurred in the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 4616) making appropriations for the naval service for the year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes.

The message further announced that the House had concurred in the resolution of the Senate that of a digest of the opinions of the Attorneys-General and of the decisions of the Federal courts with reference to international law and kindred subjects prepared at the Department of State, there be printed, in addition to the usual number, five hundred copies for the use of the House of Representatives and one thousand for the use of the Department of State.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. No. 3925) relating to the production of fruit brandy, and to punish frauds connected with the same; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives, non-concurring in the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 4691) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes, and asking for a committee of conference thereon.

Mr. BLAINE. I move that the Senate insist on its amendment and agree to the conference asked for by the House.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the committee, and Mr. BLAINE, Mr. ALLISON, and Mr. WALLACE were appointed.

BOUNTIES TO SOLDIERS.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President——

Mr. STEVENSON. I ask the Senator from Illinois to yield to me for the purpose of calling up the bill (H. R. No. 4313) for the removal of the political disabilities of Charles L. Scott, of Alabama.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill referred to by the gentleman from Kentucky is not at the desk.

Mr. DORSEY. I would like to have a bill passed while the Clerk is looking for the bill of the Senator from Kentucky. If the Senator will yield to me a moment I can pass the bill to which I refer while his bill is being looked for. I ask unanimous consent to proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 545) for the relief of James A. Jackson and others, securities of G. R. Horton, late postmaster at Monticello, Arkansas.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The gentleman from Arkansas asks unanimous consent to proceed to the consideration of the bill named by him. Is there objection?

Mr. LOGAN. I do not know whether the Senator from Arkansas was recognized or not while another Senator had the floor. I was standing on the floor and I thought I was recognized before the Senator from Kentucky.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state that the Senator from Illinois was to be recognized after the Senator from Kentucky, and pending the search for the bill called up by the Senator from Kentucky, the Senator from Arkansas, being near the Chair, asked to have a bill considered.

Mr. LOGAN. That is just what I should like to have myself.

Mr. DORSEY. I hope that the bill will be considered. It is a very brief matter.

Mr. LOGAN. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois objects.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, I have a bill that has been before the Senate, I think, for over a year now and I move that it be taken up. It is House bill No. 58.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 58) to equalize the bounties of soldiers who served in the late war for the Union.

Mr. DAVIS. Is there a report with the bill? If so, I should like to have it read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is no report accompanying the bill.

Mr. DAVIS. I desire to have the report, if there be one, read for the reason that it has been stated here by the chairman of the Committee on Finance, I think, that to carry out the provisions of this bill, if they could be carried out at all, would cost a hundred million dollars. I think that was the statement of the chairman of the Finance Committee, that he had in some way had it examined into and that, if its provisions could be carried out, that was his estimate; or perhaps he said it was the estimate of the Department. I would ask the Senator from Illinois, who I see is looking this way, whether or not that was the statement of the chairman of the Finance Committee?

Mr. LOGAN. I do not know what the statement of the chairman of the Finance Committee was, or anything about that statement, nor am I responsible for it. This bill has been discussed time and again in the Senate; it passed the House, I think, five times; it passed the Senate once, and was vetoed and is before the Senate again. It has been discussed here and statements have been made pro and con in reference to it. I suppose every Senator is conversant with the statements that have been made. I place no reliance in any statement that has been made in reference to the great cost of it. I do not know what it will cost. I have tried to compute the cost of it, but do not know what it may be, and it is immaterial to me, as far as that is concerned. It is just that these men should have their bounty and I am not making calculations about how much it may cost. I only desire that the law which asked the soldiers to go into the field and promised to give them a certain bounty shall be carried out. I ask for a vote on the bill.

Mr. KERNAN. I should like to inquire if there is any report or statement of the committee as to what amount this bill would require to be taken from the Treasury. I have seen it stated at a very large sum, between $100,000,000 and $200,000,000.

Mr. LOGAN. I call for the reading of the amendments reported by the Committee on Military Affairs.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first amendment will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to insert in line 4, before the word "wagoner" the word "enlisted;" and in line 5, after the word "soldier" to strike out "sailor, and marine, including those borne upon the rolls as slaves and Indians;" so as to read:

That there shall be allowed and paid to each and every non-commissioned officer, musician, artificer, enlisted wagoner, and private soldier who faithfully served as such, &c.

Mr. MORTON. Is that amendment offered here?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. LOGAN. That amendment was reported to the Senate from the Committee on Military Affairs. The word "enlisted" placed before "wagoner" is a proper amendment, but the words "those borne upon the rolls as slaves and Indians" should be stricken out for the reason that the bill includes all who were soldiers, no matter whether they were slaves, Indians, or what. That amendment was agreed to in the Senate committee. The words "those borne upon the rolls as slaves and Indians" should be stricken out of the bill and the other words that are crossed out in the bill should remain.

Mr. MORTON. Mr. President, this amendment may perhaps be a very proper one, but if any correction is needed it can be made hereafter. I regard the adoption of any amendment as fatal to this bill. It passed the House under peculiar circumstances, and if it is to go back there again it does not stand a ghost of a chance of going through. Any amendment that sends this bill back to the House destroys it; consequently I will vote for no amendment. I would rather take the chance of having any correction made hereafter in any proper manner than to have the bill go back into the House.

Mr. LOGAN. I agree with the Senator from Indiana in reference to these amendments. The amendments were reported by the committee, but I agree with the Senator that their adoption is almost a certain defeat of the bill; and for that reason I will ask the Senate to non-concur in the amendments made by the committee and pass the bill as it came from the House.

Mr. SARGENT. I think the amendments ought to be reported.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first amendment has been reported. The Secretary will again read it.

The CHIEF CLERK. The first amendment is in line 4, before the word "wagoner" to insert "enlisted."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on this amendment.

The question being put, it was declared that the noes appeared to prevail.

Mr. SARGENT. I ask for a division.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 20, noes 12; no quorum voting.

Mr. STEVENSON. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I should like to have the amendment stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be reported.

The Chief Clerk again read the amendment.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 27, nays 17; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alcorn, Allison, Anthony, Bailey, Barnum, Bayard, Bogy, Cockrell, Cooper, Cragin, Davis, Dawes, Dennis, Eaton, Gordon, Hereford, Howe, Kelly, Kernan, Maxey, Robertson, Sargent, Saulsbury, Stevenson, Teller, Wallace, and Withers—27.

NAYS—Messrs. Blaine, Bruce, Burnside, Cameron of Wisconsin, Chaffee, Christiancy, Clayton, Dorsey, Ferry, Harvey, Hitchcock, Ingalls, Logan, McMillan, Morton, Paddock, and Wright—17.

ABSENT—Messrs. Booth, Boutwell, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Conkling, Conover, Edmunds, Frelinghuysen, Goldthwaite, Hamilton, Hamlin, Johnston, Jones of Florida, Jones of Nevada, McCreery, McDonald, Merrimon, Mitchell, Morrill, Norwood, Oglesby, Patterson, Randolph, Ransom, Sharon, Sherman, Spencer, Thurman, Wadleigh, West, Whyte, and Windom—31.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was in lines 5 and 6, to strike out the words "sailor and marine, including those borne upon the rolls as slaves and Indians."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 10, before the word "wagoner," to insert the words "and enlisted."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 11, after the word "soldier" to strike out the words "sailor and marine."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section 2, line 3, after the word "artificer," and before the word "wagoner" to insert the word "enlisted;" in the same line, after the word "soldier" to insert the words "sailor or marine;" in line 6, after the word "three" to strike out the word "minor;" in line 7, before the word "wagoner" to insert the word "enlisted;" and in line 8, after the word "soldier," to strike out the words "sailor or marine;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. That in case of the death, either before or after the passage of this act, of any such non-commissioned officer, musician, artificer, enlisted wagoner, or private soldier, the allowance and payment shall be made to his widow, if she has not re-married, or, if there be no widow or she has re-married, then to the child or children of such deceased non-commissioned officer, musician, artificer, enlisted wagoner, or private soldier.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendmeut was in section 3, line 3, before the word "wagoner" to insert the word "enlisted;" in the same line, after the word "soldier;" to strike out the words "sailor or marine," and in line 6 after "United States;" to strike out the words "or State" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 3. That in computing and ascertaining the bounty to be be paid to any non-commissioned officer, musician, artificer, enlisted wagoner, or private soldier, or to his proper representatives, under the provisions of this act, there shall be deducted therefrom any and all bounties already paid under the provisions of ans United States laws.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section 5, after "United States" to strike out the words "or State;" in line 6, before the word "wagoner" to insert the word "enlisted;" in line 7, after the word "soldier" to strike out the words "sailor or marine;" and after line 8, to insert the words "except in case of the application of the widow, or child, or children;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 5. That every petition or application for bounty made under the provisions of this act shall disclose and state specifically, under oath and under the pains and penalties of perjury, what amount of bounty has been paid under the provisions of any United States laws to the non-commissioned officer, musician, artificer, enlisted wagoner, or private soldier, by whom or by whose representative the claim is made, except in case of the application of the widow, or child, or children.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section 9, line 2, after the word "artificer" to insert the word "enlisted;" in line 3, after the word "soldier" to strike out the words "sailor or marine;" so as to read:

SEC. 9. That no adjustment or payment of any claim of any non-commissioned officer, musician, artificer, enlisted wagoner, or private soldier, or his proper representative, under the provisions of this act, shall be made, unless the application be filed within five years from the passage of the same.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This concludes the amendments of the committee.

Mr. SARGENT. I offer the following as an additional section to the bill:

SEC. —. That to enable the Treasurer of the United States to meet the demand caused by the foregoing sections of this bill, a duty of three cents per pound upon all coffee and ten cents per pound upon all tea imported into the United States shall be imposed from and after the passage of this act.

Mr. MORTON and Mr. HITCHCOCK. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. LOGAN. I hope the call for the yeas and nays will be withdrawn.

Mr. MORTON. I will withdraw it at the request of the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Very well.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further amendment the bill will be reported to the Senate as amended.

Mr. DAVIS. I ask for the yeas and nays upon the passage of the bill.

Mr. LOGAN. I desire now, if the Senate will give me their attention one moment, before offering an amendment to say a word. I supposed that there was probably not a Senator present who would not be willing at any time to give a direct vote on this bill with a view of the bill becoming a law. I do not like to see a bill defeated by persons who ought to vote for it piling amendments on it, and I appeal to Senators on the other side of the Chamber who have appealed here for contracts made with men who had gone into the confederacy and secured the legislation which passed last night, amounting to hundreds of thousands of dollars, now to let the law of this land that was a contract with the poor soldier who suffered for his country to be executed. I offer now as a substitute to the bill as amended the original House bill, and I ask a vote on that directly, so that then we may see whether we can pass a bill of that kind or not.

Mr. SARGENT. Is that in order?

Mr. LOGAN. Certainly it is.

Mr. SARGENT. I raise the point of order on the reception of such an amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator cannot offer the one bill for the other.

Mr. LOGAN. I offer it as a substitute. I move to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the words in the original bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This is the bill itself which is pending.

Mr. LOGAN. I know, but I move to strike out all after the enacting clause and offer the words that I send to the desk.

Mr. EATON. That cannot be done.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I ask if the Senate has not already expressed its judgment upon the amendments offered to this bill, which are now made part of the bill?

Mr. LOGAN. Very well, I am not offering a bill. I move to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill, and insert what I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair cannot entertain the amendment, it being the same bill on which the Senate has acted. The Chair cannot entertain a motion to strike out and insert the same matter. If the Senate desires, when the bill reaches the Senate, it can non-concur in the amendment, which would leave the bill as it stood originally.

Mr. SARGENT. I understand the amendments have been concurred in already.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No, they have not.

Mr. MORTON. Is this matter settled?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Not yet. If there be no further amendment, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

Mr. MORTON. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment in regard to taxing tea and coffee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Then the amendments will be taken up separately. The question is on the first amendment of the committee.

Mr. PADDOCK. Was not the amendment in regard to taxing tea and coffee withdrawn?

Mr. MORTON. No, sir; it was adopted.

Mr. DAVIS. I raise the point of order that the amendments were announced from the Chair as having been concurred in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair asked if there was objection to concurring in the amendments, and then the Senator from Illinois rose to offer a further amendment. That was in the nature of an objection to the concurrence.

Mr. LOGAN. What amendment was adopted?

Mr. DAVIS. All the amendments were adopted.

Mr. LOGAN. What was the last amendment about an appropriation from the Treasury?

Mr. SARGENT. I should like to inquire whether the record of the Clerk shows that the Senate has concurred in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. LOGAN. The Senate has done no such thing.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair was correct. When the Chair stated the question on concurrence in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole the objection was made, and the record shows that no vote for concurrence was taken. The question is now whether the Senate will concur or non-concur in gross or separately in the amendments?

Mr. LOGAN. Let us vote on the amendments separately. I did not understand the amendment of the Senator from California. I thought it was an amendment to pay money out of the Treasury for this bounty, but I understand it is an amendment in reference to a tax on tea and coffee.

Mr. MORTON. It is a tax on tea and coffee.

Mr. SARGENT. Certainly it is, because the operation of this bill, as I understand it, would take from the Treasury an amount equal to that which we have now there as a sinking fund. It would destroy our credit; and it seems to me that a measure of this kind should carry with it the means of preserving our credit and making the payment which would have to be made from the Treasury under this bill. Therefore I offer the amendment in perfect good faith. I should like to say, however, that upon the merits of the bill itself I am opposed to its passage. Let it be distinctly understood that that is my position in regard to the matter. There should be no doubt about it, for I have voted against this bill at previous sessions over and over again. I shall do it as long as I believe the beneficiaries of this bill will not be the soldiers, but claim agents, who particularly insist that Senators shall vote for it. I do not believe that the financial condition of the country at the present time is so flourishing that we can afford to take anywhere from ten to a hundred millions of dollars from the Treasury for this purpose. I believe that under the necessary operation of this bill the number of clerks that would be required and the amount of machinery which would be set at work in the Department would be something from two and a half to three millions of dollars. That is not a wild guess at all, but founded on figures which I myself have received from officers of the Treasury Department who have investigated the matter. In obedience to my request that they would give me the best information within their power, they never set the cost of this bill at less than $21,000,000; and it is a very grave question. For one I do not think the bill ought to pass unless there is coupled with it something that will fill up the gap that will be made by it in our resources. If Senators are in earnest in desiring that this money shall be paid, let them at the same time provide the means by which it shall be paid.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, I intended when I called up this bill to-night to have a vote taken on it without any discussion, for the reason, as I stated, that it has been discussed so often in this Chamber that I thought there was no necessity for any further discussion. But I am very sorry to see the character of objections that are urged against it. If there is a debt known to man that ought to be paid, it is the debt that the Government owes the men who saved its life. These men have gone for twelve years unpaid, with the law upon our statute-book calling them into the service of this country and promising them a bounty for their enlistment in behalf of the Government. They were mustered out, some of them one day before the term expired, some of them two days, some of them a month before, merely sufficient time under the construction given by the Adjutant-General to the law to deprive them of receiving the least bounty that the Government had agreed to pay them. A bounty was to be paid annually to soldiers, and they received two years' allowance, but not the last year's, because they were mustered out one day before the expiration of the three years. It was construed that they were not entitled to bounty although they had performed service to the Government.

This claim has been presented from the year 1866 up to the present time and passed through the House of Representatives of every Congress of the United States since. My patriotic friend from California stated on this floor last night that he would vote to pay claims against the Government to men who went into the confederate service that were due for mail service to this Government, because the Government had contracted to pay them and because of the patriotic service within the last few days of his friends in voting the same way he did. Now, it does strike me as strange that he should object now to the little pittance that is to be given in many cases to poor widows or orphans, or a crippled or lame soldier that the Government agreed to pay, and solemnly enacted it into a law. I thought that no republican, if I may use the expression, would ever be found in Congress who would fail to support a bill which gave to the soldier that which the Government agreed to give him. I did not believe that a democrat could be found who would do it. I believed that there was patriotism enough left in this land to carry out the contract with the men who saved the Government.

Sir, in 1865, when 100,000 of these poor soldiers marched down Pennsylvania avenue, right on the walls of this Capitol where now their rights are denied was in grand, large, and magnificent letters the following language: "There is one debt the Government never can pay: that is the debt of gratitude it owes to the soldiers that saved this Republic." Sir, the Government doubtless has been grateful to these men; but the gratitude that these poor men ask now—and when I speak of poor men I mean the poor soldier, the man who is suffering and needs his money, or his widow, or his orphan—is not that you will give them office; it is not that you shall follow him with drum, and fife, and flag, but it is that you shall pay him the money that you owe him according to the law of the land. That is the gratitude that the soldiers ask; that is the gratitude they have appealed to Congress for time and again; and I am sorry to say that only in this Senate Chamber has it ever been refused by any party or any set of men representing the people of this country. No House of Representatives of either politics has ever been found that refused to pass a bill paying these men what they are entitled to; but in the Senate of the United States it has time and again been defeated. It passed once and was vetoed. Again it is presented when the bill has passed by almost a unanimous vote of the House of Representatives, at the last session, voted for by democrats and by republicans alike, because it is just and honest.

An estimate in report after report has been made in reference to this bill. The estimate that I made myself was that it would cost probably $13,000,000; but in costing that the same estimate would show that it would take probably ten years to fulfill and comply with the law. It would pass along for a great while before these men would all be paid the little pittance due, before their applications could be made, examined, passed upon, and payment made, and in that way the country would not feel it, in that way the Government would certainly not be robbed and surely not bankrupted by carrying out its own obligation.

If the Congress of the United States shall fail to perform what I believe to be an honest duty toward these men, then I will say that the Government of the United States of America has not acted in good faith with the men who defended it in the time that it needed their strong arms in support of a rocking and trembling Republic.

Is there a man here that will put up the little plea of agent, and say that agents will get some of this money? God knows it is not a question in my mind whether some agents will receive $5 or $10. That has nothing to do with it. The question with me is whether this money is due to the crippled soldiers that come to our door day after day and appeal to us through committees from almost every State in this Union for the passage of a bounty bill that gives to them the pittance they were entitled to under the law. Have they not been cheated out of it by being mustered out one day or two days or three days prior to the expiration of their time? This bill gives them the eight and one-third dollars per month, so as to equalize the bounties—$100 a year—that they were entitled to had the whole year's service been exhausted; but, forsooth, one day was lacking, and therefore they could not receive the amount.

I know it is getting nowadays to be that if any one makes an appeal for the soldier you see a sneer or a kind of laugh on the faces of many. They say, "The soldier is played out." Well, perhaps he is; I shall not say. It certainly seems that he is, in Congress. It is very sure that he has never knocked at the door of Congress in reference to getting what the Government ought to pay him, that he has got it under a bill of this character. The same false plea is made that some claim agent will make $10 or that the Treasury will lose it. But, Mr. President, if the rich and the haughty and the proud come to your doors and ask you to pay large amounts on your appropriation bills for claims not well proven, in nine cases out of ten it is done. If the question is asked whether you will take up your currency and give bonds by the hundred million, drawing a rate of interest, to be substituted for a debt drawing none, nine times out of ten you find Congress ready to pass it for the benefit of the man who has money. But if the poor and humble ask you to do a kindly act for them, the Treasury is going to be robbed, and it cannot be done!

This, Mr. President, is perhaps the last appeal I shall ever make in the halls of legislation in behalf of the soldier of my country. I have stood here and tried to defend him for years and tried to see that he should have the rights at least that the laws of the country give him. I have failed. Now, sir, let me say that if your country again shall ever be in a disturbed condition, when it shall be tottering from its base, when it shall be rocking and careening, when enemies from foreign lands shall thunder at the gates of your Capitol, or when insurrection may occur at home and your flag is being trailed in the dust, these men that you deprive of that which the law gives them will be the men you will appeal to again to save your institutions; and poor and humble as they may be, decrepit perhaps as they may be, they are the first to respond and will be the first. It is the poor and the humble man that saves your country in time of trial. He is the man that carries the musket; he is the man that carries the flag; he is the man that does the work; he digs your trenches; he sleeps behind your fortifications; he stands up to be shot; he is the man that appeals to you now to do him justice. But, sir, if justice cannot be done, I for him in this Senate Chamber will say the time has never been and the time never will be when, if these men are called upon as the protectors of this land, they will not stretch out that strong arm again and steady the rocking pillars of the grandest Republic that man has ever known or was ever permitted to have an interest in. They have done it once; they will do it again; and for them now I appeal to this Senate to at least give an opportunity to these men to present their claims. If they are just, permit them to be allowed; if unjust, let them be rejected like the claim of any other man. They are certainly preferable to cotton claims; they are certainly preferable to claims for destroying property in preserving the nation; they are certainly preferable to the claim of the pardoned man for making war against his Government, when he asks you to pay him for the property lost while he was trying to destroy the Government that gave him protection. While this is being done I only ask that their claims may be made equal, for I believe it looks as if the time was approaching when these men would have to bow and beg pardon for having preserved the country. But before you force them to do that, pay them what you owe them. [Applause in the galleries.]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the Chair hears applause a second time he will order the galleries cleared at once; and this he means.

Mr. SARGENT. Mr. President, I suppose it will be admitted in this Chamber or anywhere else where the question may be mooted, that the President of the United States, General Grant, is a republican. I suppose it will be further admitted that he has as warm and intelligent a sympathy for the soldiers as any man over this broad country. Any man who impeached either of these propositions would impeach his own honesty and good sense. This bill once passed both Houses of Congress and was vetoed by General Grant, the President of the United States, a republican without fear, without reproach; a soldier himself of most exalted service; a man the warmest impulses of whose heart are for the soldiers with whom he served; and I want to know what right any Senator has to impeach his republicanism, or impeach the motives of any other Senator who stands in the same position upon this matter as the present President of the United States. That is a sufficient answer to all aspersions of motives attempted upon this floor. That fact cannot be wiped out.

Mr. LOGAN. Nobody has aspersed the motives of any one.

Mr. SARGENT. Senators who oppose this bill are spoken of as if they turned with cold hearts away from the soldiers of the Republic, as if they had no appreciation of their valor upon the battle-field, no sympathy for their sufferings, no care for their rights. It is only those who favor the bill who are entitled to the respect and confidence of that class of the community. Now, sir, I dare do what I think right in the face of clamor from any class. I dare stand here and state that I believe that this bill is iniquitous in its provisions, instead of equitable. The claim is made here that this is the law, and we are violating right and law because we do not pass it to enforce the law. Why, if it was the law on the statute-book, all we need do would be to put an amount in an appropriation bill and the Department would apply that amount to carry out the provision of the law. It is because you have to come in now and make additional provision of law, causing great expenditure of the Departments, that I claim that we should carefully scrutinize this bill; and not, under the claim that there was a right springing out of previous contracts, pass it.

I have a respect and admiration for the present President of the United States, President a few hours longer, which is enhanced by the fact that he saw clearly and plainly the tendency of this bill and that it was an injustice to the Treasury and simply was enriching claim agents rather than the soldiers over whom so much sympathy is expressed. I have an admiration for him because his administration in nearly every direction has been a great success. He came into power with gold at 140, and to-day it stands in New York between 104 and 105. Under his administration and by economy, taxation being reduced, the public debt of the United States has been reduced by $400,000,000, and $30,000,000 payment off the annual interest charge; his foreign policy has vindicated the good name of America, ay, vindicated its power before all the nations of the earth, and not by war but by peaceful arbitration and moral means. However circumstances may have defeated the just application of his policy with reference to domestic matters, I believe that in all these things it will be conceded that he was patriotic and did that which he thought best for the country.

The past has not been ungrateful to the fame of General Grant, or the present, although both have come far short of rendering full justice to his purity of character, his patriotic purposes, and his great achievements in war and in peace. The future will make full compensation; our children and our children's children for countless generations will hold in admiration not only the brave and skillful warrior, directing during a period of a terrible conflict the forces and resources of the nation in an unerring path to triumph, but will appreciate and admire his equally great services in composing the warring elements lashed into confusion by civil war, and look back with loving veneration upon a record in every line of which is written dignity, honor, wisdom, and patriotism.

When such a man, whom even now the assaults of party malice fail to lessen in public love and esteem, comes forward and puts his seal of condemnation upon a bill like this, relating to the class of which he was an eminent member, it may be well for us civilians to inquire whether upon a matter so purely military in so many of its points we ought not to pause before overruling him.

I have here a document emanating from the Treasury showing that the expense of this bill will be at least $100,000,000. Is that an amount to be taken from the Treasury upon an appeal to sentiment?

Mr. LOGAN. Will the Senator allow me to say that any estimate of that character made by any man, I care not whether he is an official or not, is without any foundation whatever? I have made the calculation as carefully as anybody. That now referred to is based on the number of soldiers given, without calculating deaths or anything else. I made the estimate, as I stated, that it would not be over $13,000,000, and I know that statement is not out of the way. I have estimated it time and again, and the statement now cited by the Senator has been contradicted here and shown not to be correct time and again in this Senate Chamber.

Mr. SARGENT. I have no doubt the Senator conscientiously believes the statement that he makes. I think, however, that upon a mere financial proposition the statement of the Comptroller of the Treasury is entitled to great weight. I want to call the attention of the Senate to a careful statement made by the Comptroller showing the elements of his calculation; and I say that, after a careful examination made by myself of this statement, I fully believe the conclusions at which he arrives. This is dated Treasury Department, Second Comptroller's Office, February 17, 1874:

SIR: In compliance with the request contained in letter of Hon. POWELL CLAYTON, United States Senate, to the Second Auditor of the Treasury of date the 10th instant, referred by the Auditor to the Secretary of the Treasury, and by the Secretary to this office for preparation of reply, I have the honor to submit the following estimate of the amount paid for "bounty to soldiers who served in the late war for the Union, including those borne on the rolls as slaves," and the "amount which would be necessary to carry out the provisions of the bill herewith inclosed (H. R. 1910, Forty-first Congress, second session) should the same become a law."

He then goes on to give the date of the calls, the number of soldiers called for, the service in months, the number of men credited, the bounty paid, and the amount required to equalize, with explanatory remarks, and then shows the amount required under each item.

April 15, 1861, there were 75,000 called for who served three months; 93,326 were credited, and the amount to equalize them is $25 each. This item alone amounting to $2,333,150.

May 3, 1861, for the six months' service 2,715 men were credited and the amount required to equalize is $50, and that would amount to $135,750.

Under the calls of July 22, and July 25, 1861, 500,000 men were called for who served respectively for twelve, twenty-four, and thirty-six months. The number credited respectively was 9,056, 30,950, and 671,419. The bounty paid to part of them was $150, and part $200, and the amount required to equalize in the one case would be $50, and in the other $100. For part of them the total would be $1,547,500 and for the rest $67,141,900, in itself five times the amount of the estimate made by the Senator from Illinois.

In June, 1862, there were 15,000 more men credited. The amount required to equalize is $25 each, and the total required would be $375,175. July 2, 1862, there were 300,000 men called for who were in service thirty-six months, and 430,201 were credited who received $200 bounty, and $100 would be required to equalize them, and this amounts to $43,020,100.

And so, going through the table, he shows the amounts that were called for at different dates, the number who responded, the amount of bounty, the term of service, and the whole figures up $141,596,375. He then goes on to give credit for deductions. Deducting the number of men enlisted in 1861 and in 1862 who re-enlisted as veterans, 158,507, to whom a bounty of $200 was paid and $100 is required to equalize, making $15,850,700, and then for deserters and bounty-jumpers he deducts $10,000,000, and deducts for officers and soldiers dishonorably discharged or discharged at their own request as minors, enlistments from rebel prisoners, excess of credits over actual enlistments, and all other causes, $15,000,000 more, making deductions of $40,850,700, leaving a net result of $100,746,675.

Mr. LOGAN. How much does he allow for deaths in the Army?

Mr. SARGENT. I have stated the deductions that he gives. The letter continues:

January 15, 1872, the Paymaster-General submitted to Hon. John Coburn, chairman of House Committee on Military Affairs, an estimate of the amount required to carry out the provisions of H. R. 89, known as "Niblack's bill," the amount being $137,275,105.94; and that to carry out the provisions of H. R. 240, introduced by Hon. Mr. Holmes, would require $163,543,634.61.

He says:

My estimate on first-named bill (H. R. 89) was $101,947,825. From the foregoing data it is evident that the bill under consideration, (H. R. 1910,) should it become a law, would call for more than $100,000,000 to satisfy claims under it, and would necessitate the investigation and settlement of about one million five hundred thousand claims, requiring the labor of two hundred and fifty additional clerks in the office of the Second Auditor, and a corresponding increase in this office for four years to prepare for adjudication and payment the cases arising under the law.

This was directed to Hon. William A. Richardson, Secretary of the Treasury at that time.

Now, sir, I am not entirely familiar with all the elements of the calculation. The suggestion made by the Senator from Illinois that allowance is not made for deaths in the Army, which may be deducted under this bill, may have considerable bearing; but we are dealing with a sum of a hundred millions, and deduct one-fourth, and then you have seventy-five millions, and certainly that would be an extraordinary deduction, even under the suggestion that he makes.

Sir, I desire to repel for once and all the imputation upon Congress or any party in Congress, so far as that is concerned, or any party in the country, and especially for the republican party, that they have been ungrateful to the soldiers. We are paying now, annually, $30,000,000 in pensions to our soldiers and their widows and orphans. We have paid since the war closed $450,000,000 in the way of pensions to soldiers and their widows and orphans. The country has been most generous and most appreciative of this class of men; and it is no reason, because a claim is raised that the soldiers want the money or that we ought to have more sympathy for them, that we should put our hands into the Treasury and draw out $75,000,000 or $100,000,000, and such suggestions should have no value in legislation. If there is a contract with us let them show the contract and it will be upon the statute-book. The contract will speak for itself. If the accident of war, the abrupt termination of it is as was supposed, the mustering out of the regiments some weeks before the time they enlisted to serve expired, shortened the time during which they were paid or the amount of bounty to which they were entitled under existing laws, that was an incident of the service and does not raise an obligation in the nature of a contract. At most it is an equity; and putting it upon this ground, that this is a mere equity, then we should ask whether we ought for an equity of that kind, doubtful certainly in its character, and where we are making so much appropriation annually on a burdened Treasury for pensions to men paid so liberally, as ordinarily our soldiers are paid during war as compared with other soldiers, to put our hands into the Treasury and take out from seventy-five to one hundred million dollars.

I trust it will be very distinctly understood whether I am for or against this bill, and whether I offer amendments in order to perfect the bill or to defeat it. I think with the President of the United States that the bill ought to be defeated.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. GEORGE M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House still further insisted on its disagreement to the seventy-sixth and seventy-seventh amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 4472) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes, asked a still further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. WILLIAM S. HOLMAN of Indiana, Mr. HIESTER CLYMER of Pennsylvania, and Mr. CHARLES FOSTER of Ohio managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had concurred in the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 4187) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes.

The message further announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. No. 3349) granting a pension to Mrs. Rebecca C. Maxwell, widow of the late Colonel O. C. Maxwell, One hundred and ninety-fourth Ohio Volunteer Infantry.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President——

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Senator from Illinois to yield, that I may make a conference report.

Mr. LOGAN. Yes; certainly, I yield for that.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 4187) entitled "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes," having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

The House recedes from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 12, and agrees to the same, with an amendment making the sum $9,250,000; and the Senate agrees to the same.

The House recedes from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 13, and agrees to the same, with an amendment making the sum $150,000; and the Senate agrees to the same.

The House recedes from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 33, and agrees to the same, with an amendment making the sum $2,939,725; and the Senate agrees to the same.

W. B. ALLISON.
H. G. DAVIS.
H. L. DAWES.
Managers on the part of the Senate.

WM. S. HOLMAN.
CHAS. FOSTER.
HIESTER CLYMER.
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was concurred in.

THE LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WINDOM submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 4472) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have been unable to agree.

WM. WINDOM,
W. B. ALLISON,
H. G. DAVIS,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

WM. S. HOLMAN,
HIESTER CLYMER,
HENRY WALDRON,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. WINDOM. As it is known to the Senate, the only disagreeing vote, referred to the committee were those relating to the President's salary, the House bill reducing it from the present salary to $25,000. The committee have disagreed upon it, and I move that the Senate insist on its amendments and ask a further conference with the House.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. WINDOM, Mr. ALLISON, and Mr. DAVIS were appointed.

EQUALIZATION OF BOUNTIES.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 58) to equalize the bounties of soldiers who served in the late war for the Union.

Mr. LOGAN. I do not desire to detain the Senate in discussion; but I merely rise to ask their attention for a moment that they may see how men can be imposed on and how strange it is that an official under the Government should attempt to palm off a paper of this kind as an honest statement.

The whole number of enlisted men was 2,690,401. He gives the whole number of enlistments, and then shows that the bounty of that number of men would amount to so much, and deducts the bounty actually paid and includes the balance to make up this $100,000,000. I ask the Senator from California if he does not think that some of these soldiers died. Were not some of them killed? Did not some of them desert?

Mr. MORTON. Not many.

Mr. LOGAN. I suppose not.

Mr. SARGENT. Three million dollars are deducted in this statement for bounty-jumpers and deserters.

Mr. LOGAN. There were 80,000 deserters from our Army. The Senator knows the fact that out of the 2,000,000 men enlisted we never had over a million of men in the Army. Some men enlisted three times, and every enlistment is counted to make up the 2,690,401, and this statement calculates the bounty of 2,690,401 men. The statement is a fraud on its face and the Senator ought to know it. We had about a million of men in the Army and never more than that. Some enlisted twice; some enlisted three times; some jumped, as they called it, were bounty-jumpers; some deserted; some few absolutely died, strange to say; and this paper does not show that a solitary man died or that anybody ever was killed. It makes the calculation just as though we had to pay bounties to 2,690,000 soldiers. How this paper was gotten up I do not care to state, except that it was got up in order to prevent the passage of this bill. It is not a truthful statement; it is not an honest statement; it is not a fair statement; it is a fraud upon the Congress of the United States; and the man that made it up knows it, and the man who signed it knows it; I do not care who he was nor how high an official he was. I have made the calculation taking the estimate from the War Office of deaths and desertions, of bounty-jumpers, and of the number of soldiers now alive.

Mr. SARGENT. Will the Senator allow me a moment? In view of that statement will the Senator please explain to me section 2, which provides:

That in case of the death, either before or after the passage of this act, of any such non-commissioned officer, musician, artificer, enlisted wagoner, or private soldier, the allowance and payment shall be made to his widow, if she has not remarried, or if there be no widow, or she has remarried, then to the child or children of such deceased non-commissioned officer, musician, artificer, enlisted wagoner, or private soldier.

Now I should like to know how death figures in the case; if the amount which would be paid to a soldier if alive is to be paid to his widow or children.

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator is wrong again. He goes on the proposition that every man in the Army was a married man and had children. There were some few in the Army who were not married.

Mr. SARGENT. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. LOGAN. Certainly.

Mr. SARGENT. I was simply carrying out his statement. Even he cannot say every one who went into the Army was not married.

Mr. LOGAN. No, I do not say that; some of them were. I only want to call attention to the unfairness of this statement. The majority of men in the Army were single men; everybody knows that; and a great many died. I have the figures, but I do not want to take up the time of the Senate. We did not get back home with two-thirds of the Army that enlisted. We never had over a million of men, and the majority of that million of men drew their bounty. You may take the amount required for bounty for a million of men, take off two-thirds, and the fair calculation would be to compute for only one-third, and it would make about $10,000,000. That is about a fair estimate. Thirteen millions I put it at, because I did not think it was unfair or unreasonable to go that far.

Mr. MORTON. Mr. President, I have supported the administration of General Grant with a reasonable fidelity, but I do not acknowledge myself bound by any veto message or other message that he may send to the Senate except for the reasons contained in it.

If the President vetoed this bill on a former occasion for good reasons, I should feel myself bound by it, not because of the veto but because of the reasons. I had the understanding that the former veto proceeded on a mistaken notion entertained by the President as to what this measure would cost, a notion growing out of the report or paper which has just been read by the Senator from California. I must say in regard to that estimate that I do not regard it as at all reliable. I think it was gotten up as a scarecrow. It proceeds upon a false basis. I do not believe that this bill will cost one-third, or more than that, of the estimate contained in that paper. But suppose it did; that is a mere calculation as to how much it will cost to be honest, how much it will cost to do simple, naked justice.

This is a bill "to equalize the bounties of soldiers who served in the late war for the Union;" a bill to place them all upon the same equality, a bill to pay one good soldier just as much as was paid to another, a bill to carry out the spirit of the contract and to do justice where the spirit was violated by the letter. A great many men lost their bounty because they failed to serve out the full term of the enlistment, where they were honorably discharged, discharged for wounds or for sickness or because the war came to an end before the term of their enlistment expired. It was held by a technical construction of the law that they could not receive their bounty or the proportion of it because they had not served out the full time. A man who enlisted for three years and who served two years and eleven months and was honorably discharged for a wound, or because the war was at an end, it was held could not receive his bounty, because he did not serve out the full three years.

At one time it was held in England that if a man hired himself to work for one year and worked three hundred and sixty days, and then was unable from sickness to complete the full term of one year, he was not entitled to receive a cent of the whole compensation. That was once the law; but it was afterward overruled and, the courts held otherwise. It was upon that principle that these bounty laws received the construction that unless a soldier served out the full term of his enlistment, no difference from what cause he was mustered out of the service, he could not receive his bounty. It was gross injustice, and it is an injustice that will cry aloud until it is remedied. You may put it off now; you may take the opprobrium of refusing to do justice now; but it will come some time, and the men who bring it about will get the credit for it, and the men who refuse it will get the credit for that.

Now, Mr. President, let me read a portion of the first section of this bill, and see what it says:

That there shall be allowed and paid to each and every non-commissioned officer, musician, artificer, enlisted wagoner, and private soldier who faithfully served as such in the military service of the United States, who have been honorably discharged from such service, the sum of eight and one-third dollars a month for all the time which such non-commissioned officer, musician, artificer, and enlisted wagoner, and private soldier, actually so served, between the 12th day of April, 1861, and the 9th day of May, 1865.

It is to pay them each eight and one-third dollars a month for the time they actually served, and that is all. The most of them have received it; but some, from misconstruction of the law and from other causes, have not received it; and the purpose of this bill is to make things equal, to do equal justice to all, to put all upon the same footing. On this demand for equal rights, equal justice to the soldiers who exposed their lives for their country, we are met by a question of cost. How much will it cost to carry out the contract in its spirit rather than in its naked letter? How much will it cost to do right, to do this simple justice to the soldiers that saved our Government, if it shall be saved? We are met by a cold calculation from some clerk in the Treasury Department that it will cost so much money, and that I believe proceeds upon a false basis. He takes the whole number of soldiers nominally mustered into the service over two millions, whereas we know there was no such number in the field.

Mr. LOGAN. Two million six hundred thousand.

Mr. MORTON. We all know that that is a false basis. The Senator from California, who is remarkably well informed, must himself understand that there was no such number in the field.

Mr. SARGENT. The bill includes wagoners and others.

Mr. MORTON. You may take mule-drivers and everybody.

Mr. LOGAN. And the mules, too, would not make that much. [Laughter.]

Mr. MORTON. The Senator from California has offered an amendment here to raise revenue to pay off these bounties by levying a tax of 3 cents a pound on coffee and 10 cents a pound on tea. I call that Senator's attention to the fact that such an amendment is unconstitutional. Every bill to raise revenue must originate in the House of Representatives. I thought that provision was pretty well understood, but lest it may have been forgotten I will read it:

All bills for raising revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives.

You cannot levy a tax upon tea and coffee by attaching a tax bill to a bill providing for paying soldiers' bounties, or providing for any other matter, in the Senate. It is in the nature of a bill to raise revenue, even if you put it on in the form of an amendment in the Senate to this or any other bill. Perhaps it is all wrong that the Constitution makes that requirement, but it does. That amendment has no business here. I suggest that it is out of order to receive it.

The Senator from California says that this is for the benefit of claim agents who are principally urging it. Section 7 provides:

That it shall not be lawful for any soldier to transfer, assign, barter, or sell his discharge, final statement, descriptive list, or other paper, for the purpose of transferring, assigning, bartering, or selling any interest in any bounty under the provisions of this act. And all such transfers, assignments, barters, or sales heretofore made are hereby declared null and void as to any rights intended to be so conveyed by any such soldier.

That is a very stringent provision, intended to guard the soldiers against the sale of this bounty for a trifle, against the schemes of claim agents, of tricksters, and of gamblers. It makes every transfer invalid. The money can only be collected by the soldier himself, and no transfer or sale of his claim can be made that will enable the person purchasing or obtaining it to draw the money.

Mr. President, the very genius of our Government is equal justice to all, equal rights, and we can never safely stop short of it. Because a portion of the soldiers were deprived of their bounty by a technical construction of law or by misfortune or accident, where they were honorably discharged and were good soldiers, we cannot safely refuse to do those men justice. If we do, it will come back as a punishment to us; it will come back as a punishment to the party that does it.

My friend from California said the republican party could not safely be charged with ingratitude to the soldier. Not up to this time, perhaps; but whether we can be charged with it will depend not upon the declaration of my friend, but upon what we do. We cannot refuse this justice and then go to the soldiers and say, "We are your friends; we intend to do you justice." They will point you to your act, and I say there are thousands and tens of thousands of good soldiers all over the country who are now demanding the passage of this bill as an act of simple justice to them who feel that they are entitled to this money although it may be a small sum, and upon every principle of justice and of gratitude that the country can owe to a man. Those men will go to their graves feeling that way, and their children will believe that way after them. It is not a question of how much it will cost, but it is a question of right, of justice.

Mr. President, the Senator from California says he has always voted against this bill. I have always voted for it and I intend to vote for it whenever I get a chance. That it will yet be accorded, I have no sort of doubt. Justice lives; you may crush it but it rises again. This demand will forever come back to us until it has been complied with. It has been delayed a long time now, and I can say to my republican friends that they have suffered by the delay that this claim has received.

I do not present that as an argument, but I say that is the fact and that they will suffer for it. But that is not a legitimate argument. This claim should stand upon its own merits. If this money is due in the spirit of the law as a matter of absolute justice, it ought to be paid, no matter what party suffers or what party gains, no difference whether we have money in the Treasury or have to provide some means of collecting it.

I am going to say one thing further, and then I shall be done. I hope every amendment will be voted down. To adopt an amendment is to destroy the bill. I want the friends of the bill to understand that, and I want them to understand that nobody will be deceived, either, by the adoption of the amendments; it will be understood that every amendment that is adopted to this bill at this time is equivalent to its destruction. If the bill requires amendment in some small particulars, that can be corrected hereafter. When once the main proposition is adopted everybody will be willing to correct it afterward in order to make it what it ought to be and to relieve it from any error. The main proposition is now before us and it ought not to be defeated by any small thing. I hope, therefore, that the friends of this bill will vote down every amendment and let the bill pass.

Mr. HARVEY. I think it hardly fair for my friend the Senator from California to throw the great public services and good intentions of the President into the scale against this bill. If events should prove that he still entertains the view of this matter that he did on a former occasion, under different circumstances, there will be time enough then to consider any reason that he may have for vetoing it when it again reaches him. I do not think there is much in what has been urged as to the state of the Treasury in preventing the passage of this bill. The Treasury, under our Constitution, in this country is not a great institution to dominate and control the legislative action of the Government. The Treasury is the place where the money of the people is deposited for safe-keeping until it is required for the payment of the public debts, and if it should prove that there is not now a sufficiency of money in the Treasury to pay these claims and other demands, as has been justly stated, provision can be made in the proper quarter and at the proper time for raising the necessary money.

A great deal of stress has been placed upon the necessity of doing justice to public creditors. The Government has done justice to most of its public creditors, especially that portion of them who have accumulated sums of money, whether from the advantages given to them through shoddy contracts or otherwise, and who have invested in bonds. The Government has paid the bondholders promptly, and the interest even has been anticipated and paid before it was due, while the men who bared their bosoms to the storm of battle in defense of the country await tardy justice, and very tardy justice indeed. I think they have waited so long that we cannot justly ask them to wait longer. I care not what anyone else thinks of this measure, I shall take pleasure in voting for it as often as I shall have an opportunity to do so. I have voted for it upon every opportunity heretofore.

Mr. LOGAN. I hope the Senate will consent to vote upon the amendments in gross and let us take the yeas and nays on all the amendments together. Those who are in favor of the bill of course will vote against the amendments, and those who are not in favor of the bill of course will vote for the amendments. We might as well decide by one yea and nay vote upon the amendments in gross.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Shall the amendments be taken in gross?

Mr. SARGENT. To that I have no objection.

Mr. EATON. I hope not. I hope the amendments will be taken singly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made, and the first amendment will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 4, before the word "wagoner," the Senate as in Committee of the Whole inserted the word "enlisted;" so as to read:

That there shall be allowed and paid to each non-commissioned officer, musician, artificer, enlisted wagoner, &c.

Mr. SARGENT. It is so obvious that that amendment is right that it ought to be adopted. No one can question that the Committee on Military Affairs, of which my friend is the honored chairman—I only regret that he is not to be hereafter—reported the bill with amendments, obviously for a good purpose.

Mr. LOGAN. I will say to the Senator that it is immaterial whether the word "enlisted" is inserted in this section or not. The reason the word was put in was to make the language a little more clear.

Mr. SARGENT. I trust my friend will not weaken my confidence in the Military Committee.

Mr. LOGAN. I hope the Senator has confidence in the committee, his votes, however, do not show it.

Mr. SARGENT. Sometimes.

Mr. LOGAN. I will say that if a person being a wagoner was a soldier, he would get a bounty anyhow, although he could not get it simply as a wagoner. The amendment would include enlisted wagoners, those who were enlisted not as soldiers but as wagoners, but who became then a part of the Army. By not putting the word "enlisted" in, I will say to the Senator, it would give less money, and therefore to leave the word "enlisted" out is just on his line of economy. I hope the amendment will not be adopted, for the reason that I think it might cause the bill to be lost.

Mr. SARGENT. The committee were in favor of the largest amount, then, whether right or wrong.

Mr. LOGAN. No, sir; the committee were not in favor of the largest amount. The committee were willing to give every man who was enlisted in the Army, whether as a teamster or as a soldier, who took the chance of his life, the same right. That is the reason for the amendment; but for the purpose of getting the bill through I desire that the amendment shall not be adopted, although I think it is just. It is not a material amendment, however.

Mr. DAVIS. I think it right and proper if the bill is passed to provide for the collection of additional revenues. Why? The chairman of the Finance Committee, who is not now in his seat, has stated more than once, I think, that additional means must be provided if this bill should pass, and that it would cost about $100,000,000; and the figures presented by the Senator from California bear out that statement.

Mr. LOGAN. Let me ask the Senator a question, which I think he will consider pertinent. Suppose the bill should pass and the means were not at hand to pay this money; the Government certainly would not pay it until it got the means. Therefore, if the means are not provided, the Government would only delay the payment until the means were provided. We do not need to provide the means, because that would defeat the bill. Congress may convene shortly, and then it could provide means if necessary.

Mr. DAVIS. I will ask the Senator, in return for his question, whether or not he desires the Government to be dishonored on account of the very soldiers whom he proposes now to protect, having them come to the Treasury to be told that there is no money there to pay them; or does he want the payment of other matters to be delayed?

Mr. LOGAN. I do not mean that the Government should be dishonored any more than the Senator from West Virginia. I think I have stood up for the honor of the Government as much as the Senator from West Virginia, and perhaps if our records were compared it would be shown that I have been equal to him in that respect; but I want to put this question to the Senator: Did the Senator last night, when he was defending the payment of mail contractors who went into the confederate army, make an attempt to provide the means for paying them, or did he simply vote for the appropriation without any means being provided?

Mr. DAVIS. That money belonged to those men, and the Government has kept it in the vaults of the Treasury; it has been standing to their credit for sixteen years.

Mr. LOGAN. Just as the money in this case has belonged to the soldiers.

Mr. DAVIS. The Senator last night voted against paying those contractors.

Mr. LOGAN. Of course I did. I voted against it as I vote against every other fraud, or where I think there is a fraud.

Mr. DAVIS. Now, I will go on with what I was saying. The entire revenue of the country for last year from customs was $148,000,000, in round numbers; from internal revenue, $116,000,000. From those two sources nearly all the revenue comes. The two sums together, as you see, make about $260,000,000. According to the best estimates we have had, this bill will take $100,000,000 out of the Treasury.

Mr. LOGAN. Now I desire right here to say——

Mr. DAVIS. These figures seem to trouble my friend very much.

Mr. LOGAN. No, sir. I ask my friend to state whether an honest estimate ever given by any man makes this payment cost a hundred millions or one-fifth of a hundred millions?

Mr. DAVIS. We had an estimate read here this evening coming from the Department. More than once, when I was attacking the Treasury Department, showing that the figures were in the wrong, my friend said, "No, they are all right."

Mr. LOGAN. No, I never said any such thing.

Mr. DAVIS. Now the Senator comes and calls them in question.

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator puts words in my mouth.

Mr. DAVIS. The chairman of the Committee on Finance, who has these things especially in charge, has stated from his seat here several times that it would cost $100,000,000 to carry out this bill, and that whenever this bill passed additional provision must be made for the payment of the bounties to these soldiers.

Mr. LOGAN. I ask the Senator if he believes the statement which was read, immaterial from whence it came, to be true? Does he believe that there were over 2,640,000 soldiers in our Army? Does he believe that statement?

Mr. DAVIS. I have to take the official records that come from the Department. That is the only way we can get evidence. That evidence has come to us from an official source, from the Department of the Government and from the books of the Department, and I certainly would take that evidence as quick as I would take any statement that could come from any other source.

Mr. LOGAN. I ask the Senator if he believes any school-boy fifteen years old in the United States is ignorant enough not to know that there never were 2,640,000 soldiers in our Army?

Mr. DAVIS. Then the official records are mistaken. I suppose the Senator knows more than those in the Department know who sent the records here. I take it he knows more than they do. We must take the official figures and not the words of anybody.

Mr. LOGAN. I never take falsehoods.

Mr. DAVIS. I have said that additional means must be provided. When we take the revenue report of last year, which is the last official record we have, we find that while there ought to have been a sinking fund of about $34,000,000 in round numbers, there were only about eighteen or nineteen million dollars, so that there really was a deficiency last year in the Government; and if this additional amount is to be put upon them, of course there must be a larger deficiency. Something must go without being paid, or this appropriation must be provided for. If the Senator really means that these men shall have their money, and if the Government owes them any money, let him provide a way for paying them, not for having them rapping at the Treasury without being able to get money which we voted should be paid. We should not pass a bill here without providing means for payment. That is not the right way of doing business. We should go square to the mark and increase taxes and provide at once for raising revenue so as to get the money.

Something has been said about the soldiers and the republicans and the democrats. The Senator has said he did not believe there was a republican in this land who would oppose the bill that is now before the Senate. As was well said to him by the Senator from California, the President vetoed this precise bill, a bill perhaps in the same words, and it is not fair to presume that he did so before unless he would do so again. He knew that there was not money enough in the Treasury to pay it.

Mr. LOGAN. Will the Senator allow me to correct his language a little? I prefer to make my own speeches. I did not say that I did not believe there was a republican in this land who would oppose the bill, but I said I did not believe that there was a republican in this Senate Chamber who would oppose it, but I was mistaken. I did not say anything about a soldier not opposing it; I used no such loose language.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BLAINE. I dislike to interfere with this discussion, but I have an important conference report which I should like to present.

Mr. DAVIS. That is always in order.

Mr. BLAINE. I know it is in order; but I do not like to interrupt a discussion where there is a probability of a vote being taken.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be received.

Mr. BLAINE submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 4691) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, report that they are unable to agree.

J. G. BLAINE,
W. B. ALLISON,
WM. A. WALLACE,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

J. D. C. ATKINS,
ERASTUS WELLS,
CHAS. FOSTER,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. BLAINE. It was left to the committee in each House to state the points of disagreement rather than to embody them in the report. There were two points of disagreement—the large points, as they may be termed, in the Army bill as it came from the House. The first was the reduction of the Army to 17,000 men. On that the committee disagreed, but not so absolutely and pointedly as upon the second point; and, disagreeing so entirely on that, we rather left the first point unsettled. The House conferees took the ground that they would not under any circumstances consent to an Army appropriation bill unless the fifth section were retained, which directs by Congress what the President shall and shall not do with the Army in a given case. The Senate conferees were unable to yield that point, and therefore report to the Senate that they have so acted. I have no hesitation in saying myself that I think the loss of the Army appropriation bill would be a very small evil compared with the assumption by Congress of the power to direct in cases of that kind what the President of the United States as Commander-in-Chief shall or shall not do. I do not know what might be done in a new conference—of course one will be in order—but differing on these two points, and failing to come to anything like an agreement on the second point, the disagreement being just as absolute as it could be, there was nothing left for us but to report to each branch the conclusions to which we had come, or to which we had failed to come; and there the matter stands.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. What do you propose?

Mr. BLAINE. I do not want to shut the door to any further conference; but I should dislike to see any conference that would indicate the slightest disposition on the part of the Senate to yield that point.

Mr. LOGAN. I do not think that Congress can amend the Constitution by an appropriation bill.

Mr. BLAINE. That was the ground which the conferees on the part of the Senate took; they thought it was not exactly in order to do it, and declined to recommend it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator move to insist and ask for another conference?

Mr. BLAINE. I would rather the new conference should be asked by the House.

Mr. WEST. Let the report go over.

Mr. BLAINE. Let it go over at all events for the present; it is privileged, and may be called up at any time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will lie on the table for the present.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 3349) granting a pension to Mrs. Rebecca C. Maxwell, widow of the late Colonel O. C. Maxwell, One hundred and ninety-fourth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

EQUALIZATION OF BOUNTIES.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 58) to equalize the bounties of soldiers who served in the late war for the Union.

Mr. ALCORN. Is an additional amendment to the bill now in order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Not unless it is touching an amendment on which a concurrence is asked. If it pertains to any amendment on which the Senate is to concur or non-concur, it is in order.

Mr. ALCORN. I wish to offer an amendment as an additional section to the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That would come last. The question is on concurring in the first amendment of the Committee of the Whole, which the Secretary will report.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 4, before the word "wagoner" the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, inserted the word "enlisted;" so as to read:

That there shall be allowed and paid to each and every non-commissioned officer, musician, artificer, enlisted wagoner, &c.

Mr. EATON and Mr. LOGAN called for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. WEST, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS.] If he were here he would vote in favor of this amendment and I should vote against it.

The Secretary concluded the call of the roll.

Mr. MORTON, (who had voted in the negative.) I am just reminded that I am paired with my colleague [Mr. MCDONALD] upon all polit ical questions. He was called away on account of sickness in his family, and perhaps this may be regarded as a political question. If it can be regarded in that way, I shall withdraw my vote.

Mr. HARVEY. Republicans have voted both ways on the question and I do not see how it can be considered political.

Mr. PADDOCK. I should like to inquire in what sense this can be considered as a political question.

Mr. MORTON. It ought not to be.

Mr. EATON. I do not think it is. General Grant vetoed the bill.

Mr. PADDOCK. It would be drawing it very fine to call it a political question.

Mr. SARGENT. I hope this will not be considered a political question. I do not wish to separate from my friend from Indiana on this question. The President vetoed the bill.

Mr. LOGAN. I think it will be a political question before many years.

Mr. MORTON. I do not withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 31, nays 19; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alcorn, Allison, Anthony, Bailey, Barnum, Bayard, Bogy, Booth, Cockrell, Cooper, Cragin, Davis, Dennis, Eaton, Gordon, Hereford, Johnston, Jones of Florida, Kelly, Kernan, McCreery, Maxey, Morrill, Norwood, Ransom, Robertson, Sargent, Saulsbury, Stevenson, Teller, and Withers—31.

NAYS—Messrs. Blaine, Bruce, Burnside, Cameron of Wisconsin, Chaffee, Clayton, Ferry, Harvey, Hitchcock, Ingalls, Logan, McMillan, Mitchell, Morton, Oglesby, Paddock, Patterson, Sharon, and Wright—19.

ABSENT—Messrs. Boutwell, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Christiancy, Conkling, Conover, Dawes, Dorsey, Edmunds, Frelinghuysen, Goldthwaite, Hamilton, Hamlin, Howe, Jones of Nevada, McDonald, Merrimon, Randolph, Sherman, Spencer, Thurman, Wadleigh, Wallace, West, Whyte, and Windom—25.

So the amendment was concurred in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next amendment will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, in the fifth line of the first section struck out the words:

Sailor and marine, including those borne upon the rolls as slaves and Indians.

The amendment was concurred in; there being on a division—ayes 29, noes 14.

The next amendment made as in Committee of the Whole was in section 1, line 10, before "wagoner" to insert the words "and enlisted," and in line 11 to strike out the words "sailor and marine."

The amendment was concurred in.

The next amendment was in section 2, line 3, before the word "wagoner" to insert the word "enlisted;" after the word "soldier," in the same line, to strike out the words "sailor or marine;" in line 6, before the word "child," to strike out the word "minor;" in line 7, after the word "artificer," to insert the word "enlisted," and in line 8, after the word "soldier," to strike out the words "sailor or marine;" so as to make the section read:

That in case of the death, either before or after the passage of this act, of any such non-commissioned officer, musician, artificer, enlisted wagoner, or private soldier, the allowance and payment shall be made to his widow, if she has not remarried, or if there be no widow, or she has remarried, then to the child or children of such deceased non-commissioned officer, musician, artificer, enlisted wagoner, or private soldier.

The amendment was concurred in.

The next amendment made as in Committee of the Whole was in section 3, line 3, before the word "wagoner" to insert the word "enlisted;" in the same line, after the word "soldier," to strike out the words "sailor or marine," and in line 6, before the word "laws," to strike out the words "or State;" so as to make the section read:

That in computing and ascertaining the bounty to be paid to any non-commissioned officer, musician, artificer, enlisted wagoner, or private soldier, or to his proper representatives, under the provisions of this act, there shall be deducted therefrom any and all bounties already paid under the provisions of any United States laws.

The amendment was concurred in.

The next amendment made as in Committee of the Whole was in section 5, line 5, before the word "laws" to strike out the words "or States;" in line 6, before the word "wagoner" to insert the word "enlisted;" in line 7, after the word "soldier" to strike out the words "sailor or marine;" and in line 8, after the word "made" to insert the words "except in case of the application of the widow or child or children;" so as to make the section read:

That every petition or application for bounty made under the provisions of this act shall disclose and state specifically, under oath and under the pains and penalties of perjury, what amount of bounty has been paid under the provisions of any United States laws to the non-commissioned officer, musician, artificer, enlisted wagoner, or private soldier, by whom or by whose representatives the claim is made, except in case of the application of the widow or child or children.

The amendment was concurred in.

The next amendment made as in Committee of the Whole was in section 9, line 2, after the word "artificer" to insert the word "enlisted;" and in line 3, after the word "soldier" to strike out the words "sailor or marine;" so as to make the section read:

That no adjustment or payment of any claim of any non-commissioned officer, musician, artificer, enlisted wagoner, or private soldier, or his proper representative, under the provisions of this act, shall be made, unless the application be filed within five years from the passage of the same.

The amendment was concurred in.

The next amendment made as in Committee of the Whole was to insert as an additional section the following:

SEC. —. That to enable the Treasury of the United States to meet the demand caused by the foregoing sections of this act, a duty of three cents per pound upon all coffee and ten cents per pound upon all tea imported into the United States shall be imposed from and after the passage of this act.

Mr. MORTON. In order to find out whether it is constitutional to originate a tax on tea and coffee in this body, I ask for the yeas and nays on concurrence in this amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SARGENT. I wish to say that I offered the amendment very well aware of the constitutional prohibition, and I would not vote for the amendment if I supposed it would pass finally in this Chamber; but I offered it in order to show, by the strongest argument which I could write, the tendency of this bill, that it was to bankrupt the credit of the United States, and that some extraordinary means should be taken by Congress, if Congress is to pass the bill, in order to prevent a depreciation of our credit. So far as I can—I suppose I cannot—I will withdraw the amendment.

Mr. LOGAN. I object. The yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. SARGENT. Very well; I shall vote against it. I have explained my motive.

Mr. MORRILL. Is an amendment in order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is to this amendment.

Mr. MORRILL. I offer a substitute for the amendment of the Senator from California. I move to strike out all after the word "that" of the amendment adopted as in Committee of the Whole and insert what I send to the Chair.

The words proposed to be inserted were read, as follows:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, authorized to issue United States bonds to the amount of $150,000,000, payable in thirty years from date, bearing interest at the rate of 4½ per cent. per annum, payable semi annually, or so much thereof as may be necessary to meet the expenditures authorized by this act.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President, I am about the last man who would advocate the killing of any bill that seemed to be for the purpose of doing justice to the soldiers of the late war, but this bill, instead of being a bill to equalize bounties, is wholly destructive of the theory of all bounties. It is a measure proposing increased pay; not bounties after the war has closed, and not in advance. It is undertaking to compute in money value the priceless services of our soldiers—an utter impossibility—and ignoring the honor and glory won. I suppose that if we are to pay this eight and a third dollars per month to every man who served in the late war, the amount of it would be easily computable, and it is vain for members here to represent that this is to involve only an insignificant sum.

Mr. LOGAN. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. MORRILL. I prefer to get through.

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator is certainly mistaken. It does not pay every man eight and a third dollars, but it pays those who did not receive the bounty that sum.

Mr. MORRILL. I understand the bill.

Mr. LOGAN. But the Senator said it paid every man.

Mr. MORRILL. It pays every man the sum of eight and a third dollars for all the time they served, short or long, during the whole period of the war, and then whatever has been paid of bounty is to be deducted. If you figure the amount that has been paid out for the full pay of the soldiers, and then deduct from it any bounty received, you will see what the addition is to the vast sum which was properly paid out to our soldiers. It adds at least 50 per cent. to the amount that was originally paid to them; and if you look at the report from the Paymaster-General's Office, showing the amount required to pay whatever is now to be appropriated by this bill you will see that it could not be less than $150,000,000.

The bill is grossly unjust to the States, as it will be seen that bounties which have been paid by States, and bounties paid by the United States, are equally to be deducted from this new pay of the soldiers. The United States are to be credited with and receive the benefit of all State bounties and not the soldiers. Vermont paid its soldiers, over and above the United States pay, from the outset to the end, $7 per month. This would be deducted, as I read the bill, from the accounts of her soldiers and the pittance left of one and one-third dollars would not enable them to pay the taxes required to meet the sum due to soldiers less liberally treated by other States. I do not complain that Vermont is not to get the money, but that her soldiers are not to get it, although it is manifestly unjust.

Again, I submit that the bill is wrong in principle. When we have a war and offer bounties we expect to get volunteers in consequence of those bounties, but if it shall be understood that at the close of any war men who are drafted, or who by any means come into the service, are to be treated equally well with the earliest and swiftest volunteers, it seems to me that it is very wrong in policy and principle.

I offer the amendment which has been read, because it struck me that the amendment proposed by the Senator from California was not legitimate for the Senate of the United States where revenue bills cannot be originated. Therefore, I propose some means by which the Treasury would be enabled to pay the amount estimated to be required if this bill should pass. There is another amendment that ought to be adopted if the bill is to pass, and that is to give at least one hundred or one hundred and fifty more clerks to the War Department. If there were a hundred more clerks added to the War Department they could not get through.

Mr. DAVIS. I beg to state to the Senator that the estimate read here this evening was two hundred and fifty clerks and four years' time.

Mr. MORRILL. I was stating it then very much within bounds. I was going to say that these accounts could not all be settled in the space of four years. We must provide not only the money but the help necessary to do the work or the bill will be no better than so much blank paper. If the bill should pass it would not redound very much to the benefit of the soldier. It would all, or a very large share of it, go into the pockets of claim agents. They are vastly more interested in promoting the passage of this bill than the soldiers. I have never had a soldier in my State to ask for this bill. They understand its character perfectly, and never regretted that President Grant refused to sign it when it was once before, in the last hours of the session, hurried through the Senate.

The idea that this bill would come up to-night was certainly foreign to my expectations. I had no such thought and am by no means prepared to discuss the measure. If I had been advised that it was to come up, I would have had here the documents that I had last year, which were carefully prepared by officers whose evidence would not be disputed in this body or anywhere else, showing that the estimates which I have presented here are not in any degree exaggerated. I hope if the bill is to be passed to-night that this amendment will be adopted, because the means should be promptly provided, if we are to pass a bill, to meet so heavy a draught upon the Treasury at once.

Mr. EATON. Mr. President, there seems to me a very considerable indifference to certain matters here. My friend, the Senator from California, has proposed an amendment to impose a tax upon tea and coffee in order to meet the demand of this bill. The senior Senator from Vermont has introduced a different amendment. Now, I apprehend at this hour, nearly half past eleven o'clock, and so near the close of the session, the best disposition that could be made of this bill would be to indefinitely postpone it, and therefore I make that motion.

Mr. LOGAN. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MORTON. Is that motion debatable?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is.

Mr. MORTON. The amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont to authorize the issue of $150,000,000 of bonds is perhaps in the right direction. It is, however, about five times too large. Perhaps the Senator supposed that the amount would of itself result as an intimidation. Here is another form of intimidation now proposed. The question is not, as I said before, whether we are to give a new bounty, to make a new contract, but it is simply to do an equity. The most of this sum would be paid to soldiers who failed to receive their bounty because they had not served their time out. If they were mustered out of the service one day before their time was out, because of the end of the war, or because of an honorable wound, they lost the bounty. Can we afford as an honest people to insist upon the letter of the law? It is "the pound of flesh;" that and nothing more. As a matter of private contract between man and man we could stand on no such principle as that. The merchant, the manufacturer, the farmer who would undertake to deprive his hired help of pay for their labor because by no fault of theirs they failed to work the last day, would be regarded as dishonorable. I want the attention of the Senator from Vermont to that point. I want to say to him that the man in private life who would attempt to deprive his hired help of their pay because through sickness or some cause, no fault of theirs, they failed to work the last day, would be considered dishonest. You do not change the principle when you apply it to a nation. As has been shown, the most of this back pay or bounty would go to those who failed to receive it because they were mustered out before the time their enlistment expired.

Mr. MORRILL. Does not the Senator admit that the account of every soldier would have to be opened?

Mr. MORTON. What is there in that? No, sir; not every one, not one-fourth, not one-fifth. But suppose it was so, I ask what difference that makes about it. Let us come right down to the simple point, can this nation afford to withold from the soldiers, the most of them poor, their bounty because the Government mustered them out of service, without fault of theirs, before the full expiration of the time? Now, there is the question; there cannot be any evasion of it.

Mr. LOGAN. If the Senator will allow me, I will call his attention to section 5, which shows that the Senator from Vermont is wrong:

That every petition or application for bounty made under the provisions of this act shall disclose and state specifically, under oath and under the pains and penalties of perjury, what amount of bounty has been paid under provisions of any United States laws.

So that, if the man received his bounty, he cannot make an application under this law without subjecting himself to the penitentiary.

Mr. MORTON. If any soldier has received his bounty the Government has got his receipt. There has been no double payment.

Mr. LOGAN. If he has been paid, no application can be made under this bill.

Mr. MORTON. The whole matter is well guarded. It may take two hundred and fifty clerks, but I do not believe it will take one hundred more. I understand the Senator from West Virginia to say it will take two hundred and fifty clerks for four years. If it is to be distributed through four years, it will not fall very heavily in one year. If it will take four years to run it through, it will not come like an avalanche on the Government. There will be a vast amount of detail which will cost something in the way of clerk hire; but when my friend talks about economy, I want to say to him that his party have spent in the way of investigations for the sake of making political capital ten times the amount in the last year that it will cost in the way of clerk hire to make up these accounts.

Mr. WITHERS. What has the Senate spent in investigations?

Mr. MORTON. One investigation may force another. I am not saying we should refuse to investigate because of the cost. I shall not stop now to vindicate the propriety of the investigations made by the Senate; but I am saying that the investigations that have been made by the House of Representatives, the most of which have been utter failures, have cost ten times the amount that all the additional clerk hire will come to in order to carry out this bill.

This is perhaps the last time—it is certainly the last time this session, and it may be for a good while—that this claim can be presented; but, as I said before, it will not die; it will live in the hearts of the men to whom it is coming, and not only so, but in the hearts of the whole people. It is bound to come, and, as I said before, those who oppose it will get credit for the refusal, and those who finally pay will get the credit for that. It is a simple matter of justice, as plain as anything can be. Shall a man be deprived of his bounty, a small sum of money, because the war ended before his time was out, or because, on account of an honorable wound, he was mustered out of the service? As well deprive the hired man of his pay for a year because on the day before the year was out he received a fall and broke a limb and could not work his time out.

O, no, Mr. President, the objections to this bill will not bear daylight at all. I should like to see a vote taken on the motion made by the Senator from Connecticut, [Mr. EATON,] a fair and square vote. Let us not dodge this by amendments. Let us vote on the main question.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President, if the simple purpose is to do equal and exact justice to all those who have exposed their lives in the defense of their country, I think that the Senators who are so earnest in the advocacy of this bill will not object to the amendment which I send up to the desk, which is to amend the law providing for the pensions of the soldiers of the war of 1812 as additional sections.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That amendment is not in order at this time. The question is on the motion to postpone the bill indefinitely, upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BLAINE, (when his name was called.) The Senator from Georgia [Mr. GORDON] was called on important business to the House just now, and I agreed during the few minutes he might be absent to pair with him. If he were here he would vote "yea," and I should vote "nay" on this motion.

Mr. WEST, (when his name was called.) I am paired on this subject with the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS.] If present he would vote to postpone, and I should vote against it.

Mr. WALLACE, (when his name was called. I am paired with my colleague if this is a party vote.

Several SENATORS. It is not a party vote.

Mr. WALLACE. Very well.

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 31, nays 25; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alcorn, Anthony, Bailey, Barnum, Bayard, Bogy, Booth, Christiancy, Cockrell, Cooper, Cragin, Davis, Dennis, Eaton, Hereford, Johnston, Jones of Florida, Kelly, Kernan, McCreery, Maxey, Morrill, Norwood, Ransom, Robertson, Sargent, Saulsbury, Stevenson, Teller, Wallace, and Withers—31.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Boutwell, Bruce, Burnside, Cameron of Wisconsin, Chaffee, Clayton, Conkling, Dawes, Dorsey, Ferry, Harvey, Hitchcock, Ingalls, Logan, McMillan, Mitchell, Morton, Oglesby, Paddock, Patterson, Sharon, Wadleigh, Windom, and Wright—25.

ABSENT—Messrs. Blaine, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Conover, Edmunds, Frelinghuysen, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Hamilton, Hamlin, Howe, Jones of Nevada, McDonald, Merrimon, Randolph, Sherman, Spencer, Thurman, West, and Whyte—19.

So the bill was postponed indefinitely.

CHARLES L. SCOTT.

Mr. STEVENSON. The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 4313) to remove the political disabilities of Charles L. Scott, of Alabama, have directed me to report it back without amendment, and I ask for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed by a two-thirds vote.

REPORT OF MONETARY COMMISSION.

Mr. ANTHONY. The Committee on Printing, to whom was referred a resolution to print 10,000 copies of the report of the monetary commission, created by the joint resolution of August 15, 1876, together with the evidence and accompanying documents, have instructed me to report it back with amendments. The amendments reduce the number from 10,000 to 5,000. I ask for the present consideration of the resolution.

By unanimous consent, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution. The amendments of the Committee on Printing were to strike out "3,000" and insert "1,500," and to strike out "7,000" and insert "3,500;" so as to make the resolution read:

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring,) That 1,500 copies of the report of the monetary commission created by the joint resolution of August 15, 1876, together with accompanying evidence and documents, be printed for the use of the Senate; and 3,500 for the use of the House of Representatives.

Mr. BOGY. The original resolution provided for the printing of three thousand copies for the use of the Senate and of seven thousand copies for the use of the House. The Committee on Printing has cut down these numbers one-half. I think the number should not be reduced for the reason that I have myself received many letters inquiring for this report. It may not be a very able report; I do not say that it is an able report; but it contains a great many very important facts.

A commission was appointed by the Senate and House at the last session to examine into the subject. This commission has devoted to it a long time, a vast amount of labor, and has sent abroad for a great deal of information from every part of the world pretty much. This report contains statistics and information of absolute necessity and of the very greatest importance. It contains the only correct returns ever obtained of the production of our own mines. I know, from the number of letters and telegrams that I have received, that there will be a very great anxiety to obtain the report. I know that it is a report of very great importance, although it may not be a very able document. I do not pretend to say how that is; it must stand on its own merits in that regard.

I am very sorry to see the number cut down. We print every day here documents of little importance, by the thousand and the ten thousand.

Mr. SAULSBURY. We report enough.

Mr. BOGY. I know that my friend from Delaware if he could cut it down to five hundred or two hundred and fifty would do it. I do not deny that he may be a good judge of silver, and a good judge of many other things, but I do not know that my friend is a good judge of the quality or the quantity of the printing which this country requires. I think this is very small economy, and I do hope the original resolution will be sustained; that is, three thousand copies for the Senate and seven thousand for the House.

Mr. ANTHONY. It was almost impossible to make the estimate required by law in this case, and we were obliged to gather our data from the opinion of the members of the commission as to the length of the document, and we estimate that it will cost about a dollar and a half a copy; so that the cost under the original resolution would be about $15,000, while under this, as amended, it will be about $7,500. Of course there is a great demand for books that are given away; but anybody who desires this book can get it by sending the cost of it to the Public Printer in advance of its publication.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I am sure the Committee on Printing would have been very happy to have gratified the Senator from Missouri and all persons interested in this report. Our reason for cutting down the number of this report to be printed was not because the report did not contain valuable information, but because it is utterly impossible for the committee to report in favor of printing everything that is desired. We think we have been extremely liberal to the commission that made this report, and I am sure no member of the committee wished to do any injustice to the commission that made this report. We think we have been extremely liberal in granting them five thousand copies of a report which costs $1.50 a copy. I am sure I have no disposition to do injustice to any committee or commission, but as a member of the Committee of Printing, knowing the vast expenditure which will necessarily follow unless we do restrict this printing, I felt bound to concur in this report to cut down the number.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to ask the Senator from Rhode Island what will be the size of this publication?

Mr. ANTHONY. It will be in two volumes, about four hundred pages to a volume. That is as near as we can estimate it.

Mr. COCKRELL. About what is the estimated cost?

Mr. ANTHONY. A dollar and a half a copy.

Mr. LOGAN. How many thousand copies are provided for the Senate?

Mr. BOGY. Fifteen hundred; which will give to each Senator about twenty copies. I have had demands already for more than fifty copies.

Mr. LOGAN. How many for the House?

Mr. BOGY. Thirty-five hundred for the House.

Mr. LOGAN. Only five thousand altogether.

Mr. BOGY. It is perfectly ridiculous.

Mr. LOGAN. That would pay the bounty for several soldiers. Here is a report in two volumes without a bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Committee on Printing.

Mr. BOGY. I hope the amendment will not be agreed to.

The CHIEF CLERK. The amendment is to strike out "3,000," where it first occurs, and insert "1,500," and to strike out "7,000," and insert "3,500."

The amendment was agreed to, there being on a division—ayes 25, noes 14.

The resolution, as amended, was agreed to.

OREGON ELECTORAL VOTE.

Mr. ANTHONY. I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the resolution, reported yesterday, for printing additional copies of the report of the Committee on Privileges and Elections upon the Oregon electoral case.

Mr. LOGAN. I want to call the attention of the Senator from Rhode Island to one thing, and it is a matter in which I think the Senator is interested as well as others. Inasmuch as we have just agreed to print five thousand copies of the report of the silver commission—a report in two volumes, without a bill—in order to make the report complete, I desire to have the Senate take up the silver bill.

Mr. ANTHONY. I insist on my motion.

Mr. LOGAN. I ask that the Clerk read that bill, and I will then move to postpone all other orders to take up that bill, and I will ask a vote of the Senate upon it.

Mr. DORSEY. I ask the Senator from Illinois to yield to me a moment.

Mr. LOGAN. I cannot yield now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Rhode Island, to take up the resolution which he has named.

Mr. KERNAN. That resolution refers to a very long report, a report made before all the evidence was taken, and I do not think it is such a report that it is necessary to have five thousand copies of it.

Mr. LOGAN. I think we ought to have as many reports printed on the Oregon question as on the silver question. Both are about alike. There is no bill in either case.

Mr. KERNAN. I suppose the silver question is the more important, certainly for the future. I voted for printing five thousand copies of that report. I suppose the ordinary number of copies has been printed of this report, and I think that ought to be enough.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. KERNAN. If this report is to be printed, I desire, as part of my remarks, to ask the Clerk to read a portion of the testimony taken since the report was made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on taking up. That does not open the merits to discussion.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. SAULSBURY. The usual number of this report has been printed. There are so many special committees of both Houses, that if we undertake to print five or ten thousand copies of all the reports that are made we might just as well appropriate two or three million dollars more than we have appropriated to carry on the Government Printing Office. If we do not put some restriction about this continual printing, we had better make very liberal appropriations to carry on the Printing Office. This report has been printed already in the RECORD; it has gone out in every RECORD that was printed at the Printing Office on the day on which it appeared; and now the proposition is, after printing the usual number, to print five thousand extra copies of this Oregon report. It has had its day; the report has accomplished all the purposes, I suppose, it was designed to accomplish; and now it is to become a precedent for printing an equal number of all the reports that have been made by all the committees. I think we ought to have some view to economy in reference to printing.

Mr. MITCHELL. The Senator from Delaware says this report has been printed in the RECORD and has gone out. The Senator is mistaken about that. If objection had not come from the other side of the House when it was proposed to print the report in the RECORD, it would have been printed in the RECORD, and the probabilities are that there would have been no resolution introduced for additional copies. But the Senator from Delaware will recollect, and the Senator from New York, my colleague on the committee, will remember, that when this report was made, a week or some ten days ago, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, it was proposed by the member of the committee making the report to have it printed in the RECORD just as every such report made from different committees heretofore in both Houses at the present session had been printed. Objection was made by the Senator from New York and by other Senators against printing the report in the RECORD. A discussion ensued. I was compelled to leave the Senate Chamber to go before the electoral commission and had to abandon the discussion. The matter went over, and the report was not printed in the RECORD; while in the RECORD of the very next morning I found that a voluminous report made by a committee of this Congress in regard to the condition of affairs in South Carolina was printed at length. I say, too, that every political report made at the other end of this Capitol has been printed in the RECORD. If now this report could be printed in the RECORD, so far as I am concerned, I would abandon every effort to have additional copies. But I think it is unfair and unjust to have the reports of one branch of Congress, so to speak of one political party, inserted in extenso in the RECORD, while, when the other party propose to have their reports printed, objection is made. It is not right. I appeal to the Senator from New York, who is usually fair, whether that is proper or right.

This is not my resolution; it is a resolution reported from the Committee on Printing. They report in favor of five thousand additional copies of this report; and I appeal to my friend from New York to withdraw his objections and allow the extra numbers to be printed. I will state that I am in receipt of applications for it every day. Not a day has elapsed since that report was made that I have not been in receipt of from one to as many as ten or twelve letters asking for copies of the report. I have four copies of the report, all told. We had a long investigation; a great deal of testimony was taken; a report has been made, as my friend from New York knows, containing what the majority of the committee claim is a fair statement of the facts in the case. No minority report has been made. If the statement of the report in reference to the facts is not a correct one, then my friend from New York, representing the minority of the committee, had the right to put in the shape of a minority report his dissent. He has done so verbally by stating that he dissents, in general terms. But wherein or how?

I think it is no more than fair that a reasonable number of copies of the report and of the testimony—because the resolution includes both—should be printed, in order that they may go to the country and that it may judge of the merits of the controversy. The resolution only provides for five thousand, the Committee on Printing has reported in favor of it, and I insist that the resolution ought to be adopted.

Mr. KERNAN. Mr. President, now I am appealed to to be fair; and I always want to be fair. But first, with reference to reports being printed in the RECORD, I have not assented to any one being so printed. I understood that the reason why some reports did get printed in that way was because the appropriation for public printing in any other form than the RECORD had run out, and some did on that account go into the RECORD. Why should this report now be printed in the RECORD? Judging from its length, I venture to say that no man can read it through in less than two hours. I do not say that in depreciation of it, but as a very good reason why it should not be put into the RECORD.

Again, I oppose the printing of any extraordinary number of this report in this form. It is certainly not intended to be used for any practical purpose, in the Senate or elsewhere, that I know of. It is a report that in my judgment is unjust in the imputations that it casts upon some gentlemen. My friend says that I might make a minority report. This evidence was closed on Wednesday night, and how could I make a minority report without sifting the evidence? Night and day since then we have been continuously occupied. I dissented from the report; I said frankly I thought it was a report that was unjust in its conclusions, and I cannot believe that the object in printing it is for aught else than, as my friend alluded to other matters in that connection, as a "political document."

Mr. MITCHELL. I will state to my friend from New York that the principal object I have in asking the additional number is to be able to answer to some reasonable extent the demands which are made upon me from all over the country.

Mr. KERNAN. I do not think we can spend the money of the Government properly in distributing reports which are not useful unless it be to throw imputations upon some persons. This report throws imputation upon a gentleman who sits here, and, as I understand it, unjustly. It throws imputations upon others in Oregon, as I think, unjustly. It throws aspersions upon certain parties without naming them, which I think are unjust. I, for one, in this matter, I trust, will act as I would if the effort was made on our side to print a political report; namely, be guided by the usefulness of it. When this investigation commenced, it was commenced, undoubtedly, in the expectation that it would bear upon the counting of the electoral vote. Before the report of my friend was made, the tribunal to which the question was to go had held, not only that it would not hear evidence which was taken by either of the committees, but that it would not hear witnesses brought before it. Therefore any usefulness of it was out of the question, so far as concerned the counting of the vote. Now, to say that we will make an appropriation to have it printed, without any public necessity for this large amount, I think, is a bad principle. I say it without the least feeling. I do not think it is a thing that ought to be done.

Mr. MITCHELL. The Senator from New York says that the report, in his judgment, casts unjust aspersions upon certain persons, some that are here and some that are elsewhere.

Mr. KERNAN. I understood that the question was on taking up, and I had no right to debate the merits of the report. I do not object to its being taken up. If it is taken up I want to say something.

Mr. MITCHELL. I do not wish to debate the merits, but simply to reply in a word. The Senator says in his judgment the report casts unjust aspersions. If that is true, it is only a matter of justice to the persons to whom my friend from New York refers that the testimony and all the testimony in the case, which as a matter of course could not be embodied in the report, should be puplished, in order that people may judge for themselves as to whether the report is unjust or not.

Mr. KERNAN. Allow me to say that I do not make objection to printing a reasonable number of copies of all the testimony. If there is included that which was placed in my hands yesterday morning, I make no objection.

Mr. MITCHELL. That is all that the resolution does: provide for printing five thousand copies of the report and testimony.

Mr. KERNAN. The resolution calls for the printing of your report made long before the testimony was closed. The printing of the evidence I do not object to. I think that it is just to print such number of copies as is deemed proper of the evidence taken.

Mr. MITCHELL. The Senator from New York says that my report, as he calls it, was made long before the testimony was closed.

Mr. KERNAN. Some ten days or two weeks.

Mr. MITCHELL. All there is in that is this: No witness was examined at all after the report was passed upon by the whole committee, with the exception of W. T. Pelton, and he had opportunity, time and again, to come upon the stand and close his examination before the report was made; but he kept back, I think I am justified in saying held back, until after the report was submitted. Then he comes into the Committee on Privileges and Elections and desires the privilege of submitting a carefully prepared written statement. That is the only statement that was taken by the committee after the report was submitted. That statement is here; that is published with the testimony and can go for what it is worth. If that statement of Colonel Pelton condemns the report, then I am willing it shall be condemned.

Mr. KERNAN. Allow me now one word. When that report was brought in here, William T. Pelton was not subpœnaed by you; I had no intimation that he was to be examined by you. He was then, however, under subpœna to appear. He came up one evening and we could not examine him; and then, when you told me you did not intend to examine him, I asked him to come before the committee, and then he did come at my solicitation.

Mr. MITCHELL. Yes, Mr. President, and after he was subpœnaed he was notified, day after day for one mortal week, to come up to the committee and be examined, and he did not come and kept away. Finally he did come up one night. He was notified to be here at half past seven o'clock, and he put in an appearance at half past nine o'clock, when the committee could not proceed with the examination. But prior to that time, let me state to the Senator from New York—and I did not wish to refer to it, and would not have mentioned it if he had not alluded to the fact that the report was made long before the testimony was closed—he had been notified, not only in the regular way, to appear at a certain time, but time and again a like notice was sent to him at his hotel by myself to come at certain hours and submit to the examination, and he failed to come until the time referred to by the Senator from New York, when, instead of coming at half past seven o'clock, the time for which he was notified, he came, as my friend from New York knows, at half past nine o'clock at night. That is all there is of that.

Mr. KERNAN. I do not wish to enter into any discussion of facts; but I will say to my friend now, in all candor, that I think he has allowed himself to get suspicious. We were running up to the committee-room when we could get an opportunity. Colonel Pelton was under subpœna. I understood he was ready to come in at any time. He did come here sometimes when we could not go to the committee-room or when we had some one else there on some other question. He was in the city and told me that at any time that he could be examined he would attend. I am sure the Senator cannot say that he sought to avoid examination, when he was not out of the city at all, was at his hotel here, and was ready to be examined. I am sure I rested on the idea that he had been examined by you, and only when you said you would not examine him was it that I had him examined.

Mr. MITCHELL. I do not care to pursue it further.

The CHIEF CLERK. The resolution as referred to the committee was in the following words:

Resolved, That 5,000 additional copies of the evidence and report in the case of the Oregon electoral vote be printed for the use of the Senate and House.

The Committee on Printing report to strike out the words "and House."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SAULSBURY. As a member of the Committee on Printing, I did not agree to any portion whatever of the report. Now look at this matter in a practical light. This is but one subcommittee of the Committee on Privileges and Elections. The subcommittee of which I was a member went to New Orleans and took somewhere in the neighborhood of between three and four thousand pages of testimony. We have prepared a report and the views of the minority. We all think our babies pretty; there is no question about that, and I say to the Senator from Oregon that while he has prepared a report, and while I prepared to a certain extent the expression of the views of the minority, all which we may flatter ourselves will be read with great interest by every person, his report and the testimony which he has taken and the report which I have had the honor to help in part to make and the testimony which I have had the honor in part to help take will scarcely be read by anybody outside of the penitentiary in one week from to-day. What is the use, therefore, of incurring this expense? Another subcommittee, of which the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. CAMERON] was chairman, went to South Carolina, and another subcommittee, of which the Senator from California [Mr. SARGENT] was chairman, went to Florida. All these subcommittees have made reports, and voluminous testimony has been taken. The cost of the publication of five thousand copies of this will be a very considerable tax upon the Government. Let the usual number be printed and I will venture to say that there are not as many men one week from to-day who will read the reports we have made as there will then be numbers of the copies of the reports made. There is no use in incurring this expense. I was very anxious to see the work in which I was engaged distributed through the country; but what advantage will it be?

Mr. MITCHELL. I do not think very much.

Mr. SAULSBURY. My impression is that neither the report of the Senator from Oregon nor the report which I have helped to get out will be read by a dozen men in a week from to-day, however important documents they may be, however well calculated to transmit our names to posterity. Perhaps if some man was shut up in a penitentiary he might do us the honor to read them; but I doubt very much whether he would do that.

Mr. KERNAN. Mr. President, this report was made before all the evidence was taken, and evidence has been subsequently taken. I ask leave, as part of my remarks, to read the testimony given by Mr. Pelton on pages 494, 495, and 496, as I have marked it.

Mr. MITCHELL. Had we not better have all the testimony read, so as to go into the RECORD?

Mr. KERNAN. I have no objection at all; but I want the part read that I have marked.

The Secretary read as follows:

WASHINGTON, February 28, 1877.

W. T. PELTON recalled.

By Mr. KERNAN:

Question. State what knowledge you have as to whether Governor Tilden did or did not know anything about or see the telegrams from Oregon in reference to money?

Answer. He did not know anything about them in any way whatever. He never saw one of them or knew anything about them at all.

Mr. LOGAN. Let it go in the RECORD, unless you desire to have it read.

Mr. MITCHELL. I have no objection, if the cross-examination goes in too.

The Secretary continued the reading, as follows:

Q. If you have a statement to make in regard to the matter, you can now make it.

A. I have prepared the following statement:

It has been stated that money has been used to purchase an elector in Oregon. It is due to myself, as well as to the democratic party, to state the facts in regard to that matter.

Telegrams addressed to me have been put in evidence; other telegrams, dated in New York, without any signature and without any proof that they came either from me or any person connected with the national committee, have also been put in evidence. These telegrams, without regard to dates, have been published, following each other in the order best suited to the purposes of those who had the examination of them.

Telegrams came every day following the election in large numbers from all parts of the country, addressed sometimes to myself and sometimes to members of the committee. Wherever they were addressed, they were delivered during the day at 59 Liberty street, and during the night at the Everett House, in accordance with directions given at the telegraph offices. These telegrams were opened by such officer or member of the committee as was present at the time; therefore these telegrams were not received at 15 Gramercy Park, even when directed there; nor were the answers sent from there. None of the Oregon cipher telegrams were delivered at 15 Gramercy Park, nor were the answers to them sent from there. Governor Tilden never saw or knew of any of the cipher telegrams received from or sent to Oregon. The famous "Gobble" dispatch was not received at 15 Gramercy Park, and was never seen by Governor Tilden, or its contents known to him.

Telegrams and letters addressed to me were often opened, read, and answered by others without my seeing them or knowing of them. Many of the telegrams put in evidence purporting to come from Oregon, and addressed to me, I do not recognize as having come to my knowledge, and they were never received by me. As my time was fully occupied, cipher telegrams were not usually translated by me, as it was very slow and tedious work. They were often defectively translated, and their meaning often imperfectly ascertained, and sometimes they could not be read at all. The telegram put in evidence dated Portland, Oregon, November 28, and purporting to be signed by Mr. Patrick and Senator KELLY, was never translated or read by me as translated before the Senate committee, and never understood by me to contain a proposition to purchase a republican elector or any other elector. I never sanctioned or encouraged the furnishing of money to purchase an elector in Oregon, or countenanced any such use of money, nor did any one else with my knowledge. My purpose was to supply to the democratic committee of Oregon, who claimed they were poor, sufficient funds to meet the just and legitimate expenses of sustaining their rights.

Whatever contingent arrangement there was suggested in the telegram from New York dated November 29, which seems to me to be very imperfectly translated, referred to payment of lawyers' fees. These fees seemed to be very large. Senator KELLY and Mr. Bellinger both testify that the answer to their requisition for money, dated November 28, was a distinct and definite refusal. That is my own recollection.

The three republicans who were candidates for electors were all fully examined before the Senate committee, and it is not pretended to be shown that there was a suggestion even made to either of them by any one to influence their action or the action of either one of them.

* * * * * * *

And Mr. Bellinger, the chairman of the democratic State committee, and Senator KELLY, have both testified that no money was applied for, proposed to be furnished, or intended to be used, or used for any such purpose.

Mr. Patrick was totally unknown to me at the time he went to Oregon. Dr. G. L. Miller, of Omaha, a member of the national democratic committee, had been telegraphed to go to Oregon. He not being able to go, found that Mr. Patrick was going to Salt Lake on his own business, and requested him to go on to Oregon, and he went. I have no recollection of the long telegram put in evidence, purporting to come from Portland, dated November 30.

Certainly it was never read by me as it is pretended to be now translated before the Senate committee. It does not appear, by the telegrams given in evidence, to have ever been replied to or any notice taken of its contents. It certainly never was assented to by me or by any one else to my knowledge.

The telegram from New York dated December 1, the next day, and put in evidence as if it were an answer to the telegram of the former day, treats all suggestions about money as if discarded, and inquires about convening the Legislature to provide for the vacancy in the office of elector.

I have never heard it intimated by any one that Governor Grover or any one else in office in Oregon was to be paid anything, or was to receive anything; and I never heard that Mr. Cronin was to be paid anything for expenses, loss of time, or for any other purpose, until long afterward, and never heard that any money was desired for such a purpose until I saw the evidence before the Senate committee.

If it be true that any improper use of money did in fact enter the mind of one man, it was utterly without authority, was never adopted or sanctioned by any one else, and was never acted upon by himself, and no suggestion of it was ever made to either of the parties to be influenced.

As I have before testified, so far as I am concerned, no money was ever furnished for any purpose whatever. The only transaction of which I am cognizant was for perfectly legitimate purposes, and even that credit was never used, and, as a matter of fact, the funds never left the city of New York.

By Mr. KERNAN:

Q. Now I want to ask you just a few questions. Had Governor Tilden in any way notice or knowledge, or had any suggestion been made to him, that they wanted money to buy up an elector or anybody else?

A. No, sir; he never knew anything in regard to any matter connected with these telegrams until he saw them in the newspapers.

Q. Was he ever consulted in any way about furnishing money for legitimate expenses?

A. No, sir.

Q. There was no consultation with him; he had no knowledge at all of that fact, so far as you know?

A. No, sir; none whatever.

Q. For any legitimate purpose, or for any other purpose whatever?

A. Not for any purpose.

Q. Where were the telegrams addressed to Gramercy Park delivered?

A. They were delivered at the Liberty-street office and at the Everett House. You, sir, know, of course, that we had two offices. We had the Liberty-street office, where we were during the day, and the Everett House, where we were at night. They were delivered at the Liberty-street office, perhaps between ten o'clock in the morning and five or six in the afternoon, and during the night at the Everett House.

Q. Was that done in pursuance of instructions left at the telegraph office?

A. In pursuance of instructions left at the telegraph office that was done—the telegraph office, the office that delivered the message to us, because that was where the business was all done.

Q. Did the committee keep any account there?

A. At the telegraph office? Yes, sir.

Q. And they were charged?

A. They were charged to the committee at the office.

Q. As to Governor Tilden himself, had he any knowledge that those telegrams came to him by means of a key or dictionary, so that he could decipher those cipher telegrams?

A. Not the least.

Q. He had no key?

A. He had no key; had no knowledge of it whatever.

Mr. MITCHELL. I do not insist on that being read.

Mr. KERNAN. Let it be read as far as I have marked.

Mr. MITCHELL. I want the balance put in.

Mr. KERNAN. You can have read whatever you want to put in.

Mr. MITCHELL. I desire the rest to go into the RECORD. ["Agreed."]

The testimony ordered to be printed in the RECORD is as follows:

WASHINGTON, January 16, 1877.

WILLIAM T. PELTON sworn and examined.

By Mr. MITCHELL:

Question. Where do you reside?

Answer. In New York City.

Q. How long have you lived there?

A. I think about ten years.

Q. What is your business?

A. I have always led a business life, but not a professional one. I have been engaged in different kinds of business, at one time manufacturing.

Q. What have you been engaged in in the last year principally?

A. I have been attending a portion of the time to my own business, and I have had something to do with politics.

Q. In what capacity have you taken part in politics?

A. During the campaign I have been acting secretary of the national committee.

Q. The national democratic committee?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are you now the secretary of the national democratic committee?

A. I am still acting in that capacity.

Q. You are the secretary?

A. Strictly not, because Mr. Prince, of Boston, is secretary.

Q. But you have been the acting secretary?

A. Yes, sir. I wish to make that distinction.

Q. You had charge of the campaign as secretary as far as a secretary would have charge of it?

A. I had charge of certain things.

Q. Are you acquainted with Mr. Scott, a member of the committee?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What is his full name?

A. William L. Scott, of Erie, Pennsylvania.

Q. Are you acquainted with Messrs. Martin & Runyon, of Wall street?

A. I am not.

Q. Have you ever met Mr. Runyon?

A. I do not recollect ever having met him at all; I do not think I should know him if I were to see him; I do not know him at all.

Q. Do you remember calling at the office of Messrs. Martin & Runyon about the 5th or 6th of December last?

A. I do not.

Q. Do you remember telling Mr. Runyon that a person would call to see him that day?

A. No, sir. I never called at Martin & Runyon's office, to my knowledge.

Q. Did Mr. Martin ever call at your office?

A. Not that I know of.

Q. Do you know the firm of Martin & Runyon?

A. I know there is such a firm.

Q. Do you know where they are located?

A. I do not know where they are located. They are down town, I suppose, but I do not know their particular number.

Q. Do you state positively that you did not call at their office?

A. I state positively that I do not remember ever calling at their office.

Q. If you had called there you would be likely to remember it, would you not?

A. I should think so.

Q. Do you remember Mr. Runyon ever calling at your office or on you at any place in the city of New York, and having a talk with you about coming to Washington city to testify?

A. No, sir.

Q. You had no such conversation with him?

A. I had not.

Q. Were you at the meeting of the national democratic executive committee on the night of the 5th of December last, in New York, at their headquarters at the Everett House?

A. I was there nearly every evening about that time.

Q. Do you know Mr. Jordan, cashier of the Third National Bank?

A. I do.

Q. Did you see him that evening?

A. Yes, I think he was there. He was there frequently.

Q. Did you have any conversation with him?

A. I do not remember whether I had a conversation with him that evening or not. I frequently had conversations with him. He was frequently there, and we had conversations from time to time.

Q. Will you state positively that you do not know Mr. Enos Runyon, of the firm of Martin & Runyon, Wall street, New York?

A. Yes, sir; I state positively that if he was in this room I could not pick him out, from any knowledge I have of the man. I do not know the man at all, and never had any acquaintance with him.

Q. Do you not know that you had a conversation with Mr. Enos Runyon, of the firm of Martin & Runyon?

A. I do not.

Q. Will you say you did not?

A. I will say I do not remember any such conversation, positively. I have no recollection of ever seeing the man at all, or ever having any conversation with him.

Q. Do you know where his office is?

A. No, sir; I have said I do not.

Q. Have you seen in the prints recently a report of the fact that Mr. Runyon had testified here, and Mr. Martin, in regard to politics?

A. Yes, sir

Q. Do you now say you do not know where their office is?

A. I say I do not remember it at the moment. I might have seen it in the papers, and probably did, but I do not remember. I have a recollection that it is either in William or Wall street. That is all I know about it.

Q. Did you see a report in the papers that Mr. Runyon had testified that you called on him and told him a person would call to see him that day? Did you see any report of that in the newspapers?

A. No, sir; I did not see any thing of that kind.
Q. Did you see your name connected in any way with the testimony?
A. Yes, sir. If it is so it is not true.
Q. Do you know Mr. Scott?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Did you see him on the night of the 5th of December?
A. Yes, sir; I saw Mr. Scott every night during that period when he was in town.
Q. Did you and Mr. Scott and Mr. Jordan have any talk that night?
A. I do not remember that we had any talk together, simply we three. I do not remember that.
Q. Do you know Mr. Burton Harrison?
A. I do.
Q. How long have you known him?
A. Several years; five years, perhaps. I am not certain. It may be longer; perhaps six or seven years.
Q. Did you call at his office on the 6th of December last?
A. I was at his office, or at the office where he was.
Q. For what purpose did you go to see him?
A. I wished to talk with him in regard to a certain matter. Of course it has all been brought out here.
Q. What was it, state?
A. I was informed by Mr. Jordon that Mr. Runyon had been subpœnaed to come here, and during the day before Mr. Runyon was subpœnaed to be here Mr. Harrison came to my office, as he very often does, every day or two, and in the course of the conversation said he was coming over to Washington that night on business of his own. I then told him what Mr. Jordan had told me in regard to Mr. Runyon being summoned.
Q. What had Mr. Jordan told you?
A. He simply told me the fact that Mr. Runyon had been subpœnaed. I simply told Mr. Harrison that.
Q. When did Mr. Jordan tell you that?
A. The night before, I think.
Q. Where?
A. At my house. My recollection is that the subpœna was for Saturday, but I am not sure of it; and it was during Friday that Mr. Harrison was at my office, and it was Thursday evening that Mr. Jordan told me the fact.
Q. Do you recollect the day of the month Mr. Jordan told you this?
A. I could tell by looking at an almanac. I cannot remember. It was, I should say, a week ago last Thursday. This is what I should think at the moment.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Was it at your house that Mr. Jordan told you this?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Your dwelling-house?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. In the evening?
A. At night.
Q. Did Mr. Jordan go to your house to communicate that fact?
A. He told me that while he was there. Whether he came there on purpose I do not know.
Q. Was that his business?
A. I do not know; I suppose not.
Q. Did you advise him to consult Mr. Harrison then?
A. No, sir; because at that time I did not know Mr. Harrison was coming to Washington.
Q. After you found out that Mr. Harrison was coming to Washington did you go and advise Mr. Runyon to consult Mr. Harrison?
A. I did suggest to Mr. Jordan that Mr. Runyon should call on Mr. Harrison.
Q. Then did you notify Mr. Harrison that somebody would call on him?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. What was your purpose in notifying Mr. Harrison?
A. Simply because I told him that if he did not wish to see him I would call on him and let him know.
Q. Did you procure Mr. Jordan to advance $8,000 to be sent to Oregon, or any other sum of money?
A. No, sir; I did not procure him to advance any money at all.
Q. Did you have any conversation with Mr. Jordan in regard to transmitting money to Oregon?
A. Yes, sir; I did.
Q. When was that?
A. That was, I think, on the 5th; the 4th or 5th. It was about that time.
Q. What did you tell Mr. Jordan in regard to it?
A. I told Mr. Jordan that it was desirable that certain gentlemen in Oregon should have a credit for $8,000.
Q. How did you come to fix on that amount; what was the way in which you fixed upon it?
A. I can hardly tell why any particular amount was fixed on. The reason of the thing was that there was likely to be in Oregon extensive litigation growing out of the ineligibility of one of the electors. The case was an important one. We had supplied Governor Grover with all the decisions and all the opinions that were possible on the case. We felt that it was important, as the other side did. We had supplied him with all those, and we had done everything in that way which should give him our view of the law, we having first satisfied ourselves on the best legal authorities that our view of the law was correct. We supposed the case was so important, and there being a difference of opinion, that actions of various kinds would be taken.

By Mr. KERNAN:

Q. In the courts there?
A. In the State courts there, and that it was proper that those gentlemen should be enabled to protect and maintain their rights in the courts. Five thousand dollars we thought was too little and $10,000 was too much.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Had you had any demand from Oregon, from anybody there, for money?
A. No, sir; no demand.
Q. Had you had a request or suggestion?
A. For such purposes, yes, sir.
Q. For money?
A. My recollection is, not any specific amount.
Q. Whom did that come from? Who made that request or suggestion; what person in Oregon?
A. My impression is, the chairman of the State committee; I do not remember distinctly who it was, though.
Q. Do you remember his name?
A. Bellinger.
Q. Had that been done by telegraph or by letter?
A. I do not remember about that, which it was, whether by telegraph or letter.
Q. Had you received a request that very day, or the day before, for money, from Oregon? Did you not receive such a request by telegram?
A. I do not remember the time exactly.
Q. Did you receive it by letter or by telegram?
A. I should say by telegram.
Q. Did you receive more than one?
A. O, yes, sir, we had more than one. We had information from there in regard to the condition of things from time to time.
Q. Had you received any telegram that any suit had been commenced in court in Oregon?
A. No, sir.
Q. Or that there would be any? Had anybody telegraphed you that there would be a suit commenced?
A. I do not know that I can say they telegraphed that there would be; they apprehended it. I do not know they said there would be; nobody could tell what there would be.
Q. You had received no telegrams that there had been?
A. No, sir; I said that.
Q. Did you see Mr. Scott at the Everett House, at the democratic rooms, on the night of the 5th of December, the night before you made the arrangement with Mr. Jordan?
A. I think he was there.
Q. Did you have any conversation with him about this Oregon matter?
A. It was somewhat discussed with Mr. Scott and other gentlemen there.
Q. Did you ask Mr. Scott to endeavor to raise money for you?
A. I do not remember asking him to endeavor to raise the money. No, sir.
Q. Did you procure him then to give Mr. Jordan an assurance of repayment of money that might be advanced to the amount of $20,000?
A. Whatever assurance he gave him was the result of the talk we had; perhaps not a direct request for him to do it, but the result of the general talk which was had.
Q. Then whatever assurance he may have given was the result of the talk that you had there?
A. I do not say the talk we had alone there, but the talk we had had about these matters for days before. I do not know the first time Mr. Scott spoke to Mr. Jordan about it.
Q. When you spoke to Mr. Jordan about advancing this $8,000, did he say anything to you about giving security for it?
A. No.
Q. Was there any talk about that in any way?
A. Not on my part.
Q. Or on the part of the committee?
A. None. Mr. Scott, you are aware, is a member of the committee, and of the finance committee also, and had been, as I might explain to you, one of the active members of the committee. He was one of the active members, and was a gentleman who contributed money himself and who raised money from others, as is done by the few active men in every such committee.
Q. Had there been any money sent to Oregon before that?
A. Not that I know of.
Q. Had there been a draft sent?
A. Not that I know of.
Q. Had you heard of any such thing?
A. No, sir.
Q. By anybody?
A. No.
Q. Had you heard of any money being sent by express to Oregon?
A. No, sir.
Q. None at all?
A. None.
Q. Was this the first effort that was made on your part to send money there?
A. Yes, sir; it was the first thing I did about sending money.
Q. Was there any effort made afterward to send money there?
A. No, sir.
Q. In any other way?
A. No.
Q. There was not?
A. No, sir.
Q. Had you sent any person to Oregon before that time for the purpose of looking after that electoral matter?
A. No, sir; I never sent any one there.
Q. Did you know of any person being sent?
A. I knew of a gentleman going.
Q. Who was it?
A. Mr. Patrick was out there, and was in Oregon; I do not remember the exact day; but he had mining interests and mining business near there, part of the way, and went from there to Oregon.
Q. When did Mr. Patrick start there?
A. I do not remember exactly the time when he started.
Q. Was it along in November some time?
A. I should think it must have been in November.
Q. Who procured Mr. Patrick to go?
A. I can hardly say that any one procured him to go, because he was a man who was very much interested in politics himself, and was going near there, and thought he would go there.
Q. Was he not requested to go there by somebody?
A. I think that he had some conversation with one of our committee, who lives at Omaha, Mr. Miller.
Q. Did you correspond with Mr. Miller on the subject?
A. Mr. Miller wrote me that he had gone.
Q. Did he write you that he had gone to look after that matter?
A. That he had gone to Oregon to look after that matter; yes, sir. But all I wished to convey was that he did not go on purpose for that; that he has large interests at Salt Lake.
Q. Salt Lake is a long way this side of Oregon?
A. Yes; but not as far as New York is. He was partly on the way there.

By Mr. KERNAN:

Q. Was Salt Lake the place where he was going?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. And Miller wrote that he would go on to Oregon?
A. That is as far as I understand.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Had you written to Mr. Miller before that to get Mr. Patrick or some one to go?
A. No, sir, I had not.
Q. Had anybody?
A. No, sir.
Q. Had you telegraphed him?
A. I had not telegraphed Mr. Miller to ask anybody to go to Oregon at all.
Q. Did Mr. Miller, then, act on his own motion, without any suggestion from New York?
A. It had been suggested to Dr. Miller that he should go himself.
Q. And he procured Mr. Patrick to go? Did you send any money to Dr. Miller to pay Mr. Patrick's expenses?
A. No, sir; not that I know of.
Q. Was anything advanced to Mr. Patrick in any way?

A. No, sir.
Q. Do you know of his ever being paid since then?
A. No, sir.
Q. You have no knowledge of his having been paid since then?
A. No, sir.
Q. Do you know of anything about Mr. Dimon's having paid Kountze & Bros., on account of Patrick, for Ladd & Bush, $1,039 on the 15th of December?
A. No, sir; I know nothing about it.
The CHAIRMAN, (to Mr. KERNAN.) I have that account which I spoke about yesterday. I want to show it to you.
Mr. KERNAN. You did not ask Dimon anything about it.
The CHAIRMAN. I did not know that entry was there then.
Mr. KERNAN. I did not see it. I supposed he was going to be examined before he went back. I see there is the charge in the account of Ladd & Bush, Salem, Oregon.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. What arrangement was made to repay Mr. Scott for this expenditure?
A. No arrangement.
Q. Was Mr. Scott going to advance this money out of his own pocket?
A. Mr. Scott was in the habit of collecting, as I said before, and disbursing money for purposes of the campaign, as a member of the executive and finance committees, and, if this had ever been paid, it would have been one of these items; but it was never paid, and, of course, no one had anything to pay, as the credit never was availed of.
Q. Do you know whether Ladd & Bush or Ladd & Tilton in Oregon paid Mr. Cronin $3,000?
A. I do not know anything about it.
Q. Do you know how Mr. Dimon came to pay $2,000 to Mr. Cronin in New York?
A. No, sir; I know nothing at all, about it.
Q. You do not know how Mr. Dimon came to pay Mr. Patrick $1,039?
A. I do not.
Q. You say that this credit was not availed of in Oregon?
A. I say that because I was informed by Mr. Jordan.
Q. How else were those expenses paid?
A. That I do not know.
Q. You know of no other money that was sent to Oregon, directly or indirectly, than this $8,000?
A. No, sir; I do not know of any.
Q Have you heard of any since that money had been placed there from New York?
A. I do not know of any being sent.
Q. When you spoke to Mr. Jordan that morning, did you tell Mr. Jordan you wanted the matter kept secret or make any suggestion of that kind to him?
A. I do not remember the language I used. I presume that he did understand from what I said to him that it was not a matter to be talked about generally. That is usual in such matters.
Q. Had you got Mr. Jordan to do any business of that kind before—send money for you?
A. No, sir.
Q. To any other portion of the country?
A. I think he has made remittances of small amounts; I do not remember distinctly what now.
Q. Where did the national committee keep their account; in what bank or banking-house?
Mr. KERNAN. Do you mean an account kept in the name of the committee or in the name of some officer?
The CHAIRMAN. The account of the committee.
Mr. KERNAN. If they had one. You assume that there was one?
The CHAIRMAN. I suppose they must have had one.
Mr. KERNAN. I do not know myself.
The WITNESS. My recollection is now that in the name of the committee there was no account.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. In whose name was it kept?
A. I think, as I said before, there was no account kept in the name of the committee, no general account. Different members of the committee paid out money.
Q. In whose name was the account kept?
A. Mr. Scott paid out some money. I paid out some money.
Q. Where did you keep your account?
A. I kept my account at the Hanover Bank.
Q. Was the account of the money that you paid out kept there?
A. For these purposes you mean?
Q. Yes, sir.
A. Yes, sir; at the Hanover Bank.
Q. Was the most of the account kept in your name?
A. No, sir; I should say not. As I said, different persons paid money.
Q. In whose name was the account kept?
A. Mr. Edward Cooper paid out some.

By Mr. KERNAN:

Q. Is he a member of the committee?
A. Not a member of the committee.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Is Mr. Cooper the treasurer of the committee?
A. Mr. BARNUM is the treasurer.

By Mr. KERNAN:

Q. Senator BARNUM, of Connecticut?
A. Yes, sir; he is the treasurer.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Where did he keep his account?
A. That I do not know.
Q. Did not the money then have to pass through his hands? Was it not done in a business-like way? Did not the money pass through the hands of the treasurer in some way, or how many treasurers did you have?
A. The fact was that money was advanced, as in this case, by Mr. Scott, or at least guaranteed, and he would collect it when he could get it. You know how these things are done. The sums were not large enough to keep a bank account.
Q. When money was paid in and paid out, was not an account kept of it? Was it not done in a business-like way?
A. That would depend on who received it.
Q. I ask you that question, if, when money was paid in and paid out, there was not an account kept of it?
A. The check-books would show that.
Q. Whose check-books—those of the treasurer of the committee?
A. I should think so. I also said that Mr. Cooper paid out some money.
Q. The question I am asking is, whether, when Mr. Cooper paid out money, or you paid out money, or Mr. Scott paid out money, there was not an account kept of the amount that was paid out, if it did not go on the books of the committee in some way?
A. No more than it would be on the check books.
Q. On whose check-book?
A. Whichever check-book it was paid out on. I mentioned three names.
Q. Was there no account of the money paid in and the money paid out given to the treasurer of the committee?
A. Yes; information was given to him whenever he desired it.
Q. Suppose he did not know anything about it, he could not desire it. I am asking you now if the money that was paid into the committee and the money that was paid out was not done in form through the treasurer of the committee. Did you not communicate to him, when you paid out money, that you had done so?
A. Sometimes I did.
Q. Did you not always do it?
A. I cannot say that I did it in every case.
Q. Have you received money that you did not give him an account of?
A. Our accounts are not closed and settled up.
Q. Was the money sometimes paid to you instead of being paid to the treasurer?
A. Sometimes.
Q. How much money was paid to you?
A. I cannot tell you that; I do not know.
Q. Did you make arrangements to send money to any other State besides Oregon after the election on the 7th of November?
Mr. KERNAN. Do you think it worth while to go into that, because it leads to endless inquiry perhaps? There is only one case under consideration.
The CHAIRMAN. I am not going before the 7th of November; I am not proposing to invade your campaign secrets.
Mr. KERNAN. I suppose not; but as to other States, why go into them?
The CHAIRMAN. I was going to ask in regard to South Carolina.
The WITNESS. What is the question?

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. What do you know about money being sent after the 7th of November last to other States than Oregon?
A. Do you specify States?
Q. I will name South Carolina?
A. I do not know of any money being sent there.
Q. Directly or indirectly?
A. No, sir; I want to make one exception to that; that is, in regard to a few hundred dollars, perhaps, that have been paid on a little draft of one gentleman there, a draft of one hundred or two hundred or three hundred dollars.

By Mr. KERNAN:

Q. For what purpose was it drawn; do you know?
A. I do not know, except for his traveling expenses, &c., about the State.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. What was that man's name?
A. Kennedy.
Q. Do you know Colonel Haskell, of South Carolina?
A. I do.
Q. Did you have any correspondence with him since the 7th of November?
A. I should say there had been correspondence with him. I do not remember any special letter or telegram, but we are in communication with him. He is chairman of the South Carolina State committee.
Q Do you know of any money having been sent, directly or indirectly, to Louisiana since the 7th of November?
A. No, sir; I do not know of any being sent there, except, perhaps, a draft or two of a man who has been there, a clerk or somebody who happened to be down there; some small amount, I mean; a hundred-dollar draft, or two hundred dollars, for traveling expenses.
Q. Is that all your knowledge on the subject, one way or the other?
A. I do not remember anything else.
Q. You have heard of nothing else?
A. No, I do not know of anything being sent to Louisiana.
Q. How about Florida?
A. I do not know of any money being sent there at all, except what was for some expenses of the gentlemen who were down there visiting; the visiting committee, as they were called; and a small amount drawn for by those parties there for the traveling of their men in going about the State to examine the returns and that sort of business.
Q. That was after the election?
A. Yes, sir; you spoke of after the election.
Q. Certainly, I am inquiring as to after the election.
A. I want to say a word in regard to all those four States, including Oregon, that to my knowledge there has not been a dollar sent into either one of them for any purpose except for strictly legitimate purposes. I want to say that is my belief.
Q. Were there men down there traveling that you had sent down, agents of the committee, sent there since the election?
A. O, yes.
Q. Under the auspices of the committee, did gentlemen go to Louisiana?
A. Of course. There were a dozen or fifteen invited.
Q. Did the committee pay their expenses?
A. The committee did pay some of their expenses. I do not know whether they paid them all or not; but my impression is they paid only a part.
Q. Did they pay their expenses down there for witnesses' and attorneys' fees, and all that?
A. I think they did pay some of those.
Q. Do you know how much money they required in Louisiana?
A. I do not.
Q. Could you come within $10,000 of it?
A. I should think I could come within $10,000, because that is more money than we have had.
Q. I am asking you to come as near as you can to the amount.
A. I do not know how much the expenses were.
Q. There were fifteen or twenty gentlemen sent to Louisiana, were there not?
A. I do not remember how many there were. There were, I should think, about a dozen that went. There may have been fifteen; I do not remember. The number is a thing that has passed out of my mind.
Q. I am simply trying to get the aggregate of your expenses down there; I am not saying that they are not legitimate.
Mr. KERNAN, (to the Chairman.) Are you now speaking of the men called the visiting committee of the democrats and some additional ones too?
The CHAIRMAN. I suppose he refers to those gentlemen who went down there under the auspices or at the request of the committee after the election.
The WITNESS. I presume there were fifteen of them altogether.
Q. (By the Chairman.) In regard to Florida, how many were sent there?
A. I should think about seven or eight.
Q. Was the same arrangement made to pay their expenses and the expenses they incurred down there?
A. That is hardly fair to those gentlemen, because there was not any arrangement made to pay their expenses at all when they went away. I mean there was no arrangement.

Q. Did you not expect to do it? You did not expect them to go there at their own expense?

A. I do not think there was much expectation about it, they were got off so quick.

Q. Did you not pay the expenses?

A. Some were paid. All the expenses were not paid. I know there were certain gentlemen who paid their own. There were certain other gentlemen whose expenses were paid.

Q. Did you pay their expenses for subpœnaing witnesses and traveling about the State in Florida and Louisiana?

A. I do not know. I do not remember anything about that, because I never saw any account from them.

Q. How many were sent to South Carolina?

A. I should suppose half a dozen. Mr. Randolph was one, you remember.

By Mr. MITCHELL:

Q. I understood you to say that Mr. Jordan told you that this $8,000 had been paid back?

A. Yes, sir. Perhaps that was not exactly the language, but that was the idea. It had not been used; the credit had not been availed of.

Q. You refer in that to the $8,000 that was transferred to Oregon, through Mr. Dimon, on the 6th?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you not know that there were $8,000 sent to Oregon that were used, as a matter of fact?

A. No, sir; I do not.

Q. Do you not know that there were $8,000, aside from this $8,000 that you have referred to, transferred to a party in San Francisco for use in Oregon?

A. No; I know nothing about that.

Q. Have you not heard that there was from your committee?

A. No.

Q. Do you know a man by the name of W. C. Griswold?

A. No, sir.

Q. Have you not had dispatches from a man named Griswold?

A. I do not remember any such name Of course I might have had dispatches from such a man in the multitude of dispatches which have been received, but I do not remember the name.

Q. In your political arrangements and management of the campaign in Oregon—I speak more particularly about the matter before the governor since the election, in regard to the Watts-Cronin affair—did you not have correspondence by telegraph with a man by the name of Griswold?

A. Not that I know of. I do not remember such a name.

Q. Did you not receive dispatches, one or more, from Salem, Oregon, without any signature, urging that $8,000 must be provided there?

A. I do not remember anything about that. I stated awhile ago that there had been a request from there for some money.

Q. By telegraph?

A. Yes, sir; I stated that.

Q. You said your impression was that that request came from Mr. Bellinger, chairman of the committee?

A. I do not know definitely whom it did come from.

Q. Do you not know that you received a dispatch from Oregon urging or suggesting that $8,000 be telegraphed to Oregon, or placed to the credit of certain parties in Oregon, and that that dispatch had no signature?

A. I have stated that such a dispatch was received from Oregon.

Q. Was such a dispatch, without any signature, received?

A. That I do not remember. I do not remember whether there was a signature or not.

Q. Will you say that you did not receive a dispatch from Oregon, without any signature to it, suggesting that $8,000 be provided there at once?

A. No; I will not say that I did not, because in the multitude of dispatches we were getting from different persons it would be rather difficult to remember.

Q. Do you not know that $8,000 in money was transferred, in some way, from the political managers of your party in New York in the beginning of the month of December, about that time, to certain parties in San Francisco for use in Oregon?

A. No, sir; I do not know anything about it.

Q. Do you not know that that amount of money was placed in the London and San Francisco Bank, (limited,) in San Francisco, to the credit of Ladd & Bush, Oregon?

A. No, sir.

Q. You do not know that?

A. I do not.

Q. Were you not advised by some person or persons that that amount of money was placed in that bank, or in some bank in San Francisco, for the benefit of Ladd & Bush in Oregon?

A. No, sir.

Q. You do not know anything about that?

A. No, sir.

Q. You spoke about a Dr. Miller a little while ago?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where does he live?

A. Omaha, Nebraska. George L. Miller. He is one of the executive committee. He is a member of the national committee from Nebraska.

Q. Was not George L. Miller, of Omaha, Nebraska, instructed to telegraph to Oregon to postpone the counting of the vote until Mr. Patrick could get there?

A. No, sir; not to my knowledge.

Q. Did you have any communication with George L. Miller?

A. I have communication with him very frequently. I never told him anything of that kind.

Q. Did you have any communication with him by telegraph about the matter of the Oregon vote?

A. I asked him questions about the condition of the vote, and all that.

Q. What did you ask him?

A. When the condition of the vote immediately after the election was in doubt, as it was in the East——

Q. Did you request him to get a man to go to Oregon?

A. No, sir.

Q. Did you suggest that he get some person to go to Oregon?

A. No, sir.

Q. How did you find out about Mr. Patrick?

A. I did not find out that. I have given it exactly as it occurred. Do you wish it repeated?

Q. I do not wish you to repeat anything, but you have not answered this question: How did you first obtain knowledge of this man Patrick and when?

A. I stated that in this way: that Dr. Miller was requested to go himself, and knowing this gentleman was going part way there he asked him to go on, and it was arranged together that he should go on.

Q. Had Patrick left Omaha at that time, do you know?

A. No, sir; he had not left.

By Mr KERNAN:

Q. He was going to Salt Lake, and Miller got him to go on to Oregon?

A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. MITCHELL:

Q. Your understanding is that Mr. Patrick had no business west of Salt Lake?

A. I don't know that.

Q. You said that he had business part way, which was at Salt Lake?

A. I was so advised, and he might have had business in Oregon, for all I know.

Q. He was procured, then, to go on. What was he paid as expenses for going on?

A. I have no knowledge that he was ever paid anything; I do not think he was ever paid anything.

Q. Do you not know that the books of the managers, or some of them in New York, show that $8,000 were sent to Oregon and used for some purpose in connection with this controversy before the governor?

A. No, sir; I do not know any such thing. I have no knowledge that they show anything of the sort. If they do, they are wrong, in my judgment. I do not know that they show anything of the kind, and I never saw any such thing on them at all.

Mr. KERNAN. You know nothing about this transaction through Dimon?

The WITNESS. No, sir.

Mr. MITCHELL. I am not speaking of that transaction now. (To the witness.) Did Mr. Miller himself go west?

A. Not that I know of.

By Mr. MITCHELL:

Q. Do you know whether he went to San Francisco?

A. I know he did not, as well as I know anything that I do not see. I have no reason to suppose he did go.

Q. Had you any communication, by telegraph or otherwise, with parties in San Francisco in relation to this Oregon matter?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. With whom?

A. We had correspondence with Ex-Senator Casserly. Senator Casserly was asked to go to Oregon.

Q. For what purpose?

A. In regard to the legal aspects of the case. He is a lawyer, and he was asked to go there and present the case. For some reason he was unable to go; but I think he sent a brief up there.

Q. Who else was telegraphed to in San Francisco?

A. I do not remember. I rather think Governor Irwin was, but I am not sure about that. I have a recollection of that kind, although a dim one. I do not know that he was.

Q. Do you know of any money being paid by any of the managers of your party in New York to W. C. Griswold since the 7th of November?

A. No, sir.

Q. You do not know anything about that?

A. I never heard the name, to my recollection.

WASHINGTON, January 17, 1877.

WILLIAM T. PELTON'S examination continued.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. Do you know Mr. Smith Weed?

Answer. Yes, sir.

Q. Where does he live?

A. At Plattsburgh. He has an office in New York also, and does business as a lawyer in New York. He is a resident of Plattsburgh.

Q. Was he engaged in the active management of your campaign? Did he take an active part in it?

A. He was active in the campaign.

Q. Did he go to South Carolina after the election?

A. Yes, sir; he did.

Q. At what time?

A. I do not remember exactly the time; it was after the election.

Q. Did he go there at your suggestion or by your advice?

A. I do not remember who asked him to go, particularly.

Q. Did he go there at the instance of the committee?

A. I do not remember who asked him to go.

Q. But did he go there at the instance of the committee?

A. I do not remember who asked him. He was an active man in the campaign.

Q. I still ask you the question whether he went there at the instance of the committee or at the wish of the committee, without asking you who it was.

A. I do not think there was any action taken by the committee on it.

Q. Did you know he was going?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you request him to go?

A. I do not remember whether I requested him to go or not. The matter was discussed, and he went.

Q. Do you know what his business was?

A. His business was the same there as that of other gentlemen who went down on both sides to witness the count.

Q. I ask if you know what his business was.

A. No more than that.

Q. What was "that?"

A. The same business that other gentlemen had who went there to see what the condition of the vote was there, and to see that there was a fair count and a fair return.

Q. Do you know what name he went under when he was in South Carolina.

A. No, sir. I do not think he went under any name but his own.

Q. You think he went under his own name?

A. I do.

Q. Was he registered under his own name at Columbia?

A. I have no reason to think he was not. I do not know.

Q. Did you get a dispatch from South Carolina along about the 4th or 5th of December?

A. I do not remember about that especially.

Q. Do you remember getting a dispatch from the president or manager of the Charlotte, Columbia and Augusta Railroad?

A. No, sir.

Q. Was a dispatch shown to you by anybody sent by the president of the Charlotte, Columbia and Augusta Railroad?

A. I think not. I do not remember any such.

Q. Was there a dispatch shown to you, or have you any knowledge of a dispatch, in which the question was asked by a man in South Carolina whether he was at liberty to pay $30,000 for an electoral vote?

A. I do not remember any such thing.

Q. Was there anything of that kind presented to you?

A. I do not remember any such thing.

Q. Do you think there was not?

A. I do not remember any such thing.

Q. If there was, would you remember it?

A. There were suggestions of that kind made in different ways.

Q. Whom were they made by?

A. I do not remember any particular person making them.

Q. Do you not remember whom those suggestions came from?

A. No, sir; I do not remember any particular one.

Q. You do not?

A. I do not.

Q. But you remember that there were suggestions of that kind?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. You cannot tell where they came from?
A. No, sir; I do not remember.
Q. Did they come from some one who lived there or some one who had been sent down there from New York?
A. I do not remember.
Q. When was that suggestion made?
A. I do not remember when.
Q. How long was it before the electoral votes were cast?
A. That I do not remember.
Q. Was it a week before, do you think?
A. I do not know. I do not remember.
Q. Do you think it was two weeks before?
A. I do not remember. I do not know the time.
Q. Have you not some idea of the time?
A. No, sir; I have no definite idea of the time.
Q. Was that suggestion made to you more than once?
A. I remember on one occasion a letter being received from some man, I do not remember who, suggesting that in a certain State an elector could be had for money. I do not remember where, and I do not remember the man's name; but I recollect the letter coming.
Q. Was that from South Carolina?
A. No, sir; another State.
Q. What State was that?
A. I do not remember. It was one of the Western States. I only speak of that as showing that there were propositions of that kind made.
Q. Was that from Oregon?
A. No, sir.
Q. From what Western State?
A. I cannot tell you now what State it was. It was one of the Western States. That is my impression.

By Mr. KERNAN:

Q. This side of the Rocky Mountains?
A. Yes, sir; one of the Northwestern States, I mean.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. I am asking you in regard to South Carolina; if there was not a suggestion of that kind from South Carolina?
A. I do not remember that there was any distinct proposition about South Carolina.
Q. "Any distinct proposition." What was the proposition?
A. I do not remember that there was a proposition.
Q. Do you say there was not?
A. I do not remember that there was.
Q. Have you got your letters that you received from Mr. Smith Weed while he was down there?
A. I do not know whether I have or not; I do not remember having any. Most of the correspondence of the committee on those things was destroyed from time to time. There was no necessity of keeping it.
Q. Did you get a letter from Mr. Smith Weed, while he was down there, in reference to procuring a vote in South Carolina from a colored elector?
A. I do not remember getting any such letter.
Q. Nor dispatch?
A. I do not remember it.
Q. Nor from any other person down there?
A. I do not remember it.
Q. Do you say there was none?
A. I do not remember any such thing.
Q. If there had been, would you remember it?
A. I should think I would.
Q. Are you, then, able to say that there was none such?
A. I say that I do not remember any such.

WASHINGTON, January 19, 1877.

WILLIAM T. PELTON'S examination continued.

The CHAIRMAN. I am not prepared to continue the examination of Mr. Pelton further at this time, except to ask a question or two this morning. [To the witness.] Did you send a dispatch to Oregon, Mr. Pelton, on the 8th of November—the day after the election?
A. I do not remember; I have no recollection of any dispatch to Oregon then.
Q. I will be specific. Did you send a dispatch to Senator KELLY on the 8th of November?
A. I have no recollection as to whether I did or did not.
Q. Did you send any dispatch to him about that time, or within a day or two after the election?
A. I do not remember.
Q. I am instructed to ask you this question; I give you the words of the dispatch which I ask you about—a dispatch from you to Senator KELLY, either on the 8th or 9th of November, in these words: "We rely upon you to give us Oregon; I will furnish all funds needed?"
A. No, sir; I have no recollection of ever sending such a dispatch at all.
Q. You have no recollection of sending any such dispatch?
A. No, sir.
Q. Do you say you did not send it?
A. I say that I do not remember sending any such one in any way.
Q. Either on the 8th or 9th of November, or any subsequent time?
A. Any of those days.
Q. Do you know of any one sending a dispatch to Senator KELLY on that day or the following day, or within three or four days?
A. I do not.
Q. You have no knowledge on the subject?
A. I do not know anything about any such dispatch.

WASHINGTON, January 31, 1877.

WILLIAM T. PELTON recalled.

By Mr. MITCHELL:

Question. I believe you stated, but I do not remember whether you did or not, when on the stand before, that you were acquainted with a Mr. J. N. H. Patrick?
Answer. I do not remember. I think I did. I am acquainted with him. I do not remember whether I stated it or not.
Q. Where does he make his home?
A. I think at Omaha. I am not sure about that.
Q. I want you to look at the following dispatch. It reads:

"N. Y., 29th Nov., 1876.

"To J. N. PATRICK, Portland, Oreg.:

"Moral hasty sideral vizier gobble cramp by hemistic welcome licentiate muskeeter compassion neglectful recoverable hothouse live innovator brackish association dime afar idolator session hemistic mitre."

[No sig.]

Tell me if you know in whose handwriting it is:
A. (Examining.) No, sir; I do not.
Q. It is not your handwriting?
A. No, sir.
Q. You are certain about it?
A. It does not seem to be my handwriting.
Q. It is not your handwriting?
A. No, sir.
Q. Do you know who sent that dispatch?
A. No, sir.
Q. Do you remember some communication with Mr. Patrick in the month of November and the beginning of December through the telegraph?
A. Some communication through the headquarters; yes, sir.
Q. Did you receive dispatches from him personally?
A. I think there were some dispatches addressed to me.
Q. Did you receive them?
A. I cannot tell who did receive them. They were received by whoever happened to be at the headquarters at the time.
Q. I will ask you if you received the following dispatch:

"SALEM, December 5, 1876—4 p. m.

"To W. T. PELTON, 15 Gramercy Park, New York:

"Brazen welcome cuttle survivor doctrinal Charles Dimon squab taster niveous Ladd and Bush, Salem.

"Brazen fracture medicine grout minutegun graduation innovator venom summons lowringly Salem beer vizard moreless erratic."

[No signature.]

A. I do not know. I have no means of identifying it at all. I received great quantities of dispatches, and I have no means of identifying them.
Q. What is your best recollection?
A. I do not know.
Q. Have you any recollection on the subject?
A. I have not.
Q. Did you, in your correspondence by telegraph with J. N. H. Patrick, while Mr. Patrick was at Portland and Salem, Oregon, and at San Francisco, California, the latter part of November and the 1st of December, 1876, use a cipher dispatch?
A. There were cipher dispatches used from the headquarters.
Q. What do you mean by headquarters?
A. I mean our committee.
Q. What committee?
A. The democratic committee, the national committee. I do not know that I did.
Q. Were these dispatches from Mr. Patrick directed to you as a general thing?
A. I think some of them were. I do not remember about that, whether it was or not. I have no means of knowing.
Q. Had you in your possession a cipher used in sending dispatches?
A. There was one in possession of the headquarters.
Q. Was the cipher that was used by Mr. Patrick this same cipher?
A. I do not know whether it was the same or not.
Q. If he corresponded with you and your democratic headquarters in cipher, and you with him, it must have been the same cipher?
A. I presume he had the same cipher to use that we used; I do not know what cipher he used with other people.
Q. Did he not use the same cipher in correspondence with you?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. He used the cipher used by the democratic headquarters?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. You understood that cipher?
A. It was understood at the office.
Q. That is not the question. Did you understand it?
A. It was understood there.
Q. But did you understand it?
A. Well, I could read it.
Q. Now please translate that dispatch addressed to you, 15 Gramercy Park, dated December 5, Salem, Oregon. Take it and look at it and give the translation.
A. (Examining.) I have no means of giving the translation.
Q. This cipher was the same cipher, was it not, that was used by the committee generally in the campaign, whatever use was made of it?
A. No, sir; we had several different ciphers.
Q. When was the cipher that was used in your correspondence in reference to this Oregon matter obtained?
A. I think that that cipher, perhaps, was used some time in November.
Q. Was that a cipher gotten up after the election?
A. That cipher was not used before the election.
Q. The cipher, then, that was used in reference to the Oregon electoral matter was not a cipher that was used in the general campaign before the election?
A. No, sir; we had different ciphers.
Q. The one used in the Oregon matter was not used in the campaign until after the election?
A. I said that. I said it was used after the election.
Q. Who prepared that cipher, if you know?
A. I think Mr. Patrick did.
Q. When?
A. I do not know when.
Q. Did he send you a copy?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Where from?
A. I do not know where it was sent from. He was in Omaha at the time, I think.
Q. That was in November some time?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Was that an extensive cipher?
A. I do not know what you mean by an extensive cipher.
Q. I mean was it limited?
A. No, sir; it was capable of being used for any purpose.
Q. Was it a cipher embracing all the words in the dictionary?
A. Yes, sir; any number of words.
Q. Did you have that printed?
A. No, sir.
Q. Do you know whether Mr. Patrick had his cipher-book printed?
A. What do you mean by the question, whether it was printed or whether I had it printed?
Q. Whether it was printed?
A. Yes, sir; it was.
Q. It was a printed book?
A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. KERNAN:

Q. But you did not get it printed?
A. No, sir.

By Mr. MITCHELL:

Q. You say it was printed by somebody?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. In book form?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Was that book printed?

A. I can answer your questions without your going through a regular list of questions as well one way as another. It was a dictionary; that is what it was.
Q. It was gotten up for this occasion?
A. No, sir; it was a dictionary.
Q. Did you have a dictionary? Just explain.
A. A very ordinary method of using a cipher is to use a dictionary and take one set of words for another.
Q. Explain in a few words how this dictionary cipher was made. You took a printed dictionary?
A. We had a printed dictionary, and used a certain number of words.
Q. Would you write down the words that represented a certain number of words?
A. We would write down the cipher word. I presume you are familiar with the use of that.
Q. I am familiar with it, but probably some of the rest are not. Did Mr. Patrick take a printed dictionary and write in the dictionary?
A. No, sir.
Q. How did he do it?
A. By using a dictionary. Suppose we two take any dictionary and agree that we will use a certain number of pages ahead, that is, a corresponding word ten, fifteen, or twenty pages ahead. If you want to send the word "doubt," you take the word which corresponds to that on the page the number you agree upon that is ahead. Do you understand that?
Q. I do not, I must confess. Here is Webster's Dictionary unabridged.
A. That is rather larger than what we used.
Q. Please take this dictionary and explain how this cipher was formed.
A. You agree upon taking the corresponding word ten pages ahead. Suppose you want to send the word "manicon." That is the last word on the second column of the eight hundred and eighth page. Taking ten pages ahead you turn over to the eight hundred and eighteenth page, and you take the corresponding word there, which is "mate."
Q. If you wanted to send "manicon," instead of sending that you would send the word "mate?"
A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. KERNAN:

Q. You would send ten pages ahead in the same place in the column?
A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. MITCHELL:

Q. It is a simple transition, then?
A. That is all; simply using one word for another. When you get the message you find the word "mate," and going back ten pages you find the word you want.
Q. Let me ask you, if in this cipher prepared by Mr. Patrick, which you say was used in this Oregon matter, there were words used in the cipher dispatches that are not English words?
A. I do not understand you.
Q. I mean words not found in the dictionary?
A. I should say not. I do not see any reason why there should be.

By Mr. KERNAN:

Q. Proper names, I suppose?
A. Proper names, of course.

By Mr. MITCHELL:

Q. Now explain to me what would be written out, if anything, so that you would understand this cipher?
A. There would not be anything written out; you and I would have that understood.
Q. Did you have this key written out?
A. No, sir; it was not written out at all.

By Mr. KERNAN:

Q. How would you remember?
A. You would have to have a memorandum given you.

By Mr. MITCHELL:

Q. Then there is either something written down in the dictionary, or else there is a written memorandum outside?
A. As to the key?
Q. Yes.
A. Certainly.
Q. Did Mr. Patrick, in the month of November, send to you or the democratic committee, or anybody connected with it in New York, a dictionary so arranged that you could use it as a cipher?
A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. KERNAN:

Q. He sent it with a memorandum how to use it?
A. He sent it with a memorandum how to use it.

By Mr. MITCHELL:

Q. He was directed to get up a cipher at that time?
A. I suppose Dr. Miller did that.
Q. Was Dr. Miller directed by you to get up a cipher?
A. No.
Q. Are you certain of that?
A. I do not remember whether he did it of his own volition or whether I directed him.
Q. You would not say that he was directed?
A. I have no recollection about it, whether I directed him to get it out or not.
Q. You used that cipher pretty extensively, did you not, in the months of November and December; you sent a great many dispatches, and received a great many?
A. There were a great many received and a great many sent in the office.

By Mr. KERNAN:

Q. Mr. MITCHELL means sent by this particular Patrick key?
A. O, a good many.

By Mr. MITCHELL:

Q. I am going to take up this dispatch dated Salem, December 5, 1876, sent to William T. Pelton, 15 Gramercy Park, to ask you what these different words mean. The first is word "brazen;" what did that mean?
A. I do not know.
Q. The next word is "welkin;" what did that mean?
A. I do not know.
Q. The next is "cuttle;" what did that mean?
A. I do not know.
Q. The next is "survivor;" what did that mean?
A. I do not know.
Q. The next is "doctrinal;" what did that mean?
A. I do not know.
Q. The next is "Charles Dimon;" what did that mean?
A. I do not know what that meant, except that there is a man of that name I know.
Q. Where does he live?
A. He lives in New York.
Q. The next word is "squab;" what does that mean?
A. I do not know.
Q. The next word is "taster;" what does that mean?
A. I do not know.
Q. The next word is "niveous;" what does that mean?
A. I do not know.
Q. Is there such a word as "niveous" in the English language?
A. I do not know; I think there is. Of course it is utterly impossible for anybody to remember the translation of those words.
Q. I see "niveous" is here. It means snowy, resembling snow, partaking of the quality of snow. The next four words are "Ladd and Bush, Salem;" what did that mean?
A. I do not know what it meant.
Q. The next word is "brazen;" what did that mean?
A. I do not know.
Q. The next word is "fracture;" what did that mean?
A. I do not know.
Q. The next word is "medicine;" what did that mean?
A. I do not know what any of them mean.
Q. Do you know what that word "medicine" in all these dispatches means?
A. I do not know.
Q. It is a word in almost all these dispatches?
A. I do not know what it means.
Q. Will you testify under oath that you do not know what "medicine" represents?
A. I will; I do not know.
Q. The next word is "grout;" what did that mean?
A. I do not know.
Q. The next word is "minute-gun;" what does that mean?
A. I do not know.
Q. The next word is "graduation;" what does that mean?
A. I do not know.
Q. The next word is "innovator;" what does that mean?
A. I do not know.
Q. The next word is "venom;" what does that mean?
A. I do not know.
Q. The next word is "summons;" what does that mean?
A. I do not know.
Q. The next word is "loweringly;" what does that mean?
A. I do not know.
Q. The next word is "Salem;" what did that mean?
A. I presume that means Salem; I do not know.
Q. In what State?
A. I should judge it meant Salem, Oregon, from the fact that the dispatch came from there.
Q. The next word is "beer;" what did that mean?
A. I do not know.
Q. The next word is "vizard;" what did that mean?
A. I do not know.
Q. The next word is "noiseless;" what does that mean?
A. I do not know.
Q. The next word is "erratic;" what does that mean?
A. I do not know.
Q. Then you do not know what any of these words mean in these dispatches directed to you?
A. I do not know.

By Mr. KERNAN:

Q. That is, you do not know what they signify in cipher?
A. No, I do not; of course, with the exception of the proper name there. I make that exception.

By Mr. MITCHELL:

Q. I have in my hand a dispatch dated November 28, 1876, Portland, Oregon, to W. T. Pelton, No. 15 Gramercy Park, New York:

By vizier association innocuous to negligence cunning minutely previously readmit doltish to purchase afar act with cunning afar sacristy unweighed afar pointer tigress cuttle superannuated syllabus dilatoriness misapprehension contraband Kountze bisulcous top spiniferous answer.

J. N. H. PATRICK.

I fully indorse this.

JAMES K. KELLY.

Did you receive that dispatch about the 28th or 29th November, 1876?
A. I cannot tell definitely whether I did. It seems to be addressed to me. I reckon it came about that time.
Q. Do you remember receiving a dispatch about that time indorsed by Senator KELLY?
A. There were some dispatches received about that time. I cannot remember the particular one.
Q. Do you remember the dispatch referring to Kountze Brothers, 12 Wall street?
A. Not specially.
Q. Do you know Kountze Brothers?
A. I do not know them at all; I know there is such a concern.
Q. Do you know a man named Erwin Davis?
A. I have seen him.
Q. When did you see him?
A. I have not seen him for a long time.
Q. Did you see him in the latter part of November?
A. I should think it was sometime in November that I saw him.
Q. Did you not have a conversation with Erwin Davis about depositing money with Kountze Brothers?
A. No, sir; I never had.

By Mr. KERNAN:

Q. Do you say you know him?
A. I cannot say that I have known him; I have seen him.

By Mr. MITCHELL:

Q. Under what circumstances did you see Erwin Davis, and when?
A. I do not remember when it was. I met him one day, and had just a few minutes' conversation with him. Somebody introduced me to him, and I had a little talk with him.
Q. Where was it?
A. I think it was at the Everett House; I am not sure.
Q. When was that?
A. I do not know when it was.
Q. Was it in November or December?
A. I think it was in November.

Q. In the latter part of November?
A. I should think it was after the election.
Q. It was after the election, in the latter part of the month?
A. I do not remember when it was.
Q. Who introduced you to him?
A. That I do not remember.
Q. Did you go to the Everett House to see him?
A. We were there. That was our headquarters.
Q. The headquarters of the committee?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. He came there?
A. Yes, sir; he came there.
Q. Did he bring a dispatch from somebody?
A. I do not remember that he did.
Q. What was his business there?
A. He came in there and was introduced to me, and we had some little talk about the election.
Q. Who introduced him?
A. That I do not remember.
Q. Did you talk about this Oregon matter?
A. I think not. I do not remember that we did.
Q. Do you know Mr. Patrick's handwriting?
A. No, sir; I do not. I do not think I ever saw it.
Q. I hold in my hand a dispatch which reads as follows:

"NEW YORK, November 29, 1876.

"To J. N. H. PATRICK, Portland, Oreg.:

"Moral hasty sidereal vizier gobble cramp by hemistic welcome licentiate musketeer compassion neglectful recoverable hothouse live innovator brackish association dime afar idolator session hemistic mitre."

[No signature]

I will ask you whose handwriting that is in, if you know?
A. (Examining.) No; I cannot tell.
Q. Did you ever see that?
A. It is not mine.
Q Do you not know whose it is?
A. No, sir; I do not.
Q Have you any of your handwriting about you now?
A. I do not know whether I have or not. Mr. KERNAN knows my handwriting.
Mr. KERNAN, (examining.) It is not like his at all. I know it well.
The WITNESS. Mr. KERNAN knows probably that is easier writing than mine.
Mr. KERNAN. I could swear that was not. I do not know whose it is; but it is not yours, unless you write entirely different from all the correspondence I have ever seen.
Q. Have you a copy of this cipher used with Mr. Patrick?
A. No, sir.
Q. Who has it?
A. I do not know who has it now.
Q. When did you see it last?
A. I have not seen it for a month and more. I cannot say exactly a month, but I have not seen it for a long time.
Q. Who had it when you saw it last?
A It was about our headquarters the last time I saw it.
Q. Have you seen Mr. W. C. Griswold?
A. No, sir; I do not know him. I have never seen him, to my knowledge.
Q. Had you anything to do with the deposit of $7,200 in the London and San Francisco Bank, San Francisco, on the 6th of December?
A. No, sir.
Q. And you did not know about that?
A. No; I think I said that to you the other day.
Q. Who is employed at the democratic headquarters, New York, to send cipher dispatches?
A. No one especially is employed to send cipher dispatches.
Q Did you have more than one copy in New York of this cipher with Patrick?
A. No, sir; only one book.
Q. Who kept that book?
A. That was kept at the headquarters.
Q. Who used it?
A. Different gentlemen who happened to be there connected with the committee.

By Mr. KERNAN:

Q. Any one who had a key, I suppose, could read dispatches and answer them?
A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. MITCHELL:

Q. I have in my hand a dispatch which reads as follows:

PORTLAND, December 3, 1876—6.20 p. m.

To W. T. PELTON, 15 Gramercy Park, New York:

P. vizard association at Grand Hotel San Francisco medicament association Salt Lake City sympathy countless swallow.

Graduation taster bedaub medicine neglectful misapprehension immixable recollection inextinguishable welcome brackish ratan innovator. K.

Did you receive that dispatch?
A. I do not remember.
Q. Did you write any of the dispatches that were sent to Oregon—either to C. B. Bellinger, James K. Kelly, or J. N. H. Patrick—in reference to this Oregon matter?
A. I do not remember whether I did or not. I think very likely I did write some of them. I do not remember, though, distinctly.

By Mr. KERNAN:

Q. There were dispatches sent from New York to Kelly and Bellinger in Oregon and received from them?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. In reference to the matter of that case there?
A. As to the eligibility of Watts: yes, sir.
Q. And also was there not in reference to the expenses of litigation, which they expected to pay?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Those dispatches were in cipher?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. You cannot, from the nature of this cipher, give us the meaning of any of these telegrams unless you had the key to the dictionary?
A No, sir. It is impossible for anybody to do it. It is impossible for anybody to remember it.
Q To make it more clear, you take any dictionary and then make a memorandum?
A. You add ten pages ahead, for instance.
Q. For instance, you would first make a memorandum, and if you wanted to use the bottom word on page 888 you would go forward and take the bottom word on page 898.

By Mr. MITCHELL:

Q. You use the corresponding word up the whole column on the other page?
A. No; not that.

By Mr. KERNAN:

Q. Now, taking the last word on the first column of page 888, the corresponding word at the bottom of the same column on pages 898, is "nutriment," being ten pages ahead?
A. Yes, sir; that would be right if you had agreed on ten pages; assuming that.
Q. If you wanted to use the word "nutriment" in your communication in cipher, which is the last word on the first column of page 898, you would use the word "nobbler," which is the last word on the first column of page 888?
A. No, sir; you have that a little mixed.
Q. That is what I want to see.
A. Take the word "no," which is a common word. If you want to send the word "no," you turn over ten pages, and you take the corresponding word on the tenth page.
Q. That would be "nutrication?"
A. Yes; you send that in your telegram. When the man receives the telegram he deducts ten pages, goes back, and finds "no."
Q. So that in that case, if you wanted to say "no," you would say "nutrication," and then he would turn back ten pages, and it would be "no?"
A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. MITCHELL:

Q. So that in using this Patrick cipher there was no economy in words?
A. O, no.
Q. It took precisely the same number of words to send the dispatch as if you had employed the real words you wanted to use?
A. Exactly. There was no economy of words. It is a mere arbitrary thing; and therefore, no man in the world could remember what the words mean.
Q. Would any man remember any of it without having the key?
A. No, sir.
Q. The object is not economy but secrecy?
A. Secrecy, of course.

WASHINGTON, February 28, 1877.

W. T. PELTON recalled.

By Mr. KERNAN:

Question. State what knowledge you have as to whether Governor Tilden did or did not know anything about or see the telegrams from Oregon in reference to money.

Answer. He did not know anything about them in any way whatever. He never saw one of them nor knew anything about them at all.

Q. If you have a statement to make in regard to the matter, you can now make it.
A. I have prepared the following statement:

It has been stated that money has been used to purchase an elector in Oregon. It is due to myself, as well as to the democratic party, to state the facts in regard to that matter.

Telegrams addressed to me have been put in evidence; other telegrams, dated in New York, without any signature and without any proof that they came either from me or any person connected with the national committee, have also been put in evidence. These telegrams, without regard to dates, have been published, following each other in the order best suited to the purposes of those who had the examination of them.

Telegrams came every day following the election in large numbers from all parts of the country, addressed sometimes to myself and sometimes to members of the committee. Wherever they were addressed, they were delivered during the day at 59 Liberty street and during the night at the Everett House, in accordance with directions given at the telegraph offices. These telegrams were opened by such officer or member of the committee as was present at the time. Therefore these telegrams were not received at 15 Gramercy Park even when directed there; nor were the answers sent from there. None of the Oregon cipher telegrams were delivered at 15 Gramercy Park, nor were the answers to them sent from there. Governor Tilden never saw or knew of any of the cipher telegrams received from or sent to Oregon. The famous "Gobble" dispatch was not received at 15 Gramercy Park, and was never seen by Governor Tilden or its contents known to him.

Telegrams and letters addressed to me were often opened, read, and answered by others without my seeing them or knowing of them. Many of the telegrams put in evidence, purporting to come from Oregon and addressed to me, I do not recognize as having come to my knowledge, and they were never received by me. As my time was fully occupied, cipher telegrams were not usually translated by me, as it was very slow and tedious work. They were often defectively translated, and their meaning often imperfectly ascertained, and sometimes they could not be read at all. The telegram put in evidence dated Portland, Oregon, November 28, and purporting to be signed by Mr. Patrick and Senator KELLY, was never translated or read by me as translated before the Senate committee, and never understood by me to contain a proposition to purchase a republican elector or any other elector. I never sanctioned or encouraged the furnishing of money to purchase an elector in Oregon, or countenanced any such use of money, nor did any one else with my knowledge. My purpose was to supply to the democratic committee of Oregon, who claimed they were poor, sufficient funds to meet the just and legitimate expenses of sustaining their rights.

Whatever contingent arrangement there was suggested in the telegram from New York dated November 29, which seems to me to be very imperfectly translated, referred to payment of lawyers' fees. These fees seemed to be very large. Senator KELLY and Mr. Bellinger both testify that the answer to their requisition for money, dated November 28, was a distinct and definite refusal. That is my own recollection.

The three republicans who were candidates for electors were all fully examined before the Senate committee, and it is not pretended to be shown that there was a suggestion even made to either of them by any one to influence their action or the action of either one of them.

Mr. MITCHELL. Allow me to state in this connection that I have no objection to Mr. Pelton testifying, but I object to an argument on his part.

The WITNESS. I do not intend to make an argument, Mr. MITCHELL, but merely to state facts. I will go on with my statement.

And Mr. Bellinger, the chairman of the democratic State committee, and Senator KELLY have both testified that no money was applied for, proposed to be furnished, or intended to be used, or used for any such purpose.

Mr. Patrick was totally unknown to me at the time he went to Oregon. Dr. G. L. Miller, of Omaha, a member of the national democratic committee, had been telegraphed to to go to Oregon. He not being able to go, found that Mr. Patrick was going to Salt Lake on his own business, and requested him to go on to Oregon, and he went. I have no recollection of the long telegram put in evidence, purporting to come from Portland, dated November 30. Certainly it was never read by me as it is pretended to be now translated before the Senate committee. It does not appear, by the telegrams given in evidence, to have ever been replied to or any notice taken of its contents. It certainly never was assented to by me or by any one else, to my knowledge.

The telegram from New York dated December 1, the next day, and put in evidence as if it were an answer to the telegram of the former day, treats all suggestions about money as if discarded, and inquires about convening the Legislature to provide for the vacancy in the office of elector.

I have never heard it intimated by any one that Governor Grover or any one else in office in Oregon was to be paid anything, or was to receive anything; and I never heard that Mr. Cronin was to be paid anything for expenses, loss of time, or for any other purpose, until long afterward, and never heard that any money was desired for such a purpose until I saw the evidence before the Senate committee.

If it be true that any improper use of money did in fact enter the mind of one man, it was utterly without authority, was never adopted or sanctioned by any one else, and was never acted upon by himself, and no suggestion of it was ever made to either of the parties to be influenced.

As I have before testified, so far as I am concerned, no money was ever furnished for any purpose whatever. The only transaction of which I am cognizant was for perfectly legitimate purposes, and even that credit was never used, and, as a matter of fact, the funds never left the city of New York.

By Mr. KERNAN:

Q. Now I want to ask you just a few questions. Had Governor Tilden in any way notice or knowledge, or had any suggestion been made to him, that they wanted money to buy up an elector or anybody else?

A. No, sir; he never knew anything in regard to any matter connected with these telegrams until he saw them in the newspapers.

Q. Was he ever consulted in any way about furnishing money for legitimate expenses?

A. No, sir.

Q. There was no consultation with him; he had no knowledge at all of that fact, so far as you know?

A. No, sir; none whatever.

Q. For any legitimate purpose, or for any other purpose whatever?

A. Not for any purpose.

Q. Where were the telegrams addressed to Gramercy Park delivered?

A. They were delivered at the Liberty-street office and at the Everett House. You, sir, know, of course, that we had two offices. We had the Liberty-street office, where we were during the day, and the Everett House, where we were at night. They were delivered at the Liberty-street office, perhaps between ten o'clock in the morning and five or six in the afternoon, and during the night at the Everett House.

Q. Was that done in pursuance of instructions left at the telegraph office?

A. In pursuance of instructions left at the telegraph office that was done—the telegraph office, the office that delivered the message to us, because that was where the business was all done.

Q. Did the committee keep any account there?

A. At the telegraph office? Yes, sir.

Q. And they were charged?

A. They were charged to the committee at the office.

Q. As to Governor Tilden himself, had he any knowledge that those telegrams came to him by means of a key or dictionary, so that he could decipher those cipher telegrams?

A. Not the least.

Q. He had no key?

A. He had no key; had no knowledge of it whatever.

By Mr. MITCHELL:

Q. This long answer that you have given, Colonel Pelton, was prepared by you was written out, before you came here to-day?

A. Before I came into the room; yes, sir.

Q. Written out and prepared carefully. In preparing that statement did you examine the testimony heretofore taken in this case?

A. I have read the testimony; yes, sir.

Q. You had a book before you, I suppose, and compared it?

A. No, I do not know that I did.

Q. You examined it carefully, did you not?

A. I read the testimony; yes, sir.

Q. On the 6th of December, I believe it was, you went to the Third National Bank to see Mr. Jordan, did you not?

A. Well, I do not remember the day, sir. That is all in the other evidence.

Q. At about that time you went to the Third National Bank, New York, in order to get $8,000 transferred to Oregon, did you not?

A. That is all in the evidence.

Q. Well, I am asking about it now?

A. I do not remember on what day it was.

Q. Did you, on or about the 6th of December—I am not particular about the date—go to the Third National Bank for the purpose of having $8,000 transferred by telegraph to Oregon, to be used in some way in connection with the Oregon matter?

A. You have that all in the testimony; and I do not know whether you wish to go through all that testimony that you went into before or not.

Q. I am going to cross-examine you upon your statement. You have made a statement here in regard to money; that there was only a certain amount transferred; that Governor Tilden knew nothing about it at all, &c. Now I want to cross-examine you upon that. I consider this a very important question, in the first place, whether you did not go to the Third National Bank of New York, on or about the 6th day of December, for the purpose of having $8,000 transferred to Oregon for use in some way in connection with the Oregon election controversy?

A. That is all in my testimony that was given before.

Mr. KERNAN, (to the witness.) Mr. MITCHELL desires you to answer again.

The WITNESS. Well, that depends on the way in which the question is put. He asked me if I went to the Third National Bank. I testified, when on the stand before, just exactly how that thing was done. Mr. MITCHELL knows exactly as much about that as I do; and when you ask me if I went to the Third National Bank, of course the purpose of that is something beyond what is apparent.

Q. (By Mr. MITCHELL.) The question is preliminary to something else that I am going to ask you, I admit; but I certainly mean no disrespect and think it a proper question.

A. I do not say that I went to the Third National Bank. I say I saw Mr. Jordan, as I said before. Mr. Jordan and the Third National Bank are two different things; but if you will turn to my evidence, as I said before, you will see just what I did say.

Q. I will ask you this question: Did you not, on the 6th day of December, go to the Third National Bank and there see one of the tellers of the bank; and did you not there produce a check drawn by Samuel J. Tilden for $8,000?

A. No, sir.

Q. You are positive about it, are you?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know the tellers of the Third National Bank?

A. I do know them very well.

Q. What are their names?

A. I cannot tell you their names; I know them by sight.

Q. Do you know Mr. P. A. Vincent, a teller in that bank?

A. No; I do not remember the names of either one of them; I said that distinctly. We often know men in a bank by sight, but not their names. I know them by sight.

Q. Do you not know Mr. Vincent?

A. I may or may not.

Q. Do you not know that there is a Mr. Vincent?

A. I am not sure of that. I know there is a receiving teller and a paying teller; I know their faces very well. If I would see them in this room I could point them out in a moment.

Q. Did you not exhibit to Mr. Vincent, on or about the 6th day of December, a check drawn by Samuel J. Tilden for $8,000?

A. No, sir.

Q. You are positive about that?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you say anything to Mr. Vincent or to any teller of the bank about a check drawn by Mr. Tilden for $8,000?

A. I do not remember ever having a check drawn by him for $8,000; I have no recollection about it at all.

Q. Well, where was it that you first saw Mr. Jordan? I disremember now the testimony of that day.

A. I do not remember at this time. The evidence is all in there and it is perfectly true. It is now six weeks and more past, and I do not remember where I saw him, whether it was in the bank or outside.

Q. You do not remember where it was that you first spoke to him?

A. Wherever it was, I stated in my evidence at that time. Then it was fresh, and I remembered perfectly well what the circumstance was. But I would say this, Mr. MITCHELL, if the object of your question is to find whether I had a check from Mr. Tilden to provide for this $8,000 for Oregon, there is nothing in it, there is not a word of truth in it. I had no check from him in regard to it at all, either presented to Mr. Vincent or anybody else. If that is the object of your question, I will state that, as it is a matter of fact; and when I have stated that, it is hardly worth your time or mine to pursue that line, because there is nothing you can find in regard to it; because there was no such check. Mr. Tilden gave no such check, furnished no money, knew nothing about it.

Q. Well, you became responsible to Mr. Jordan for the amount, I believe, as you stated before?

A. The facts are all stated in the evidence about that, what Mr. Scott did.

Q. Well, Mr. Scott did not speak to him?

A. It is shown in the evidence that Mr. Scott did see him the night before.

Mr. KERNAN, (to Mr. MITCHELL.) You have in the evidence just what Mr. Scott did. They walked from the Everett House, and so forth.

Q. (By Mr. MITCHELL.) Well, the only assurance you had then that justified you in becoming responsible to Jordan for the $8,000 was from Mr. Scott, or had you any assurance from Mr. Scott at all?

A. O, the matter was discussed; but that is all in the other evidence.

Q. I know what is in the other evidence, but you have come on the stand again, and I want to know about it now further, for some other reasons, because the matter was not then gone into fully.

A. It was all gone into fully then.

Q. Well, I put the question to you directly, What assurance had you to cause you to feel justified in becoming responsible to Jordan for the $8,000?

A. Well, I had Mr. Scott's assurance. Mr. Scott and I had discussed that.

Q. And became responsible?

A. Mr. Scott and I had discussed that whole matter; Mr. Scott, Mr. Jordan, and I had.

Q. Mr. Scott was one of the members of the national committee?

A. Yes; and of the executive committee. And, as I stated to you before here, he was one of the men who had been active in the campaign, had raised money, paid out money, and one of the few men who did that.

Q. Do you know how it came that all these dispatches were directed to No. 15 Gramercy Park?

A. Well, I suppose that came from Dr. Miller giving to this man when he left him that address. I suppose that was the way that came. Dr. Miller knew that I lived at 15 Gramercy Park.

Q. Before or about that time that Mr. Patrick left Omaha a dispatch dictionary was prepared and a copy sent to you. Did you say anything about that in your testimony?

A. No; I said nothing about that in my testimony. That was all shown before.

Q. Did you receive that dictionary?

A. That came to headquarters.

Q. Well, you received it?

A. That came to headquarters. I do not know whether I received it or not.

Q. You had it.

A. The people had it at headquarters. There never has been a denial that it was there.

Q. You translated these dispatches, or some of them at least, by that dictionary?

A. They were translated there; yes, sir.

Q. What was the title of that dictionary?

A. I do not know.

Q. Can you tell?

A. I do not know what the title was.

Q. You would recognize a copy of it if you were to see one?

A. I do not know whether I should or not.

Q. Look at the book I now show you, and state whether that is a copy?

A. I have no means of identifying it. I do not know whether it is or not. There are a great many kinds of dictionaries. I have no means of identifying that one.

Q. The dictionary I now show you is entitled—

The Household English Dictionary

* * * * *

With two hundred and thirty illustrations,
London:
T. Nelson and Sons, Paternoster Row;
Edinburgh; and New York.
1872.

Now, do you not know that that is the dictionary?

A. No, sir; I do not know it. I have no means of identifying it.

Q. What is your best judgment?

A. I do not know whether it is or not.

Q. Have you any information about it?

A. No; I have not. There are a great many kinds of those books, and I have nothing in my mind that would make me identify it.

Q. What is your best judgment?

A. I have no judgment about it; I do not know.

Q. Would you say it was not the dictionary?

A. I would not say either way. I have no means of knowing anything about it.

Q. Did you receive a letter from any person at the time the dictionary was sent to you?

A. I did not; I do not remember whether any letter came with it or not. There were a number of letters received, and it is very difficult to remember them.

Q. In translating these Oregon dispatches, what was the key that was applied to the dictionary?

A. I do not remember now. I stated to you all I knew about that when I was examined before. I explained to you the method of using the dictionary; but I do not remember the particular key.

Q. Well, you took the word, and then moved back or forward to get the translation?

A. What particular key they used there I do not know.
Q. You do not know whether you went forward one page or eight?
A. No, I do not remember. I do not know the particular key; I have no means of telling. I have no memorandum of it.
Q. Did you see this "Gobble" dispatch when it was received in New York?
A. I think I did see it. I have not a very clear recollection about it, but I have a notion that I saw it about headquarters.
Q. Did you translate it?
A. I do not remember that I did. I do not remember anything about it.
Q. Well, you saw the translation?
A. I do not remember that. I remember seeing such a dispatch around there with that signature, but whether it was translated or what it meant I do not know. I cannot tell now anything about it. The reason for my saying that is, as I have stated in the statement I have made, that these dispatches were received by different persons, they were translated by different persons.
Q. Were they answered by different persons?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Can you name any person that answered an Oregon dispatch except this one?
A. As the dispatches came in they were answered by different persons in the office.
Q. By whom?—name any particular person who answered one.
A. Well, I do not know of any one person in particular. I speak of that as to the general business of the office. When you ask me who answered a particular dispatch, that I cannot tell you, for I do not know.
Q. These Oregon dispatches appear to have been directed to you?
A. They were directed to me; they show that; but that does not prove that the answers were sent by me at all, and, in fact, many of them were not.
Q. Did you receive this dispatch of November 28, signed by J. N. H. Patrick and indorsed by JAMES K. KELLY, directed to you at No. 15 Gramercy Park, New York?
A. I have explained to you in my previous testimony in regard to that.
Q. I do not remember what you stated about that particular dispatch. Did you not receive that dispatch?
A. I do not remember whether I did or not. As I said there, I do not remember about that particular one, because I do not recognize it.
Q. Well, now, colonel, do you say that you do not remember whether you received that dispatch or not?
A. I do not say either way, whether I received it or not, because I do not know what particular dispatch you refer to.
Q. You say you do not know to what particular dispatch I refer. I will state the question distinctly. The dispatch was:

"PORTLAND, November 28, 1876.

"W. T. PELTON, 15 Gramercy Park:

"By viser association innocuous to negligence cunning mutely previously readmit doltish to purchase afar act with cunning afar sacristy unweighed afar pointed tigress cuttle superannuated syllabus dilatoriness misapprehension contraband Kountze bisulcous top usher spiniferous answer."

The WITNESS. Excuse me a moment. I certainly do not remember it by those words.
Q. The dispatch is signed, "J. N. H. Patrick," and then follows this: "I fully indorse this. JAMES K. KELLY." And the translation of the dispatch is as follows:

PORTLAND, OREGON, November 28.

W. T. PELTON, 15 Gramercy Park:

Certificate will be issued to one democrat. Must purchase a republican elector to recognize and act with democrats and secure the vote to prevent trouble. Deposit $10,000 to my credit with Kountze Brothers, Wall street. Answer.

J. N. H. PATRICK.

I fully indorse this.

JAMES K. KELLY.

Did you receive that dispatch?
A. I do not know whether I did or not.
Q. Did you hear anything about a dispatch of that kind having been received?
A. I do not remember about that. There were dispatches of that character received. I do not remember ever seeing a dispatch translated in that way.
Q. Did you receive a dispatch from Mr. J. N. H. Patrick asking for $10,000?
A. My recollection is that there was a dispatch of some sort asking for $10,000. I think I stated that in my former testimony.
Q. You do not appear to know very much about this matter.
A. Well, I know something about it—not quite as much as you think I do, however.
Q. I do not know about that. Do you know Kountze Brothers?
A. No; I do not know them. I know there is such a concern.
Q. Do you know Erwin Davis?
A. I stated to you before, sir, that I had met him and had seen him. I cannot say that I know him. I know there is such a man. I have met him.
Q. Do you know where he is now?
A. No; I do not.
Q. Do you know where J. N. H. Patrick is now?
A. No; I do not. I saw him in New York, as I stated to you before, a while after election, I suppose in the early part of January. I have not seen him since.
Q. Did you not send a cipher dispatch, on the 20th day of November, to J. N. H. Patrick, at Portland, Oregon, the translation of which is as follows:

"NEW YORK, November 29, 1876.

"To J. N. H. PATRICK, Portland, Oregon:

"No. How soon will governor decide certificate? If you make application contingent on the result in March it can be done incremable slightly if necessary."

A. I do not remember of sending any such dispatch.
Q. Do you know of a dispatch of that kind being sent?
A. Not like that; no, sir.
Q. What was sent?
A. Well, there were several. Of course, there were dispatches sent, but I do not remember a dispatch that reads in that way.
Q. Just tell me what was received and what was sent, according to your recollection?
A. Well, I cannot remember that, sir.
Q. Tell me any part.
A. I cannot remember; I have not any copies here.
Q. Tell me the substance of anything that was telegraphed to Portland in regard to this matter by anybody.
A. Well, there were telegrams sent from our headquarters insisting upon their preserving their legal rights, and giving them all the authorities we could give in regard to the disqualification of Watts, the elector.
Q. What else?
A. And insisting that a certificate should not be given to Watts.
Q. Anything about money?
A. That they could have money for legitimate expenses, counsel fees, &c.
Q. How much? How much did they want?
A. Well, that was stated before; $10,000.
Q. Ten thousand dollars they wanted. Now, then, I will ask you if that dispatch asking for $10,000 is not the dispatch indorsed by JAMES K. KELLY, and if that was not the only dispatch asking for $10,000?
A. I do not remember about that, sir.
Q. Was not the dispatch of November 29, the next day, the first word of which is "no," an answer to that dispatch?
A. Well, that I cannot tell, from this distance, whether it was or not.
Q. And then the dispatch goes on: "How soon will governor decide certificate? If you make obligation contingent on result in March."
A. I think there was one dispatch sent out there—my recollection is now there was one dispatch sent out there—to convene the Legislature, and offering to pay the necessary expense of doing that; they, of course, to elect an elector, as they did in Vermont.
Q. Did you not get a dispatch from Mr. Patrick, while he was at Portland, in which he stated, among other things, as a reason why they wanted money, that they had employed a firm of three lawyers, one member of which was the editor of a leading republican paper?
A. Well, I said that there was one dispatch received there asking for money for legal expenses and for employing lawyers. As to what particular lawyers they were I do not know.
Q. Did not the dispatch say that one of the firm employed was the editor of a leading republican paper?
A. Well, I do not remember about that. It may have said so.
Q. Did you get a dispatch from Mr. Patrick about the 30th of November, while he was in Portland, saying the governor was all right without reward?
A. I do not remember. I never had any idea that the governor was any other way.
Q. Did you not get a dispatch of that kind?
A. There was some dispatch of that kind received; I do not remember the details. I know perfectly well I never had any idea that the governor of Oregon could be purchased.
Q. Did you not get a dispatch from Patrick in which he said the governor was all right without reward, and that he would issue certificate?
A. I do not remember the details of those dispatches.
Q. You certainly can remember the substance, whether you received information from Mr. Patrick by dispatch informing you the governor would issue a certificate to Cronin?
A. I do not remember. I think there was a dispatch that the governor would issue certificate, but do not remember as to "the reward," because that was a question that never entered into anybody's head, of Governor Grover taking money for doing what was right.
Q. I am not asking you as to what entered into anybody's head.
A. I would just as soon think of any other honest man taking money for doing what was right as to think of Governor Grover taking it.
Mr. MITCHELL. The tribunal did not appear to think it was right.
The WITNESS. That was where we differed.
Mr. MITCHELL. Well, they voted unanimously that they did not approve of anything of the kind.
Mr. KERNAN. The tribunal did not know anything about it. The question before them was one of law.

By Mr. MITCHELL:

Q. Did you not get a dispatch from Patrick, in which it was stated that one republican elector must be purchased?
A. I do not remember about the language of his dispatches at all. I have not copies of them.
Q. Well, do you not remember that Patrick did send a dispatch like that?
A. I have no remembrance about it at all. His dispatches came there, and, as I said two or three times before, they were translated, and imperfectly translated. Sometimes you would find out what they meant and sometimes you could not. Very often you could not find out anything about it. But, as I have said six times before, there was not any attempt to purchase a republican elector. So far as we are concerned in New York, there never was any such attempt; and even if Mr. Patrick did suggest that, it does not prove anything. The fact is, so far as concerned us in New York, that nobody would sanction any such thing.
Q. What did you mean in your dispatch to Patrick by making fee contingent?
A. Why, the lawyer's expenses out there. The proposed fees were large, and it was proper they should be contingent.
Q. Did you not send a dispatch of this kind to Mr. Patrick on the 29th of November, a cipher dispatch, the translation of which was as follows?

"NEW YORK, November 29, 1876.

"To J. N. H. PATRICK, Portland, Oreg.:

"No. How soon will governor decide certificate? If you make obligation contingent on result in March, it can be done and incremable if necessary."

[No signature.]

A. I do not remember about that dispatch. I remember there was something said to them about making their fees contingent. Whether that was the one or not I do not remember. I do not think, Mr. MITCHELL, if you had received as many telegrams as we did through November and December, you would remember the details of all of them as you do these Oregon matters.
Q. Probably not. Did you receive a dispatch in cipher on the 1st of December from Mr. Patrick, dated Portland, Oregon, the translation of which was as follows?

To W. T. PELTON,
15 Gramercy Park, New York:

No time to convene Legislature. Can manage with $4,000 at present. This will secure democrat vote. All are at work here. Can't fail. Answer.

KELLY.

A. Well, I do not know whether there was or not. There was some dispatch received at the office, I believe, in regard to the Legislature.
Q. Stating that there was not time to convene the Legislature?
A. I do not remember what it said.
Q. That was the substance of it, was it not?
A. I do not remember the words of the dispatch.
Q. I will not ask you about the words. You admit that it was telegraphed out whether the Legislature could be convened. Now, what was the answer; that the Legislature could be convened or could not?
A. I said, I think, a telegraph came that it could not.
Q. Now, I ask you whether, in that same dispatch, the following language does not appear: "Can manage with $4,000 at present. This will secure democrat vote. All are at work." Did not that all appear in the same dispatch that informed you that the Legislature could not be convened?
A. I do not remember now about that. I do not remember what those dispatches were.
Mr. KERNAN. The witness says he simply learned at headquarters that they could not convene the Legislature, and does not remember receiving the dispatch.

By Mr. MITCHELL:

Q. I will ask you if you did not, on the 6th of December, telegraph to Hon. JAMES K. KELLY, Portland, Oregon, a cipher dispatch, the translation of which is as follows?

"NEW YORK, December 6.

"Hon. JAS. K. KELLY:

"Is your matter certain? There must be no mistake. All depends on you. Place no reliance on any favorable report from the three southward. Answer quick."

A. I do not remember sending any such dispatch as that.
Q. You might have sent it, might you not?
A. Well, I do not know. I do not remember sending any such dispatch.
Q. You would not say you did not send it?
A. I would not say that I did not send it, because I do not remember. I would not say that I did not send a thing when I cannot state distinctly. I do not remember the dispatch, however.
Q. Are you familiar with Slater's Telegraph Code?
A. I have seen it; yes, sir.
Q. The book I now hand you is entitled, "Telegraphic Code to Insure Secrecy in the Transmission of Telegrams. By Robert Slater, secretary of the Société du câble transatlantique français—limited. (French Atlantic Telegraph Company.) London. Printed and published by W. R. Gray, 194 Change Alley, Cornhill, 1870." Look at that book, of which I have just read the title-page, and state whether that book was used by you in connection with political telegraphic messages.
A. Well, I have used such a book. I have such a book as that, from the looks of it.
Q. I will ask whether you have made any attemp to purchase up all those books recently?
A. No, sir; I purchased all I wanted; that was all.
Q. Have you purchased any recently?
A. I do not know how long since.
Q. Since the election?
A. Yes, sir; since the election.
Q. How many have you bought?
A. I do not remember. I have bought them or sent for them just as I needed them.
Q. Now, how many have you bought since the election?
A. I do not remember.
Q. Well, one or two or a dozen?
A. I do not remember exactly. I cannot tell that.
Q. What use did you want to make of them? For what purpose did you wish them?
A. Well, I wished to use them in telegraphing. It is sometimes convenient to have them in private business of any kind.
Mr. KERNAN. You refer to business correspondence?
A. Why, of course. It is done by every man in business who uses the telegraph and desires to have his business confidential. It is not an unusual thing for a man in business to use a cipher.

By Mr. MITCHELL:

Q. You have had some telegraphic correspondence with Mr. Patrick since you were on the stand here before, have you not?
A. No, sir; I have not. I do not know where he is and have not known. I do not know where he is to-day.
Q. Who prepared the statement you read to-day?
A. I did.
Q. When?
A. Most of it to-day, probably, and part of it before; most of it to-day.
Q. Explain this Slater's Telegraphic Code, so that the reporter may get it down.
A. Well, there are about a million ways, perhaps, in which to explain it. If you look in front of the book, you will see that there is a key which explains the whole thing. That can be used in a million ways. It is an arbitrary thing, and there is a key in the front part.
Q. This book, Slater's Telegraphic Code, appears to be a book with two columns of words on each page, and opposite each word certain figures.
A. The words are numbered right through the book. There is not any certain number; but whatever word it is, it is numbered. The explanation is right on the fourth or fifth page there, in the front of the book.
Q. The words are numbered, commencing with letter A on the first page, in this manner:

A	00001
Aback	00002
Abacus	00003
Abaft	00004
Abalienate	00005

And so on, to the last word in the book, which is "Zürich," No. 25,000. Is that the kind of book it is?
A. Well, you have read it there.

By Mr. KERNAN:

Q. That is the way in which the words are numbered?
A. That is the way they are numbered. I have not looked at the numbers in that book, though.

By Mr. MITCHELL:

Q. In telegraphing, then, you use the numbers to represent words?
A. You use it just as you choose. There are many different ways.
Q. You use figures instead of words?
A. Well, I should not, if I was going to use it.
Q. You should not? But you can use the figures instead of the words?
A. Well, the explanation is in the front of the book there
Q. I find that explanations are given in the front of the book as to the manner of using it For instance, example 1 is as follows:
"The queen is the supreme power in the realm."
"Add any number below 25,000—say, for instance, 5,555—to the numbers opposite to those words it is desired to transmit. Where the result exceeds 25,000 deduct that number, or, in other words, commence the alphabet again."
Words to be transmitted will be placed then one word below the other, commencing with the first word of the dispatch:

The	22,313
queen	18,093
is	12,370
the	22,313
supreme	21,953
power	17,056
in	11,426
the	22,313
realm	18,419

I believe I have given that example or statement correctly, have I not?
A. You can read that just as well as I can. You do not want that I should read it.
Q. I read it directly from the book.
A. It is a mere matter of copy.
Q. Well, inasmuch as you have had very little to do with this Oregon transaction, I will not ask you more questions. You do not appear to remember.

By Mr. KERNAN:

Q. As to this written statement which you have read, did you ever read it to me before you read it here?
A. No, sir.
Q. I have not seen you for three or four days?
A. I have not seen you since Saturday. I simply sent you word that I had it, and I thought it was due to myself and my friends and my party that I should be put right.
Q. Now, one other question: Had Governor Tilden any sort of intimation in any way that there was money proposed to be used in Oregon for any purpose?
A. No, sir; nothing at all.

By Mr. MITCHELL:

Q. You mean to say by that, so far as you know?
A. So far as I know. I would not say as to what you know, but I say as to what I know myself.
Q. You say that quite a number of these dispatches came and were answered by other parties?
A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. KERNAN:

Q. Did Governor Tilden receive or answer any?
A. Not that I know of.
Q. When, so far as you know, did he first learn that there had ever been any such telegrams from Oregon?
A. When the thing appeared in the newspapers, as I told Mr. MITCHELL privately just now. That was the first thing about it—about the time that I came over here.
Q. The time when they appeared in the newspapers in cipher?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. And, so far as you know, he never had heard anything before that?
A. So far as I know, he never had. I know he expressed great surprise about it.

Mr. MORTON. The Senator from New York [Mr. KERNAN] has secured the insertion in the RECORD of a portion of this evidence while that which it is intended to rebut is not in the RECORD, evidence submitted to the committee after the report had been made by a witness who had been reluctant, to say the least, and whose memory on his cross-examination, as I personally know, was very defective indeed. Now in view of the fact that this evidence has gone into the RECORD, I think the resolution ought to be adopted and I shall vote for the adoption of the resolution reported by the Committee on Printing.

Mr. KERNAN. I do not think that is any reason we should print these volumes. You have in the RECORD these conclusions of the committee. They were in before the evidence was taken. I did not seek to get an opportunity to put this matter in the RECORD. I was entirely content to let it go with the evidence in the ordinary way. Now I say to the Senator that in my judgment when the people read the testimony they will say that the Senate did not set a good precedent in ordering to be published extra copies of this report.

Mr. MORTON. The answer is this: My friend from New York while opposing the publication of this evidence and of this report makes his position the occasion and the opportunity for procuring the insertion in the RECORD of a certain part of the evidence that he desires. That is certainly ingenious; I do not say it is not fair, but it is well done, exceedingly well done.

Mr. KERNAN. It is not ingenious. It is not doing injustice to any one. The report does say that men in New York, in California, and in Oregon conspired. The men in Oregon who acted about this subject were brought here. Gentlemen from Oregon were brought here on the other side. Mr. KELLY, Mr. Bellinger, and Mr. Bush were examined and each one of them testified before the report was made; each one testified that he never heard a suggestion of any improper influence. Mr. HEWITT was one of the men that seemed to be reflected upon, and Mr. HEWITT appeared before the committee and testified fully that he never saw a telegram suggesting improper influences, and never heard such a suggestion. This report being in, it was a simple act of justice to have this statement at least go in the RECORD that the people might see, as far as Colonel Pelton was concerned, what the case really is. It is not wise to set a precedent allowing you to attack anybody by suspicion. That is the precedent set by printing a document like this at public expense in large extra numbers. I leave it with the Senate to say whether they think it is a wise precedent or not. The whole point of it passed away when the electoral vote was counted; and this had no weight on that count one way or the other.

Mr. ANTHONY. This resolution requires an amendment. I did not understand that the evidence was to be printed with the report.

Mr. KERNAN. The evidence is the most important part. There are over five hundred pages of it.

Mr. ANTHONY. Then I move to strike out "five" and insert "one;" so as to make the number one thousand copies. That is as many as we can print on a Senate resolution.

Mr. MITCHELL. I have no objection to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the resolution as amended.

The resolution, as amended, was agreed to.

A bill (S. No. 1128) to extend for two years the act establishing the board of commissioners of claims and the acts relating thereto.

WILLIAM K. SEBASTIAN.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, obtained the floor.

Mr. LOGAN. I desire to ask a favor of the Senate, as we have but very little more time. I should like to have an executive session for about fifteen minutes; there are five or six appointments to be acted upon.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. There is time enough for that. I have something to present now.

Mr. LOGAN. Why not have it now?

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Because we shall continue in session nearly twelve hours more and the galleries are full at this time.

Mr. LOGAN. The galleries must be cleared whenever we have the executive session; and we shall come back in a few minutes.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I presume most of them will go home in an hour or two.

Mr. LOGAN. I do not think they will. They are as much interested as we are.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I think they are, some of them. I move to take up the resolution reported by the Committee on Privileges and Elections, which proposes to annul so much of a resolution adopted by the Senate in 1861 as refers to the expulsion of the late William K. Sebastian, of Arkansas.

Mr. COCKRELL. I hope that will not be taken up. I do hope we shall not take up questions that will involve so much controversy and so much time. I do not think it will be possible to pass that resolution at this time, and I do not think Senators ought to urge those matters at this late hour of the session where there will evidently be controversy over them. That matter was called up once before and laid over.

Mr. BLAINE. Is the Senator from Missouri opposed to the resolution?

Mr. COCKRELL. I am opposed to it in toto.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin moves the present consideration of the resolution which he has stated.

The motion was agreed to.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BLAINE. Before this matter is proceeded with, as there is some reason to hope that there may be at least a possibility of agreement on the Army appropriation bill, I feel it my duty to move that another conference be asked of the House. I move that the Senate insist on its amendment and ask for another conference.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the committee on the part of the Senate; and Mr. BLAINE, Mr. ALLISON, and Mr. WITHERS were appointed.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WINDOM submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 4472) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, report that they are unable to agree thereon.

WM. WINDOM,
W. B. ALLISON,
H. G. DAVIS,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
W. S. HOLMAN,
HIESTER CLYMER,
CHAS. FOSTER,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. WINDOM. The same question which I have already explained to the Senate, the question of the reduction of the salary of the President, is that which prevents an agreement. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments and ask another conference.

Mr. STEVENSON. Why have another committee of conference? I should like to hear some reason for that. I do not suppose the Senate is going to recede, and I do not suppose the House is. It is the same committee and the same thing, and we are kept here all night on reports that they cannot agree. If they are earnest in their disagreement and the two Houses cannot agree, let the Senate recede or the House recede, and not continue to make futile efforts.

Mr. WINDOM. I think it is hardly time yet to adhere to our amendment. I am willing to make one more effort, although I should otherwise move to adhere.

Mr. STEVENSON. I hope after one more effort the Senator will move to adhere.

Mr. WINDOM. I do not think it is advisable to do so now. I insist on the motion.

Mr. STEVENSON. Of course I do not wish to interpose anything against the chairman; but I think it looks very much like child's play to be going on in this way. If the two Houses are in earnest, the sooner one House adheres the better.

Mr. WINDOM. It may look so to a casual observer on the outside; and yet we hope, I will say to the Senator from Kentucky, that we may yet reach some kind of agreement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota moves that the Senate insist on its amendments, and ask for another committee of conference.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the committee; and Mr. WINDOM, Mr. ALLISON, and Mr. DAVIS were appointed.

REPORT OF THE COMMISSIONERS OF EDUCATION FOR 1876.

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 192) for printing the Report of the Commissioner of Education for 1876 was read twice by its title.

Mr. ANTHONY. I ask for the present consideration of the joint resolution.

By unanimous consent, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the printing of fifteen thousand copies of the Report of the Commissioner of Education for 1876, five thousand for the use of the Commissioner, twenty-five hundred for the use of the Senate, and seventy-five hundred for the use of the House of Representatives.

Mr. ANTHONY. I move to amend the joint resolution by striking out "fifteen" before "thousand" and inserting "nine," and striking out "2,500" and inserting "1,000," and striking out "7,500" and inserting "3,000;" so as to read:

That there shall be printed 9,000 copies of the Report of the Commissioner of Education for the year 1876, 5,000 for the use of the Commissioner, 1,000 for the use of the Senate, and 3,000 for the use of the House of Representatives.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the joint resolution to be read a third time.

The joint resolution was read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM K. SEBASTIAN.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I ask that the Senate proceed with the resolution taken up on my motion.

The Senate proceeded to consider the following resolution:

Resolved by the Senate of the United States, That the preamble and resolution of this body of July 11, 1861, wherein and whereby the late William K. Sebastian, of Arkansas, an honorable and loyal Senator and member at the time of this body, was expelled for supposed disloyalty to the Government of the United States, be, and the same is hereby, revoked and annulled, as of the day and date of its passage, in so far as the said Senator William K. Sebastian is concerned, and no further. And that, without detriment on account of duties or rights of the Senator, obstructed or prevented by said act of expulsion, the Secretary or other proper officer of the Senate be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to settle the unpaid accounts of the said Senator at the rates provided by the laws existing at the time, (the same to be certified by the President of the Senate,) and to be paid to the heirs of said Senator, or to their legal representatives, out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

Mr. INGALLS. Let us hear the report.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, on the 2d of August, 1876:

The Committee on Privileges and Elections, to whom was referred the petition of Charles P. Sebastian, Edward L. Sebastian, Clara, (the widow of W. P. Walker,) and Lizzie, (the wife of West Harris,) the children and only surviving heirs of Hon. William K. Sebastian, deceased, late a Senator of the United States from the State of Arkansas, report that the petitioners respectfully represent that on the 11th day of July, 1861, ten Senators of the United States, of whom Senator Sebastian was one, were expelled from the Senate of the United States, by a solemn resolution, on charges of disloyalty and conspiracy against the Government of the United States; that so far as Senator Sebastian was concerned, the said charges were matters of inference and suspicion, wholly unfounded in fact, (except as to absence, which was unavoidable, and not of itself an expulsory offense;) that the resolution was offered, considered, and adopted hastily, within the first seven days of the session, during his absence, without notice, or effort to notify, and without hearing or explanation before the Senate, and without knowledge by Senator Sebastian of the pendency of any such proceeding, and that the conviction and expulsion, as to said Senator Sebastian, was illegal, unjust, and oppressive in the last degree, denying him the rightful countenance of Government, depriving him of his just rank, pay, and support, subjecting him to outlawry and persecution, and entailing upon him and his family want, misery, and distress difficult to express.

For relief in the premises, the heirs appeal now to the justice of the Senate; alleging that the Senate has exclusive jurisdiction of the subject-matters of complaint, together with full power to grant adequate relief.

Your committee recognize that by the Constitution (article 1, section 5) the "Senate shall be the judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own members;" and "with the concurrence of two-thirds [may] expel a member;" and that it "shall keep a journal of its proceedings."

They also recognize that in the exercise of these exclusive powers, the Senate may, from inadvertence, want of accurate knowledge, passion, prejudice, excitement, or other causes equally influential, commit grave errors, or do great wrong to its own members.

They recognize also that expulsion is a severe penalty, and that its exercise under free institutions is the offspring of a judicial and not of an arbitrary and tyrannical power; and yet, if in any case of expulsion of a Senator, great injury should be done to his use, name, and fame, it is indisputable that there will have been no power or tribunal in the Government that could have arrested or prevented it.

When the Senate has the sole and exclusive power to work an injury, it assimilates with a court of the highest jurisdiction in the exercise of its discretion, and must always maintain its right of review.

If the Constitution has conferred this exclusive power to work such an injury, upon what tribunal has it conferred an equal or superior power to adequately rectify it?

There is no such tribunal. There is no power in Government that can reverse or annul the separate judicial action of the Senate herein, or that can add to, change, alter, or amend its record, save the Senate itself. There may be some power that makes amends for the wrong and injury; but there can be no power to rectify a recorded wrong inflicted by the Senate upon the name, fame, and official and personal rights of a Senator but the Senate itself.

It necessarily follows that there attends upon these exclusive powers that distinct right of the Senate to revoke and annul, ab initio, any illegal, defamatory, or unjustifiable expulsion of any honorable Senator, (if such shall have occurred,) and to re-instate him in his good name, and in his office if his term shall not have already expired, and in his rights to his pay and emoluments thus withheld, if he still be alive, and, if not alive, then to revoke and annul ab initio the oppressive act, and to make restitution of the pay and emoluments of which, for the time, he had been unjustly deprived, to his family, or the survivors of them.

Your committee find the following to be, in brief, the facts of the case, to wit:

The official records of the Senate show that Senator Sebastian was elected and qualified as Senator from Arkansas in 1848; was re-elected for a full term in 1852, and for a third term in 1858; and continued without reproach a long service as such Senator, respected and esteemed, until July 11, 1861, when he was expelled "for grave offenses."

The Congress of the United States assembled, by proclamation of the President, on the 4th day of July, 1861, and it appearing that many of the southern Senators were absent, among whom was Senator Sebastian, and it being personally known to Senators that many of the absentees were avowed advocates of the secession of the States they represented, and that those States had already seceded, and that a great war between them and the Union was actually progressing, the following resolution, introduced by Mr. Clarke, of New Hampshire, was reported by a committee and passed by the Senate on the seventh day of the session, to wit, on the 11th day of July, 1861, as follows, (see Senate proceedings, July 11, 1861—Congressional Globe, volume 56, pages 62 and 63:)

"Whereas a conspiracy has been formed against the peace, union, and liberties of the people and Government of the United States; and in furtherance of such conspiracy a portion of the people of the States of Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee, Arkansas, and Texas have attempted to withdraw those States from the Union, and are now in arms against the Government;

"And whereas James M. Mason and Robert M. T. Hunter, Senators from Virginia; Thomas L. Clingman and Thomas Bragg, Senators from North Carolina; James Chestnut, jr., a Senator from South Carolina; A. O. P. Nicholson, a Senator from Tennessee; William K. Sebastian and Charles B. Mitchell, Senators from Arkansas; and John Hemphill and Lewis T. Wigfall, Senators from Texas, have failed to appear in their seats in the Senate, and to aid the Government in this important crisis, and it is apparent to the Senate that the said Senators are engaged in said conspiracy for the destruction of the Union and Government, or, with full knowledge of such conspiracy, have failed to advise the Government of its progress or aid in its suppression: Therefore,

"Resolved, That the said Mason, Hunter, Clingman, Bragg, Chestnut, Nicholson, Sebastian, Mitchell, Hemphill, and Wigfall be, and they hereby are, each and all of them, expelled from the Senate of the United States."

By the public record it appears that Senator Sebastian was absent from the 4th to the 11th day of July, 1861, and that neither before nor during the consideration of this act of expulsion did he have notice, hearing, or trial upon the same. The records show that no evidence was taken; his guilt was assumed to be self-evident, and he was expelled.

The petition of his heirs states fully his case, and controverts this assumption; and as to the allegations in the resolution of expulsion, severally and collectively, to wit:

First. "That a conspiracy had been formed against the peace, union, and liberties of the people and Government of the United States, and that, in furtherance of said conspiracy, a portion of the people of Arkansas (and other States) had attempted to withdraw those States from the Union, and that they were then in arms against the Government," it is denied absolutely that the Senator had lot, part, or sympathy in or with any such conspiracy, or that he ever was one of any portion of the people of Arkansas, or of any other people, that attempted to withdraw the State of Arkansas or any other State from the Union, or that he was then, or ever was, either before or afterward, in arms against the Government of the United States; but, on the contrary, it is as positively averred, and the proof offered, that he had always been before, and ever continued after said act of expulsion, to be opposed to disunion; denying the existence, under the Constitution, of any right of secession by any State of the Union; and further, that he did, at home in the State of Arkansas, actively oppose the act of secession, and that, even after it passed, he refused to recognize or serve under it, or any other secession government, in any capacity whatsoever, civil or military; and

Second. That whereas "William K. Sebastian, Senator from the State of Arkansas, and many other Senators from Southern States, had failed to appear in their seats in the Senate, and to aid the Government in that important crisis:" it is denied that an absence of seven days, or any other length of time, unaccompanied with any warning or special notice to appear, or some other indisputable evidence of offense, is or ever was held to be just, competent, or legal cause or ground for expulsion under parliamentary law; and it further appears, by public history, that war was raging before July, 1861, and the Union lines extended no farther south at the time than Kentucky and Missouri, and it is proven that the Senator was then at home, in Helena, Arkansas, three hundred miles within confederate lines, and could only escape from them at the risk of life to himself and family and the total loss and destruction of his property—all of which they aver to be ample justification for his temporary absence from the Senate; and

Third. That whereas "it is apparent to the Senate that said Senators are engaged in said conspiracy for the destruction of the Union and the Government," it is denied that any such alleged fact was true as to Senator Sebastian, however apparent its truth as to others, and it is re-asserted that he was, in principle and fact, always faithful to the Union; and Fourth. "Or with full knowledge of said conspiracy, have failed to advise the Government of its progress or aid in its suppression." It is submitted that in his situation, up to the date of his expulsion, as appears by the proofs, it is difficult to see how the Senator could have advised the Government of the progress of the conspiracy, or could have communicated with it all; and as to aiding in its suppression, it is proven satisfactorily that he did openly and actively resist the secession, taking upon himself the full responsibility of an active opponent of the policy of secession, and of a leading advocate of the Union cause.

The facts recited as of public record, as well as those relating to the history of the times and to the geography of the country, (of which the Senate will take judicial notice wherever truth and justice may require,) are indisputable; and the averments of facts, the answers and explanations made by the heirs, and interwoven in this condensed narrative, are equally well and conclusively sustained by the witnesses in the testimony before us, and the witnesses themselves are of unexceptionable credibility. (See list of witnesses:)

Major-General C. C. Washburn, commanding at Helena throughout the war.

Hon. James M. Hanks, citizen, native of Helena, Union man, judge of circuit court, and member of the Forty-second Congress.

Hon. R. W. Johnson, ex-confederate, Ex-Senator, and colleague of Senator Sebastian before the war.

Dr. William F. Wallace, citizen of the District of Columbia, and clerk for years of Senator Sebastian's committee.

Hon. A. O. P. Nicholson, now deceased, Senator from Tennessee, expelled under same resolution.

Henry D. Hulbert, intimate friend of Senator Sebastian, then citizen of Helena.

T. M. Jacks, old citizen of Helena, attorney at law.

Colonel James H. O'Conor, officer in Union Army all the war, attorney at law, and citizen of Helena, Arkansas.

Hon. A. C. Dodge, of Iowa, Ex-Senator of the United States, and serving for years with Senator Sebastian.

Loyalty to the Government and to the Union of the States was the true and real issue presented before the Senate by the preamble and resolution of expulsion. Without elaboration, your committee report that the loyalty of Senator William K. Sebastian, both before and at the date of the said act of expulsion, is indisputably established; and that he continued ever after to be faithful to the Government and Constitution and the Union of the States, notwithstanding every suffering, loss, and adverse circumstance, to the day of his death, in May, 1865; and they find that the expulsion of Senator Sebastian was an error of the Senate, occasioned by want of information, and by the overruling excitements of a period of great public danger; and that it becomes the dignity of the Senate openly to declare the facts, and to render to the name of the Senator and to his survivors every amend and reparation within the powers of the Senate, and not inconsistent with law.

Wherefore, and in view of all the facts, affirmative and negative, as they appear from the public records, and as established by the unquestioned testimony of the witnesses now and hereby referred to, your committee recommend to the Senate the resolution herewith submitted:

Resolved by the Senate of the United States, That the preamble and resolution of this body of July 11, 1861, wherein and whereby the late William K. Sebastian, of Arkansas, an honorable and loyal Senator and member at the time of this body, was expelled for supposed disloyalty to the Government of the United States, be and the same is hereby, revoked and annulled, as of the day and date of its passage, in so far as the said Senator William K. Sebastian is concerned, and no further. And that, without detriment on account of duties or rights of the Senator, obstructed or prevented by said act of expulsion, the Secretary, or other proper officer of the Senate, be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to settle the unpaid accounts of the said Senator at the rates provided by the laws existing at the time, (the same to be certified by the President of the Senate,) and to be paid to the heirs of said Senator, or to their legal representatives, out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, it is a somewhat noticeable fact that this aplication for relief does not come from Ex-Senator Sebastian himself, but from his surviving children. It appears from the report of the committee that he died in May, 1865, after the close of the war; and at the period of his death, if the dates given by the committee in their report are true, he was still, so far as the period of his service was concerned, a member of the Senate of the United States. I do not remember the precise period at which the United States forces took possession of the State of Arkansas, but I think it was some time in 1863.

Mr. COCKRELL. They ran me out of there in 1862.

Mr. INGALLS. The resolution of expulsion was adopted on the 11th day of July, 1861, and from that date until the date of his death, in May, 1865, it appears that he was a citizen and resident of the State of Arkansas. The military possession of the State of Arkansas occurred some time not later than 1862 or 1863.

Mr. CLAYTON. July, 1862.

Mr. INGALLS. So that there was no obstacle whatever between July, 1862, and May, 1865, to the appearance of Senator Sebastian in Washington and to his preferring an application in due form for the removal of this sentence and for the arrangement of all his accounts and the reception of whatever might be due him from the Government for his services. But some twelve years after his death the application is made by his heirs upon the ground that his expulsion was "illegal, unjust, and oppressive;" that it subjected him to outlawry and persecution, and entailed upon him and his family "want, misery, and distress difficult to express."

There is another fact that is not wholly without significance in connection with this subject, and that is that in the early part of 1864 the State government of Arkansas was practically reconstructed under the governorship of Mr. Murphy and that two United States Senators appeared here claiming the seats, one of which at that time under the claim that is now set up for Sebastian must have belonged to him. In February, 1864, the State government of Arkansas was practically reconstructed and two Senators appeared here from that State, one of them claiming the very seat that Mr. Sebastian or his heirs now allege belonged to him rightfully. It certainly is very singular that after this protracted opportunity, extending over a period of three years, when there was no possible objection to his appearance here in Washington and presenting his claim, he preferred to die in silence and now leaves his surviving heirs to come here and claim that he was outraged, and wronged, and distressed by the sentence of the Senate. It seems to me, with all due respect to the memory of one who once held a seat on this floor, that he must have valued his reputation for loyalty at a very low rate when by his appearance here, the opportunity for which existed, he could have wiped out this stain and established his claim.

It may be that this resolution is right. It is possible that the committee had incontrovertible and satisfactory evidence that Mr. Sebastian was a loyal man, and that he was devoted to the welfare of the United States Government; but it looks to me very much, under all the circumstances, as if this was an effort on the part of the survivors to obtain a very considerable sum out of the Treasury of the United States, to which there is not, in my judgment, any very tangible claim.

Mr. CLAYTON. I think it is due in the interest of justice and fair-dealing that I should state to the Senate what I know about the late Senator Sebastian. In July, 1862, the Federal Army, under the command of General Curtis, occupied the city of Helena, the then home of Senator Sebastian. It was my fortune to serve in that command at that time and for some time afterward, and there for the first time I met Senator Sebastian. I served in Arkansas during the rest of the war, and frequently during my period of service I had occasion to meet him. I know that the commanding officers there, from the time they first occupied Helena until the war closed, or about the time he died, soon after the close of the war, regarded him as a loyal citizen, and they treated him as such. I know that General Curtis consulted him. I frequently myself heard Mr. Sebastian give utterance to the most patriotic sentiments. He was a quiet and unobtrusive man. He felt very much the injustice that had been done him by this resolution of expulsion.

Mr. INGALLS. Why did he not apply then to have it revoked?

Mr. CLAYTON. He did not apply because party spirit ran very high at that time. That was during the hot period of the war when men did not stop to reflect. This body never stopped to reflect when they expelled him; they did it without reflection. It was only necessary then for some one to cry "mad dog" and everybody else would cry "mad dog." Mr. Sebastian knew very well, and his friends knew, that at that time, during the period of the war, while everything was red hot, he could not come here and get justice. I do not believe he could, and I do not think the Senator from Kansas believes he could. He always felt the injustice of this action. I heard him speak of it over and over again. I heard him say that if he thought he could be reseated he would come and demand his seat. I believe that that man was as good a citizen as ever lived in this country and as good as any one in this Chamber. I knew him personally. I knew him during the war. I know him at a time when, if he had entertained the disloyal sentiments that we hear of, the fact would have been known. I know that the confederates in Arkansas regarded him as a Union man through all the struggle, and that he was put to great inconvenience by reason of that reputation.

So far as the argument which my friend from Kansas makes about what he calls the practical reconstruction of the State government in Arkansas in 1864 is concerned, I will state that there was no reconstruction in 1864. What was called the Murphy government then sprang from military authority and from no other authority. It was the creature of the military. It had not the dignity of a reconstructed civil government. It was so treated here. It is true that they did elect Senators who came here and asked for seats, but they were at once told that they had no civil government there, that they had no State government in operation, and were not entitled to seats. Senator Sebastian knew that. He knew very well in that condition of affairs in the State, without any government, that it was not in his place to protest against the gentlemen who were seeking seats here under the Murphy government of Arkansas. There was no reconstruction about that matter at all. It was merely a government having the forms of civil government, put in operation by the military, and it had no other authority whatever. It never was recognized as a State government from the time of its inception until it was displaced by the reconstruction measures of Congress.

I believe that this act of justice ought to be done by the Senate even at this late day. It can do Mr. Sebastian personally no good, for he is dead and has been in his grave for many years. He died poverty-stricken, as I understand. But it may do his children some good, and I think it is due to them that the resolution should pass.

Mr. WADLEIGH. I move to amend the resolution by adding to it the following:

Resolved, That Joseph Segar, late claimant for a seat in the Senate, be allowed an amount equal to the compensation and mileage of a Senator from the date of the death of Hon. Lemuel J. Bowden up to the expiration of the term for which said Segar was elected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I hope the Senator from New Hampshire will not insist on this amendment. Let each case stand upon its own merits or fall upon its demerits. I am perfectly willing to vote upon the resolution which he has just introduced as an independent proposition, but I can see no good reason why the resolution from the Committee on Privileges and Elections should be encumbered with this matter which he now introduces.

Mr. WADLEIGH. I supposed that the resolutions would be voted upon separately, and this is the only way of getting the subject before the Senate at this time. I have examined the matter.

Mr. INGALLS. I know nothing about the merits of either of these cases personally, and particularly I am ignorant in regard to the facts touching the gentleman whose name is mentioned in the amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire; but it seems to me that the objection made is pertinent and just, that these cases should stand or fall separately and not together.

I only desire to add in regard to the original resolution that of course I know nothing whatever against the character or reputation of Senator Sebastian, of Arkansas. From all that ever I have heard, he was a man of high integrity and in every way qualified for the seat he occupied here; but I felt it to be my duty to say that there were circumstances which, in my judgment, rendered it very doubtful whether this precedent should be established.

Mr. WADLEIGH. I suppose, of course, that the resolutions will be acted upon separately, and I propose to make a short statement of the facts upon which the claim of Mr. Segar depends.

In February, 1863, Lemuel J. Bowden was elected United States Senator for Virginia, by what was known as the Wheeling Legislature, for six years and died on the 2d of January, 1864. His term would have expired March 4, 1869. On the 19th day of June, 1863, West Virginia was made an independent State, chose her own Legislature, and elected Mr. Van Winkle and Mr. Willey United States Senators.

About the time that West Virginia became a State the counties outside of that State which had been represented in the Wheeling Legislature, being loyal to the Government, held elections on the day and at the places prescribed by the code of Virginia, and elected a governor and Legislature which were known as the Alexandria government.

Mr. Bowden, who lived in one of the counties not included in the State of West Virginia, held his seat and was paid as Senator for Virginia after the admission of the State of West Virginia.

After the decease of Mr. Bowden, Mr. Segar, the claimant, was elected by the Alexandria Legislature to take his place, and duly presented his credentials, but was not admitted to a seat in the Senate.

The evidence presented by the claimant shows clearly his election by the Alexandria Legislature. The right of that Legislature to elect a Senator of the United States seems to be the only question in the case.

The counties which were represented in the Alexandria Legislature comprised the cities of Norfolk and Alexandria, and had an aggregate population of 137,661. They were loyal districts, and had mostly been declared to be such by presidential proclamation.

At the first session of that Legislature a law was passed providing for a constitutional convention, which convened at Alexandria on the 13th day of February, 1864, and framed a new constitution for the State of Virginia. This government existed from May, 1863, till it was supplanted by military government in 1867 under the reconstruction acts, with the proper executive, legislative, and judicial departments. Its Legislature adopted the thirteenth amendment to the Federal Constitution, by which slavery was prohibited throughout the United States, and that act was regarded and has always been regarded as the act of the State of Virginia. (See Proclamation of President Johnson, 13 United States Statutes, 774.)

President Lincoln also by his amnesty proclamation of December 8, 1863, recognized the Alexandria government as lawful by enumerating Virginia among the States wherein "a loyal State government had been all the while maintained."

The conclusion seems irresistible that if the Alexandria government had power to adopt the thirteenth amendment to the Constitution it had power to elect a Senator of the United States, and that the claimant was entitled to his seat as such, as his loyalty was unquestionable and conspicuous.

The claim of this claimant, Mr. Segar, rests upon the lawfulness of the Alexandria government, so called, and that government was the government of the State of Virginia, which for the State of Virginia and in its behalf adopted the thirteenth amendment to the Constitution. If that adoption was not lawful and constitutional, then that amendment was never constitutionally adopted, because it required twenty-seven States to adopt it, and this State made the twenty-seven. Therefore the right of Mr. Segar to this payment as United States Senator is precisely the same right that the thirteenth amendment has to be considered an amendment to the Constitution.

Mr. PADDOCK. I should like to inquire of the Senator from New Hampshire if this matter has been considered and determined upon by the proper committee or if it is new matter interjected here into another subject which has been properly and duly considered by a committee and reported favorably?

Mr. WADLEIGH. The Senator from Nebraska will probably recollect that this matter came before the Senate and was discussed at the last session of Congress.

Mr. SARGENT. And defeated.

Mr. WADLEIGH. At this session the matter was submitted to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and that committee referred it to me as a subcommittee. On account of my absence in Louisiana, and on account of my engagements on my return and the absence of the papers, which I left at home upon my coming here, expecting to return during the holidays, I have not been able up to this time to make a report upon the case. I have consulted the chairman of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and it is with his consent that I offer this resolution. I think the resolution should be adopted, that it is only just to Mr. Segar, and that it is not becoming in the Congress of the United States to say that Mr. Segar is not entitled to his seat as Senator and to payment as such on account of the unlawfulness of that State government upon whose lawfulness depends the validity of the thirteenth constitutional amendment.

Mr. SARGENT. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. PADDOCK. I think this measure ought to be considered and disposed of.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I hope the Senator from California will permit a vote on the resolution.

Mr. SARGENT. An executive session will only be temporary, and we can resume legislation afterward. There are some matters that ought to be acted upon in executive session.

Several SENATORS. O, no; withdraw the motion.

Mr. SARGENT. I will withdraw it for the present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire, [Mr. WADLEIGH.]

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the resolution reported from the Committee on Privileges and Elections by the Senator from Wisconsin, [Mr. CAMERON.]

Mr. COCKRELL. This, as was stated when the case was before the Senate a few days ago, although ostensibly a resolution to expunge from the record of the Senate, made on the 11th day of July, 1861, the taint of a certain resolution, is nevertheless a bill to pay the heirs of William K. Sebastian the salary of a Senator, from the 4th day of March, 1861, to the 4th day of March, 1865. That is the beginning and the end of the proposition. His term of service began on the 4th day of March, 1859, and expired on the 4th of March, 1865. Now, this bill is for the sole purpose, not of wiping out any stain which may have been cast upon his name, but of wiping out a record to enable his heirs to come in and claim the salary which would have been due him. A salary for what? For services he never performed; a gratuity out of the pockets of the tax-payers of this country to the heirs of William K. Sebastian, and for what? For nothing. Not that he served his country. When the gloom of rebellion spread all over this land his voice was not heard here in the Senate Chamber. He was at home down in Arkansas; and what evidence have we here in reference to his loyalty?

I assert that it has been the uniform rule of the Senate to require proof of active, actual loyalty before paying the claim of any claimant. When a claim comes before the Committee on Claims, the Committee on Military Affairs, the Committee on Finance, or any other committee the party is required to prove, not Union sentiments, but loyalty to the Government, and not loyalty only, but active loyalty to the Government. Every republican Senator knows that they have established the rule that the claimant must prove active loyalty. The distinguished chairman of the Committee on Claims knows that a number of reports made by him to his committee have contained the express words, "active loyalty."

Now, let us see if William K. Sebastian can come up to the standard of "active loyalty." He was a member of the United States Senate. He lived in the State of Arkansas. The Congress of the United States was convened on the 4th day of July, 1861. This resolution of expulsion was passed on the 11th day of July, 1861. It has been intimated here that the reason why it was passed was because he had not gotten here, but that he had made some effort to get here. I assert that there is not one word, not one particle of evidence before the committee that reported this claim, or before the Senate, that William K. Sebastian ever did one solitary act in an effort to get to Washington City. He was expelled on the 11th of July, 1861. He died in May, 1865. The distinguished Senator from Arkansas, [Mr. CLAYTON,] then a soldier in the Federal Army, occupied the town and county where he lived in 1862, less than a year from the time he was expelled. Did the cause of the Union, the integrity of the States, call for the services of Union men in 1862? If so, where was William K. Sebastian when you were bearing your musket upon your shoulder in defense of what you believed to be right, in the preservation of the Union and the integrity of the States? Was William K. Sebastian with you? Did he come up to the United States Senate and take his stand and take the consequences? Did he stand up and take the risks of his devotion to the Union?

Mr. CLAYTON. Does the Senator ask me a question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly.

Mr. CLAYTON. Does the Senator believe that at the time Senator Sebastian was absent from this city he could have come here if it had been known that he was coming from Arkansas to take his seat in the Senate of the United States as a loyal Senator? Does the Senator believe, from the knowledge which he has of the condition of that country at that time, that he could have come here then from Helena, Arkansas, and taken his seat?

Mr. COCKRELL. Yes, Mr. President, I have known thousands of confederate soldiers who left the northern part of Missouri and made their way to the confederate lines in Arkansas and Texas and Louisiana, through tenfold the dangers that Mr. Sebastian would have had to undergo in order to reach the capital of this country; and they did that to fight for "the stars and bars."

Mr. CLAYTON. I should like to make a suggestion, if the Senator will permit me.

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly.

Mr. CLAYTON. An obscure confederate soldier might work his way through the lines, but you must remember that William K. Sebastian was a Senator of the United States; he was not an obscure man, and every move that he would make was watched. I ask the Senator from Missouri, who was serving at that time in the cause which he thought was right, and serving gallantly, whether he would not have stopped William K. Sebastian if he had known that he was at that time on his way from Arkansas to take his seat in the Senate here in Washington?

Mr. COCKRELL. Trusten Polk, a Senator from the State of Missouri in the United States Senate, was here on the 11th day of July, 1861; I afterward saw him inside the confederate lines serving in the confederate army; and I should think that Mr. Sebastian could have gotten away from Arkansas and come to Washington City just as easily as Mr. Trusten Polk went from Washington City inside the confederate lines.

Mr. CLAYTON. The Senator did not answer my question.

Mr. COCKRELL. The question is, could Mr. Sebastian, on the 4th day of July, 1861, have been here? I say he could. I should have done it under the circumstances had I been in his place.

Mr. CLAYTON. Would not the Senator have stopped him if he had known he was on his way here?

Mr. COCKRELL. Yes, if he had come through my portion of the State, and if I had known that he was on his way to Washington, I would have stopped him, or else I would have had him signify that he would fight me in a regular way in the Union Army, and then I would have given him leave to go into the Union lines, as I have done in many instances.

Mr. President, it is a question of loyalty, and I say there have been hundreds and thousands of claims rejected by the commissioners of claims, and rejected by Congress, since 1862, where the claimants were infinitely more loyal than William K. Sebastian. I am not in favor of making fish of one and flesh or fowl of another. If Mr. Sebastian was a Union man, an active Union man, I am willing to tax myself to pay him whatever he was entitled to.

The Senator from Arkansas makes the point that he could not have left Arkansas on the 4th of July, 1861, to come to Washington. I ask the Senator why Mr. Sebastian could not have left Arkansas in 1862, in 1863, in 1864, in 1865, and come here and taken his seat?

Mr. PADDOCK. Probably he had not money enough to come here.

Mr. CLAYTON. He could have left Arkansas, but Mr. Sebastian was a very honorable man, and a man very sensitive of wrong. Having been expelled from this body without any opportunity to be heard, being, as it were, kicked out, I expect, as an honorable, high-toned man, he did not feel that he was called upon to come sneaking around here and begging his way back. I expect that the Senator from Missouri under the same circumstances would have said, "I will wait until these troubles are over, until men have time to reflect, until they become cool," as we are now, I hope, although I am afraid my friend from Missouri has not yet quite become cool, judging from the way in which he speaks. Under such circumstances the Senator from Missouri would have waited until these things cooled down, when justice could be had and he could be heard; and that Mr. Sebastian had not an opportunity to do because he died before the opportunity occurred.

Mr. COCKRELL. In other words, Mr. Sebastian did not have confidence enough in his Union brethren to come and risk his cause with them. I never would have been afraid at any time to go to Richmond, into the confederate cabinet, or to any place inside the confederate lines, believing that I could satisfy them that I was true to the cause. Do you not know, Mr. Senator, that if Mr. William K. Sebastian had known and felt that he was loyal to his country, he would not have been afraid to come among loyal men? "Birds of a feather flock together."

Mr. CLAYTON. I should have had no fear.

Mr. COCKRELL. Why did he not come here? There is the fact staring this body in the face that from 1862 to 1865 Mr. Sebastian could have come here, and if he did not come, why not? It was because he did not have confidence in the Senators occupying these seats, Union men, men who were doing everything that they could to preserve the integrity of the States. Why did he not have confidence in them? It was not because he was afraid to leave Arkansas after the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLAYTON] got there, for he could have sent an escort with him. Mr. Sebastian could have come to Washington City and the Senator from Arkansas could have given testimony as to his loyalty. Other officers of the Army could have sent him. Do you think that your own party, holding the entire ascendency here, was in such a condition that it would not have done justice to a Union man? Will the Senator from Arkansas confess that the great Union party then was not willing to do justice to Union men, and that from 1861 to 1865 they cast a stain upon a Union man's character and did not have the honor and the manhood to wipe it out? I have a higher opinion of the republican party myself than that.

Mr. CLAYTON. Does the Senator want an answer?

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly.

Mr. CLAYTON. I will give it.

Mr. PADDOCK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arkansas holds the floor. Does he yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. CLAYTON. Yes, sir.

Mr. PADDOCK. I should like simply to inquire of the Senator from Missouri if he can state the exact evidence upon which Senator Sebastian, of Arkansas, was expelled from the Senate?

Mr. COCKRELL. Yes. As we have only about eleven hours yet left I intend to have the record read before I get through.

Mr. PADDOCK. It would take the Senator but a few moments to state it, if he knows what it is.

Mr. COCKRELL. I have the record here containing a great many documents that I expect to have read.

Mr. PADDOCK. Had he committed any overt act of treason at that time?

Mr. COCKRELL. I will read for the edification of the Senator——

Mr. PADDOCK. If he had been expelled in 1861 was it not a sufficient excuse why in 1863 he did not come here?

Mr. COCKRELL. Then why should his heirs come here in 1876 and ask that we shall pass this resolution?

Mr. PADDOCK. Why should he have come here in 1862 if he had been expelled in 1861? Having been expelled would it not have been necessary for him to come with some warrant of authority?

Mr. COCKRELL. Why did he not come with the warrant of authority of the Senator from Arkansas, who was there in the Federal Army, or other officers who occupied that country, who knew his character and standing then as well as they do now? That is the question.

Mr. PADDOCK. For what purpose should he come if he was not a Senator, having been expelled?

Mr. COCKRELL. Then why do his heirs come now? Could he not have come then and asked that this record should be expunged?

Mr. PADDOCK. His heirs come to get justice because he was improperly, unlawfully, and unjustly expelled from the United States Senate, as I understand.

Mr. COCKRELL. Why did he not come for justice then? Why has there been this delay? I assert positively, and every republican Senator here will bear me witness, (and I desire now to talk to the republicans a little on this question,) that you never yet have passed a claim on such doubtful evidence of loyalty. You cannot find one upon your record. You have required stronger proof of loyalty in every case than has been made here. Here is a man who, in 1861, was expelled from the Senate, and he lived till 1865. From 1862 up to his death he was inside of the Federal lines. He never came near Washington City to have this great wrong undone; and yet he was in full sympathy and co-operation with those who had done the wrong! He did not have the manhood, the courage, to ask his own friends and brethren to undo the wrong; but when he has passed away his children wait a number of years and then come here, and what for? To wipe away the stain, apparently, but really, to draw the salary. There is the point. It is not to wipe out any stain that may be cast upon Mr. Sebastian that this resolution is introduced here; it is to draw the pay from 1861 to 1875, four years' pay.

Now, for the edification and gratification of my republican friends I want to exhibit a little document which I hold in my hand, entitled: "The New Conspiracy; What is Meant by the Restoration of the Confederate Democracy to Power. The Vital Issues of 1876 Considered."

This is a very precious document, which furnished the Sunday literature of the entire republican party during the late canvass. On every stump from one end of this land to the other we heard the cry that the democratic party was trying to pay the rebels for the property that had been taken during the war, that it was going to pay the confederates pensions, that it was going to pay for the colored people who had been slaves. In Missouri it was charged that the democracy would pay the price of a cord of wood for every rail that the Federal soldiers burned during the war in the South. In the sixth congressional district in Missouri it was published, and all over that State it was charged, that C. H. MORGAN had been trying to get a rebel claim paid; and what was that rebel claim? It was a claim of Mr. Henderson, of Iowa, a constituent of the Senators from that State, [Messrs. ALLISON and WRIGHT,] a man who had served in the Federal Army from the beginning to the close of the war, and who moved down into Missouri within the last year or two. The Government was indebted to him, and Mr. MORGAN introduced a bill for his relief, and it was sent broadcast all over his congressional district that MORGAN—he, too, an officer in the Federal Army—was trying to get rebels paid for their claims. When I got into the district, that was the first charge I heard made. I inquired something about Mr. Henderson. He was in the convention that nominated the candidate who tried to defeat Mr. MORGAN. My friend the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] will recollect Mr. Henderson, a bill for whose relief I worked so hard to get through, and for that I was denounced, and my friend Mr. MORGAN, a member of the other House, was denounced, as trying to get rebels paid for their property. I have no doubt but what the Senator who made this report, in his canvass in his own State, talked about these rebel claims and about the danger to the country from "the new conspiracy." I have in my hand a list of the claims referred to in it, and they were published all over this country, and sent out broadcast. They were published in the Republic here, a monthly magazine; and they were published in this form and sent all over the land. It was stated that the democracy were trying to pay these claims; and even a claim that my distinguished friend from Illinois had gotten through this Congress was published in Missouri as a rebel claim.

Mr. PADDOCK. Which Senator from Illinois?

Mr. COCKRELL. The distinguished soldier-Senator from Illinois. They were both soldiers, but I refer to the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, [Mr. LOGAN.]

Mr. PADDOCK. The most distinguished.

Mr. COCKRELL. The most distinguished, as the Senator from Nebraska says. A bill that he had gotten through for some person was sent broadcast over the land as a rebel claim. I have not the Republic here, which is a monthly magazine published in this city; but if my recollection is right, this is one of the claims which was charged in the issue of August, 1876, as a rebel claim which the rebel democracy were trying to get through and make Union people pay for. Here is a list of this new conspiracy and what is meant. [Exhibiting a pamphlet.] You see it is tolerably long.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Read it.

Mr. COCKRELL. It would be very edifying, but I shall only read a few sentences.

The surrender at Appomattox closed the war and yielded the dominion of the confederacy to the undisputed authority of the National Government; but in the transfer of the conflict from the field to the forum the nation was confronted with consequences of the struggle as grave and momentous as the war itself. Eleven States were found in social and political chaos and all form of civil government therein destroyed. The highest considerations of statesmanship and sound policy dictated that they should be speedily reconstructed and restored to their constitutional relations in the Union; but how was this to be accomplished? Four millions of emancipated slaves and five millions of disloyal citizens may be said to have comprised the entire population—

"Five millions of disloyal citizens!" I do not see any room, then, for Union citizens and loyal men—

Out of which the proposed governments were to be formed. In the nature of things the conduct of the late confederate in this new and wholly changed relation of citizenship became a subject of anxious inquiry. He had surrendered the sword of rebellion at home and the arts of diplomacy abroad, and sworn to renew his allegiance; but could he be trusted to found free and loyal governments on the basis of a complete and veritable freedom for all, and to aid in securing within those States the result of the nation's victory?

FALSE TEACHINGS.

Unfortunately there was little in his antecedents to inspire confidence. The education that made secession and rebellion easy had imbued his mind with the most pernicious heresies. The disciple of Calhoun, or the devotee of Davis, Slidell, and Yancey, he was indoctrinated with a measure of political poison which the fire of battle intensified and consecrated rather than destroyed.

* * * * * * *

THE VITAL ISSUE.

But there were national considerations quite as vital as those peculiarly local to the South. In 1861 the Representatives in Congress from the slave States numbered seventy-four against one hundred and fifty-nine from the States then free, while under the present apportionment they have one hundred and six to one hundred and eighty-five from the North. Thus, a solid southern vote—

Of which we we heard so much during the last year—which the democracy have determined to secure in the election next November at all hazards, with only forty representatives from the North, will give the South undisputed control of that body, while it will require only 10 votes from the North to also give it control of the Senate. According to this basis it will be seen furthermore that with the addition of only 47 electoral votes to the 138 belonging to the South that section will be enabled to elect a President and Vice-President.

* * * * * * *

SLAVERY VS. FREEDOM.

It is well known that two distinct sets of ideas have long divided the North and the South. The North has ever been jealous of her institutions of freedom, and protected all her citizens alike in their enjoyment.

* * * * * * *

BOURBONISM ALIVE AND DEFIANT. * * * A WAR OF INVASION AND VANDALISM.

Kindred to this feeling, and to add to its intensity, is a deep sense of the imagined injuries inflicted by the North.

* * * * * * *

HOW THE SITUATION IS ACCEPTED.

If the modifying influences of time have perceptibly improved this well-known temper, it is difficult to discover the character or extent of the change.

Then the document goes on to speak of the different amendments, and then come—

A FEW IMPORTANT FACTS.

Some idea of the magnitude of the proposed raid on the Treasury may be formed by examining a few of the proposed "measures of relief."

A joint resolution "for the relief of William K. Sebastian." That is one of the measures of relief here referred to and criticised. Then the paper goes on to speak of the various causes of complaint on the part of the South for remunerations, and then gives a long list: "The cotton-tax job. * * * How it would work? * * * Southern claims."

Now listen. I have no doubt this is very familiar to most of my republican friends who took part in the canvass:

SOUTHERN CLAIMS.

That was the alpha and omega; it was the introduction and the close of every political speech that I read or heard of during the canvas:

But there is another class of demands compared with which the forgegoing might be regarded as real luxuries. These comprise the rebel losses during the war.

Under an act of Congress approved March 3, 1871, the southern claims commission was created and empowered to receive, examine, and consider the justice and validity of such claims as should be brought to them of those citizens who remained loyal adherents to the cause and the Government of the United States—

Loyal adherents to the cause and the Government of the United States—in States proclaimed as in insurrection against the United States during the rebellion.

It will be observed that this law confines claims exclusively to "loyal adherents," &c., signifying that the Government holds itself responsible to no others for losses sustained by the war.

Then it gives the question here:

But what becomes of the tens of thousands of other rebel claimants who have not dared to venture before an "iron-clad commission."

That is, the claims commission.

Mr. President, it is well known that the republican party made this an issue, and now the republican party come in and claim quasi-loyalty as a ground for allowing a claim. Quasi-loyalty! Loyalty of such a character that if the confederacy had succeeded the claimant could have proved his loyalty to that government, but as the Union succeeded he can prove his loyalty to that tolerably well. My distinguished friend from Arkansas knows, and I dare him to bear personal testimony to the fact, that there were in the State which he represents, and in many other places, men who when the confederate army was there were all right for the confederate government, they opened their doors and fed and clothed us; and when you got there with your army they were the most loyal men that had ever been known. Where a man was actually and really loyal, I am willing to pay him; but I am not willing to pay those men who come in here and merely swear to their loyalty, as the distinguished Senator from California [Mr. SARGENT] knows, and who sometimes prove it when their records show the reverse. I think this is one of those claims, precisely. There is no active act of loyalty. It is said that Mr. Sebastian was at home. Any man could have staid at home. That was no test of loyalty. Had he loved the Union and the old flag, would he not have been willing to have risked something for it? Is it any excuse to say that he staid at home to take care of his property? Is that an excuse? Is he to be paid because he thought more of his property than he did either of the old Government or of that young government that was struggling for existence as a separate nationality? If he did think more of his property than he did of either of the governments, I do not think either government ought to pay him anything for it.

I say to my republican friends that if they pass this bill with this want of evidence of loyalty, I hope I shall not hear in any coming canvass hereafter any talk about a "new conspiracy" and what the rebel democracy will do about paying southern claims. The confederates acknowledge that they are not entitled to pay for the property they lost, and they are not here whining and asking to be paid for it at all. We are willing to do justice to the Union men, to those who were active for the Union, but not willing to do justice to those who were just as big rebels as we were, but who did not happen to have the moral courage to risk their lives in defense of their principles or to make any sacrifice, but who were loyal to whoever occupied the post for the time being.

I have made these remarks in all kindness. I want the republican party to understand that if they pass this bill they are forever hereafter barred, estopped, and precluded from bringing any charge against the democratic party for wanting to pay southern claims. If I believed that Mr. Sebastian had been truly and actively a loyal man I would be willing to wipe away this stain, as it would be a stain in the eyes of a Union man, if he were actually a Union man; but that would still involve another question, whether he should be paid for services not done and performed. That is the foundation of this resolution, and if we pass it we pass a bill to pay the heirs of William K. Sebastian the salary of a Senator from the 4th of March, 1861, to the 4th of March, 1865; for that is the bill, the whole meaning, intent, and object of the bill.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. President, I knew Mr. Sebastian well. I served with with him in Congress; I in the House and he in the Senate. I believe him to have been a loyal man. I do not think he sympathized with secession when it took place.

I have listened to my friend from Missouri whom we know to be a generous man, but who has allowed his prejudice against claims to run away with the innate desire which he always has, as a brave man, to do justice. He cannot produce evidence of disloyalty against Mr. Sebastian, and his own sense of justice would be shocked if he fully understood the course which was pursued by the Senate toward Mr. Sebastian. He was a Senator here. He did not go out. He was known when secession took place to be opposed to it. Congress met on the 4th of July, and on the 11th he was expelled. Expelled for disloyalty? By no means. When a motion was made to refer to a committee to inquire as to the fact whether he was disloyal, was that done? No, it was not. I ask my friend from Missouri would he be willing to see any Senator in this Chamber, who had openly expressed Union sentiments, expelled without the benefit of an inquiry? Mr. McDougall proposed to refer the resolution. The able Senator from Delaware, the elder Mr. Bayard, rose and protested against the resolution as an act of injustice. He said no Senator should be condemned without a hearing by a committee. And yet it was done, and done on the motion of a Senator from New Hampshire, upon the ground that the only evidence of his disloyalty was his absence. That is the record. He was condemned without a hearing and condemned upon the mere fact that he was absent. That I say is the record. My friend will not dispute it. What did he do? Could he have come here? Did he not see Jesse D. Bright expelled for writing a letter? Do you suppose he did not see that? Was there ever a more honorable and loyal man than Garret Davis, and because he expressed his opinion was there not a resolution to expel him? Was there not a resolution introduced to expel Powell? What man, if he could have gotten here, would have come when he felt himself expelled without a trial, and in the open face of the fact that he had been a Union man?

I say that is the record of this man, and would any man want to allow such a record to stand? If he was the direst enemy I ever had I would be willing to expunge a record so made up. It is not a matter of dollars and cents, it is to wipe out a record that is unjust in itself, that is false upon its face, that in a moment of high excitement the Senate passed without a trial and without letting it go to a committee to find out whether the man ever did a single act which would justify it. I say that, when the resolution for his expulsion was offered, McDougall, Bayard, and other Senators asked that it should go to a committee, but they were told, "No, he is away." Mr. Clark offered a resolution, and he coupled the name of Mr. Sebastian with various names of Senators who had seceded with their States, and the only reason he said why he did it was that Mr. Sebastian was not here. It was done within seven days after Congress met. Suppose every man were expelled in high party times who happened to be away ten or twelve days after the commencement of the session. The Senator from Missouri said himself, being on an opposite side during the war in a high trust—and all who know the Senator from Missouri at all know his magnanimity and fidelity—that he would have arrested Mr. Sebastian if he had attempted to go through Missouri on his way to Washington if he believed he were a Union man. Of course I cannot see into Mr. Sebastian's heart. I honor him that he did not come here. I believe it was in 1862 that Mr. Bright was expelled, and I say if that record was to be gone over again Mr. Bright would not be expelled. I believe it was in 1862 or 1863 that a resolution was offered to expel Mr. Garret Davis and another to expel L. W. Powell, and if such a resolution had been adopted there is no man who voted for it who would not have regretted it afterward.

Mr. Sebastian felt that he had never sympathized with secession; that he had not gone out with secession; and yet with his known Union sentiments he was expelled without a trial. He went to his grave with a sentence inflicted upon him without a trial; inflicted upon him without an indictment; inflicted upon him without his having had his day in court; but he was simply expelled because he was not here. Is it not natural that his infant children and his wife should desire to see that injustice remedied? Can there be a Senator here, I do not care whether they claim $10,000 or $20,000, who would not say, if he was expelled unjustly, his heirs are entitled to this money?

The Senator from Missouri says that Sebastian rendered no service. Sir, he was prevented not only from rendering service, but from giving his moral influence from a southern State that had gone out, he standing alone. The honorable Senator from Arkansas says that in 1862 he found him there on the Union side, and that the Union generals conferred and consulted with him and asked his advice. What more proof of loyalty does the Senator from Missouri want? This resolution comes from a committee which has investigated it. It seems to me that it was an act of injustice for the American Senate to condemn a man without letting his case go to a committee to be satisfied that they did him no injustice; and now to wipe it out you have stronger evidence. I was here when secession took place. I did not go out. I saw many States go out, and I saw them go out with regret, and tried to prevent their going out. I believe that William K. Sebastian used his moral influence to keep his colleague from going out, and I believe that he would have returned here if he could have gotten here. The highest proof that I know of his loyalty is that a gallant Union officer tells us that he found him when he went there in 1862 battling for the Union, with no spot of disloyalty upon his escutcheon. I ask, can the Senate hesitate to wipe out this stain?

Mr. BLAINE I rather inferred from a remark, which I heard as I came into the Chamber, made by the honorable Senator from Kentucky, that some great injustice at some time had been done, or attempted to be done, to Hon. Garret Davis by a resolution of expulsion. I think the honorable Senaor from Kentucky—and I only wish to correct the record in connection with his speech—will recall the fact that the expulsion of Jesse D. Bright was moved by Garret Davis himself.

Mr. STEVENSON. Certainly.

Mr. BLAINE. And that all the force that ever was brought to bear to expel Lazarus W. Powell came also from Mr. Davis.

Mr. STEVENSON. I understand that he drew the resolution.

Mr. BLAINE. And got Mr. Wilkinson, of Minnesota, to offer it.

Mr. STEVENSON. I remember it.

Mr. BLAINE. And he sustained it, I might say, apparently.

Mr. STEVENSON. And he afterward said that he felt that if that act had been consummated he would have done the rankest injustice that could have been done to a fellow-man.

Mr. BLAINE. That I do not doubt; but whatever responsibility there might have been at that time for excesses I think should go to the right quarter, and not inferentially even go to the wrong quarter.

In regard to the case now in hand I think it can be said of Mr. Sebastian, to put the worst phase on it, that he is entitled, as the living are, to the benefit of a doubt. He is dead. He cannot speak for himself. I had the pleasure of his acquaintance. I knew him well pending the outbreak of the war. He struck me always as being a southern Union man at that day, and not a pretender; and out of honorable regard for the dead, as he cannot speak for himself, and out of tender regard for those who are interested in his memory and in his fame, I should hope that this resolution might pass the Senate unanimously. I shall cordially vote for it.

Mr. MAXEY. Mr. President, I had the honor of knowing William K. Sebastian for more than twenty-five years. I know something of those who were secessionists in the State of Arkansas in 1861 and 1862; and I know the fact that William K. Sebastian was not regarded as a secessionist, but as a Union man, and I undertake to say that you cannot find a secessionist in the limits of the State of Arkansas who would come here and swear that William K. Sebastian was with them; not one. I will challenge the Senator from Missouri or anybody else who knows anything about Arkansas politics, to find one man who did not regard William K. Sebastian as a Union man. He was the soul of honor; he was a pure man; he was a poor man at the time of his death, and a man of large family. It does seem to me that when a man is dead and gone, when even if he had been tried for treason and convicted and a forfeiture of his property had been made part of the sentence, it could only have lasted during his lifetime, this pursuing of a man upon a doubtful claim of disloyalty into the very grave and robbing his children after him is not fair, is not just, is not such conduct as should be expected from an American Senator. Sir, the Apostle Paul when he was once tried said that he was a Roman citizen and demanded to be heard. I say William K. Sebastian was an American citizen and he had a right to be heard, and no sentence can be sustained upon principles of justice or fair dealing that condemns a man without a hearing.

During the four years of the war many things were done here, many things were done everywhere, that we all regret, and I undertake to say that now in the Senate of the United States, in time of profound peace, no one would lift his voice and say that a man should be condemned without a hearing. We have the decision of the highest judicial tribunal of this land declaring in words of living light that the Constitution of the United States is the panoply and the shield protecting the citizen in war as well as in peace. Knowing no difference between war and peace, and the Constitution of our common country demanded that, Mr. Sebastian should have had a fair and impartial trial. The Senator from Kentucky testifies to the fact that such was not granted. I do not now blame those—it is not for me to do that—who, in times of high excitement and when a spirit was aroused in one portion of the country against another, thought it was right to do what now in cooler moments they would think was wrong. Mr. Sebastian was expelled doubtless by those who at the time thought they were justified in doing it; but when "the sober second thought" comes, when we have got to review this record, I ask can we say that it was right to condemn a man without a hearing, and not only condemn him without a hearing but when his children stand here with that stain upon the character of their father, is it right that the record should stand, erroneous though it be?

Mr. WEST. I desire to offer an amendment to this resolution by way of addition:

Resolved, That John Ray, claimant for the seat in the Senate vacated by the resignation of William P. Kellogg, late Senator of Louisiana, be paid the sum of $1,329.14 out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

Mr. CLAYTON and others. Don't put that on.

Mr. WEST. I hear "Don't put that on." It is very well known to the Senate that at the last session an allowance was made to Mr. Pinchback for the succession of Mr. Kellogg. This is the claim of his predecessor, who came here with his credentials, and the only reason that the case was not acted upon at the time was that by an error the case was referred to the Committee on Contingent Expenses, who reported in favor of its payment, and the Senate refused to act on the report of the Committee on Contingent Expenses, and referred the case, last session, to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. I have the authority of the chairman of that committee for saying that had he had the opportunity, had the committee not been so embarrassed with other and much more important matters, he would have pressed it upon the consideration of his committee, and no doubt it would have been acted upon favorably. I regret that he is not here to-night.

I will admit that it is not exactly germane, but it is always germane to pay your honest debts; and the Senate having established the fact of recognition of a claimant to this seat in the person of Mr. Pinchback by paying him some $17,000, you might certainly do the gentleman who preceded him as a claimant here the justice of paying him for the short time embraced by this amendment. In order that the Senate may understand what it means, I will say that it is paying Mr. Ray from the 14th day of January, 1873, the day Mr. Kellogg vacated his seat in this body, until the 4th day of March, the concluding term of the Forty-third Congress, with mileage one way only.

Mr. CLAYTON. I should like to ask the Senator from Louisiana whether this case has been considered by any committee of this body?

Mr. WEST. It has been considered by the Committee on Contingent Expenses.

Mr. CLAYTON. This session?

Mr. WEST. No, sir; in the Forty-third Congress and reported back, and it ought to be paid. The Senator from Indiana, the chairman of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, [Mr. MORTON,] told me to-night that the only reason it has not been reported from that committee was that the committee had overlooked it; that it is an eminently just and proper claim, but they have been so overwhelmed with business concerning the Southern States that they had forgotten to take this up.

Mr. CLAYTON. Why not bring it up as a separate measure and let it stand on its own merits?

Mr. WEST. I shall be perfectly willing to do that, and hope I shall be recognized by the Chair to do that. I do not wish to embarrass this case, because I admit there is no analogy between the two; but I cannot consent to sit here, as I did last session, and see men paid, when a Senator from my own State has claims which are equally just and which are entitled to the same consideration. It being understood that I shall have the opportunity to offer it separate from this case, I withdraw it for the moment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. COCKRELL. I am a party to no such agreement.

Mr. ALCORN. I rise, Mr. President, for the purpose of bearing my humble testimony to the character, standing, and integrity of the person whose name is involved in this resolution. I was a near neighbor to Senator Sebastian for a great many years; I might say that I was upon intimate terms with him, and I never heard him express a disunion sentiment in my life. I knew him before the war began; I happened to be a prisoner in the town in which he lived while the war was going on, and I had frequent interviews with him and I never heard him express what I conceived to be a disloyal sentiment. This is just about as much as I propose to say about him.

But there are some reflections suggested to me by what has been said here that I desire to utter. When the war closed there was a sacrifice of $2,000,000,000 of slave property to which the southern people considered themselves as much entitled as you consider yourselves entitled to your property, however good your title may be. The southern people thought that a grave hardship. It was nevertheless one of those things that come as results of rebellion, and they were compelled to bear it, notwithstanding the fact that the ukase, or the amendment to the Constitution, went to the home of the widow whose property was taken, to the orphan who sat by weeping in desolation, who on account of its tender years could not exercise a judgment upon the question of loyalty or disloyalty, union or disunion. No odds how much the parties owning this character of property in the South may have been devoted to the Government, no odds how loyal they may have been, notwithstanding the father may have had his sons, as was often the case, fighting the battles of the country in the Federal Army, yet when the war was ended his property was destroyed and no compensation was made to him; but on the other hand, an amendment to the Constitution was enacted whereby he was forbidden ever to look for any compensation for the property that has been thus taken from him. No people have paid more dearly for the consequences of rebellion than the southern people, and certainly they who paid the most dearly of all were they who stood loyal to the Government of the United States notwithstanding the action of their State governments.

Senator Sebastian was opposed to secession. He never gave an utterance in disloyalty to the Government of the United States, at least up to the time that secession was a consummated fact. He strove as well as he could strive; he plead as well as he could plead; he voted as well and as strongly as he could vote to ward off that danger to his country. He warned his countrymen of the danger that was impending, of the consequences that would result to them; but they went madly into secession. Sebastian suffered the consequences; his property was destroyed; he died with a full knowledge of the poverty that surrounded him, of the beggared condition of his family, and beggared from no fault of his own.

When, Mr. President, at the close of the war that was done to which I have referred, the southern people felt it a hardship; they felt it a grievance; they felt it a wrong; but it was a consequence of the rebellion. They had no power to resist, even if they had been disposed to resist, because they had been conquered and they sat weeping in desolation over the destruction of their hopes of government. After the war had ceased and the slaves had been freed, then there was another act of the Government of which the southern people complained and justly complained, as they thought. The slave had been made free; but he was freed with the fetters upon his body. He had no land upon which he could plant himself as his own; he had no house to cover his head. He was a beggar in the land, a pariah in the country of his birth and of his residence.

The Government of the United States imposed a cotton tax on the the southern people, and under the operation of that statute they were beggared even more than they supposed they ever could be. They were absolutely almost starved to death. Fortunes were destroyed. The colored people were in some districts of the country almost starved. The Government of the United States gathered to itself from those poor, down-trodden, poverty-stricken people $60,000,000 that now lies in the Treasury of the United States, and, as they believe, wrongfully taken from them. They appealed to the courts under the patronage of these claim agents, of whom we have heard so much, for the claim agents were the only men who had any money by means of which they could prosecute their claims, and by a divided court they lost their case.

After the war closed, too, some of them had cotton at home, their own property, and that cotton was taken from them by soldiers contrary to the law of the case and the proclamation of the President. It was sold and placed to the credit of those parties in the Treasury of the United States; and now there are $12,000,000 that the Government of the United States does not claim as its own, but holds according to the decisions of the courts in trust for the owners whose property was taken, as I say, in violation of law. They appealed to the courts. The military authorities, in defiance of the proclamation and of the law, set the courts at defiance and the property was taken and confiscated by the commissions that the confiscating parties could get to sit upon it, sold, and the proceeds returned to the Treasury, and now $12,000,000 of that money is in the Treasury not belonging to the Government of the United States, and the Government in truth not claiming it, but holding it in trust, as the courts have decided, for the owners. The southern people have appealed to Congress and asked relief. They have been denied it, and they have been denied it by the republican party, as they hold.

But now comes the unkindest cut of all. The southern people supposed they had some sympathizers among the democratic party. They did suppose that the men who fought the battles of the southern confederacy, that the men who had worn the gray, who had unsheathed the sword, and who had fought for them, would not at least turn upon them in their poverty and their desolation and strike them down, as they have been stricken down to-night. Samuel J. Tilden was the man who slapped the southern people in the face, and when the republican party had voted them down he it was who over his own hand published to the southern people an affront, an insult to their faces, that he stood ready to veto all bills that might be passed by Congress for the relief of the southern people. The southern people had to stand this. They had been impoverished; they had been destroyed; but here came an insult from a source that they did not expect; but they had to bear it. Upon this to-night comes the honorable Senator from Missouri, [Mr. COCKRELL,] the champion of the Tilden idea, and he gives notice to "all the world and the rest of mankind" that from and after this time, if there is anything voted to the southern people, right or wrong, he will hold up the republican party as responsible for robbery. What does he say? "You can vote to the northern people what you please;" that is all right, according to his theory; but "Vote a dollar, you republicans, to the southern people and I hold you responsible before the people of my State, Missouri, for having committed an outrage and thus having ravished the Treasury of the Government of the United States." My God, Mr. President, the sufferings of the southern people, the tribulations of the southern people, the wrongs of the southern people, the desolation of the southern people exceed anything of which we read in history. They cannot be equaled. But the Senator from Missouri has suffered by reason of the payment of these claims. They have haunted him in Missouri when he was going on his canvass, and it was held up to him "You will have robbed the Treasury, you men who have supported these southern claims," and he will never vote for another one! He has been blistered in Missouri on this subject, and he will never vote for another! I undertake to say there is another bill that he will never vote for, and that is you will never get him to vote for another electoral commission, [laughter,] though he may sit here until he is as old as Methuselah. These are two things that the Senator from Missouri will never do any more, [laughter;] I will go his security for that.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, I have been gratified at the oration of one of the leaders of the republican party and the reprimand which he has delivered to his own party; but when I stood on this floor to arraign him and the republican party for their false charges made against the democratic party it does not lie well in his mouth to say that I am taking a part against the southern people. You and your party have established the doctrine that nobody in the South but actively loyal men shall be paid. You have established it and now because I want to hold you to it, because I want to hold you to the rule you have established, you begin to protest——

Mr. ALCORN. Did you think it was right?

Mr. COCKRELL. That is not the question.

Mr. ALCORN. Ah! that is the question.

Mr. COCKRELL. I am carrying out a law which you here enforce against every other man; and I do not propose that your pets and favorites shall come in and draw money from the Treasury, while other men better than they shall be turned away from the Treasury Department empty because they were not distinguished citizens and have not distinguished friends who can say that they were loyal up to the act of secession. That is the time that my friend testifies about this gentleman. I was loyal up to that time, too, [laughter,] and there were thousands of us who were. The bravest men that ever I saw under the "stars and bars," were men who were Union men until after the battles of the war began. It is no test to say that a man cherished Union sentiments in those days prior to the beginning of hostilities. Why nearly every man through the length and breadth of the Union was loyal in that sense. It was not that they loved the Union less, but that they loved the confederacy more. It was not because we hated the old flag; we had no hate at all against it; but it was because we loved the young "stars and bars" of the confederacy better.

Now, Mr. President, it comes unkindly from the distinguished Senator from Mississippi to say that I am casting any reflection upon southern men. He knows that every man in Mississippi who was in the confederate army or who showed his devotion to the confederacy, is precluded by your own party from getting a dollar's compensation for anything. Now I am asked whether I justify your party in what they are doing. It is a little presumptuous question. I am a loyal man now, and I am not revolutionizing the laws of the country. You have made these laws. You have now the power to undo them; you have the power to change and modify them, and do justice to those persons whom you are entering complaints in favor of. You belong to the republican party. The republican party has passed the law which I say bars this claim. It is on the statute-book. I was simply bringing to bear the rule which you have enforced all the time. If the rule is wrong, help repeal it; if it is tight stick to it and do not avoid it, do not evade it, do not dodge it in exceptional cases because a certain distinguished gentleman may have been the friend of this man or may have been the friend of the other.

I just want to tell the Senator from Mississippi a little incident that occurred here last summer. There was a bill reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs by the distinguished Senator from California [Mr. SARGENT] allowing a certain distinguished citizen of the State of Missouri $50,000 for a steamer. It was reported favorably. I took the report and examined it very thoroughly and carefully, and there was the best proof of loyalty in the world, the case of a man loyal all the time. He had happened to be down in Mississippi, though he had gone to the Lauderdale Springs down there and some other springs over the river in Alabama for his health and remained there an invalid during the war. The case was called up here. The distinguished Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] objected to the bill, and it was laid over. The Adjutant-General when he examined the confederate archives—the rebel archives, as my friend would say—found there a receipt to this gentleman from the confederate government for the purchase of the vessel. He had sold it to the confederate government. I went home and inquired about his loyalty. I met with two gentlemen living in his town, one of whom had been a Confederate States senator during the war. I asked him if he was a loyal man. The rebel spoke up and said: "He was as big a rebel as I was; why ask the question?" I told him he had a claim of $50,000 against the Government. The other man, who was loyal, his neighbor, said: "Well, I should suppose he was loyal; he was supporting Hayes and Wheeler." There is a little too much of that to suit me. The fact that a man may be a republican now, or may be supporting republican politics now, does not wipe away any disloyalty which he may have cherished or felt or acted in 1861, 1864, or 1865.

I am astonished at my good friend from Texas [Mr. MAXEY] rising to vindicate the character of Mr. Sebastian. I do not suppose there is a man in the Senate who has ever thought aught against Mr. Sebastian. We are not dealing with his character; we are not assailing his character; we are casting no aspersion upon it. I hope my friend would not consider it an aspersion upon him, if he had been here in the Unied States Senate and had gone down South and fought as he did during the war, if the Senate had introduced and passed a resolution of expulsion. I am sure I would not. It was a voluntary expulsion, an expatriation on my part; and I do not think any resolution that the General Government might have passed could have added anything to it in any way that I would have cared a cent for. It is a question of fact. You have enacted a law; you say you will pay loyal citizens, those who were actively loyal; you say you will not pay anybody else. Now you come in to make exceptions, and the question is when you bring up a case, was that man a loyal man? not whether he was a good man. Why just as good men as there were in the South were in the confederate army, and I am willing to vindicate them that far. I say that just as brave and honorable and true men as there were in Mississippi or any other place went into the confederate army, and it is no aspersion to them to say that they went into the confederate army. They do not feel so, and I do not feel so at all. We were honest, sincere, and conscientious in what we did; but as to whether we were wrong or not, the Great Jehovah alone will decide that question. That is not in controversy now at all.

Here you say Mr. Sebastian was loyal. What is your evidence of it? My distinguished friend from Kentucky says that he was a Union man in 1861; and so were, as I said before, nearly all the men in the confederate army. I can show you some of the most gallant officers in the confederate army who were Unionists up to July, 1861, and some even later than that.

I want to bring this down to the republican party. You have charged that it is the democrats who are trying to pay rebel claims. The very claims which you voted to pay as loyal claims you have charged us all over the broad land, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, in every Northern State where it would have any force and effect, with trying to pay as to rebels, not Union men, for their property destroyed. You have established the rule that we cannot get pay for it. We are not asking you to repeal that rule; nothing of the kind. You say you will pay Union men and you turn round and pay them and then charge it upon us and say we are paying rebels, and if there should be another such campaign again as the campaign of 1876, this very claim will be paraded all over the country and it will be told at every country school-house by the country orators throughout the length and breadth of the land, "See what these rebels are doing, taxing the country to pay rebels for property taken during the war." Every claim paid belonging to a man living in the Southern States is charged to be a rebel claim. I want the republican party to place themselves upon record and prove that that is the fact. I want you to place yourselves upon record in this case. It is nothing to me whether you pay Mr. Sebastian's heirs or not; it is a question of principle, and I want you to assert what that principle is to-night and to say there were Union men and loyal men in the Southern States; and when you offer to pay them and when you do pay them any of their claims, do not turn around and charge it upon the rebel democracy; take the responsibility upon yourselves and say to your people, "There were loyal men down there and we are paying them; we are not charging the rebels with doing it."

What committee does this come from? The Committee on Privileges and Elections. Who is chairman of that committee? The great Senator from Indiana, [Mr. MORTON,] the distinguished leader of the republican party. That is the point that I am making in this case, and I desire to make it to the republicans here, and I desire the issue made, so that if another canvass comes on, and these charges are brought up, I can read before the American people the record of the republican Senators here testifying to the loyalty of citizens of the Southern States, and that it is not the rebels paying other rebels for property taken, used, and destroyed by the Federal Army. That is the point I make exactly, and I have been saving this precious document, The New Conspiracy, just for an opportunity of having it here to show it to the country, and to show it in the face of the republican Senate, and to show the charges that were made from one end of this land to the other, and to ask the republican Senate whether they will indorse the charges which were made during the canvass or not. These charges were made, and I want to see whether they will repeat them here and stand by them, and say that every bill for the relief of any man from a Southern State is for the payment of rebel claims.

Mr. ALCORN. Mr. President, I will not weary the Senate by detaining them a great while. The Senator from Missouri states the fact that he had been voting heretofore as I understand him and that the party to which he belongs had been sympathizing and voting for the payment of just rebel claims. I thought it was commendable of him to do so. He complains, however, that the republican party made a point against him before the masses of the people, and that because they did make the point he was likely to lose some political strength on that account and hence he feels justified now in opposing them.

The southern people, as I said awhile ago, were left in a most deplorable condition. For a long time after the war they were denied representation here. This was one of the penalties of disunion; and it was imposed that all people who go into disunion or revolution might know the fact that the penalties are terrible; patriots if they succeed, traitors if they fail. But when the southern people were allowed to send representatives here, and chose those representatives from the body of the confederate army, they did have a right to expect and they did hold that all just and proper claims of the southern people against the Government of the United States would at least be fairly treated by their own representatives. But now here to-night the champion of the principle that I have complained of in the republican party rises up, and, with the letter of Samuel J. Tilden, he comes panoplied in all his power and eloquence to declare that from this time henceforward he will hold the republican party responsible for each and every vote they may give for the purpose of allowing to the southern people that which they may under the law of nations and war justly claim. He comes here and stands by the grave of Senator Sebastian, of Arkansas; he makes his speech over his dead body. After denouncing the pretensions of his heirs, he comes here and declares that he has said nothing whatever that reflects upon this man, and that in truth and fact he holds him to have been a most honorable man. I do pray God that I may be saved from the eulogy to be pronounced over my grave by the Senator from Missouri if he calls this speaking kindly of a dead Senator, whose heirs come here now and ask that the Congress of the United States shall wipe out a judgment that was recovered in this court without notice, without giving him a day, without summoning him to appear; a judgment that was recovered against him in his absence and to which he was not permitted to plead.

The Senator from Missouri talks about what the democratic party suffered on account of their having voted for the payment of these claims.

Mr. COCKRELL. I hope the Senator does not intend to willfully misrepresent me.

Mr. ALCORN. I certainly do not.

Mr. COCKRELL. I said no such thing. I did not say that the democratic party had voted for these claims, or had suffered because they had so voted. I said that you and your party charged us with trying to get these claims through.

Mr. ALCORN. When the gentleman said that I had charged it, he said that which is not so, for I have never charged it; and each and every Senator knows that since I have been upon this floor I have stood and voted with the democrats of this House upon this question, and my heart has gone out to the democrats upon this subject. I have stood before the southern people and have claimed that the republican party to which I belonged had turned up to this time a deaf ear to their pleadings for their rights, as they hold them to be, or their equities, under the law; but I have told them that the time would come when justice would be done them, and I have asked them to wait. But now, when the Senator from Wisconsin, in his report, so generously put forth, expresses a willingness to do justice to the dead Senator from a southern State, when the Senator from Wisconsin comes here with his words of sympathy for the Senator who has now gone to his long resting place, and speaks a kind word to the orphan who weeps over his grave, we find the Senator from Missouri tearing up the sod from over the resting place of Sebastian, and declaring that he was neither fish nor fowl, and was not entitled to any consideration on the part of the Senate of the United States. He said that he wanted him either fish or fowl; he was nobody, according to the construction of the language of the honorable Senator from Missouri. That Senator from Missouri, in my humble judgment, whose heart I know to be kind, has done himself injustice to-night, I trust he has not done the memory of the deceased Senator in the judgment of the Senate an injustice; but he has done himself and his own heart an injustice in his pleadings on this occasion.

He speaks about fraudulent claims that have been presented here. I know the fact that there have been fraudulent claims presented from the Southern States, and I know the fact that combinations have been formed, and that bills have passed through the Senate and Congress, and adjudications have been recognized that were unjust, and that the Government of the United States has been robbed of its money. I have voted against all such claims; I have done as well as I could to distinguish between just and equitable claims and those that were fraudulent; but because fraudulent claims have been passed by the Senate, is that a reason why a just claim should be voted down?

The Senator from Missouri says that it must be proved, before he can recover judgment in this case, that the claimant was actively loyal. The proof does not devolve on him or on his heirs. He was ejected from the Senate without a day in court, without notice. He was turned out in his absence. Congress had a called session, met on the 4th of July, and on the 11th he was expelled from the Senate without a hearing. Now, it is upon the Senate to prove that he was disloyal, and in the absence of proof of disloyalty he is entitled to a judgment at the hands of the Senate. There has not been an effort to show that he was disloyal. The proof shows all the way through that he was loyal. I testify in my humble way that I saw him when I was a prisoner; yes, sir, I was a prisoner, for I stood by the Senator from Missouri in that dark and trying hour. I have never pleaded that I was loyal to the Government of the United States then; I have never intimated that; I have asked for no compensation for any property that was taken from me; I stand by the side of the Senator from Missouri on that point; but Sebastian was a loyal man. If words made him loyal, if sentiments expressed to me when he visited me as a prisoner could be taken, he was a loyal man. In my judgment, he was a loyal man; and I shall vote to wipe out, not the stain—it was not a disgrace, according to our view of the case, to be a confederate; we hold it to be no disgrace, but it is an imputation that is false, and I would expunge the falsehood from the records, and I would do no more.

Mr. HOWE. Mr. President, I do not wish to displace this resolution, but I ask unanimous consent to interrupt the debate for a moment to report and put upon its passage a House resolution.

Mr. CLAYTON. We can pass this now.

Mr. DORSEY. I hope the Senator from Wisconsin will allow us to take a vote; I think we can get a vote now.

Several SENATORS. Let us have a vote.

Mr. DORSEY. I hope we shall now have a vote on the question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I desire to say one word before the vote is taken on this resolution. The memorial was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and it was assigned by that committee to me, together with the accompanying evidence, to examine and report upon the case. I examined the case fully and very carefully. The testimony of nine witnesses was submitted in support of the memorial. The memorial itself is verified. The testimony of eight of these witnesses was in the shape of affidavits, and the ninth was a letter. Each one of these witnesses testifies to the loyalty of Senator Sebastian. Instead of being a weak case, as the Senator from Missouri intimated, it is a very strong case. The loyalty of Sebastian is established beyond all controversy. In any court of law in the world if the issue was whether he was loyal or disloyal, it could not fail upon the testimony presented to the committee to be found in favor of his loyalty.

The Senator says that we have established a rule that a person who is required to make out his loyalty must show that he was actively loyal; this case comes fully up to that standard. The testimony of half a dozen of these witnesses shows that prior to the war, during the war, and after the war Mr. Sebastian was actively loyal. One of these witnesses testifies that after he left Washington in March, 1861, and returned to his home in Arkansas, he made a speech in Helena, where I believe he resided, opposing secession. That I believe was before the ordinance of secession was adopted by that State.

Quite a number of witnesses are gentlemen who are known to the country. A. O. P. Nicholson testifies to his loyalty prior to the breaking out of the war. Ex-Senator Dodge, of Iowa, also testifies to his loyalty prior to the breaking out of the war. His colleague in the Senate prior to that time, R. W. Johnson, testifies very fully to facts showing his loyalty, showing his devotion to the Union, showing that at all times he was opposed to the principle of secession.

Without desiring to detain the Senate I will ask the Clerk to read a short letter from Governor Washburn, of my own State, who commanded in Arkansas as early as 1862.

The Secretary read as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 12, 1875.

DEAR SIR: On arriving in Washington this morning I saw and read in the Chronicle a memorial from the sons of the late Hon. W. K. Sebastian, formerly Senator from Arkansas, the original of which, it was said, had been placed in your hands to be laid before the Senate, asking for the rescinding of a resolution adopted by the Senate in 1861 expelling him and other Senators from the Senate for being engaged in a "conspiracy to destroy the Union and Government."

Having some personal knowledge of the facts stated in the petition, it is due to truth, justice, and the memory of Mr. Sebastian that I should state them for the consideration of the Senate.

I knew Mr. Sebastian while he was a member of the Senate, and before the breaking out of the war. On the 12th day of July, 1862, I occupied Helena, Arkansas, with the advance of the Army of the Southwest. One of the first gentlemen to call upon me at my headquarters was Mr. Sebastian, and he called very often afterward, and so long as I remained at Helena I had many conversations with him. He always expressed himself as deeply solicitous for the restoration and preservation of the Union, and as having no sympathy with the efforts to destroy it. He claimed that Arkansas had been dragooned into the rebellion, and that a large majority of the people of the State were satisfied with the Union as it was. He always manifested a great deal of feeling in the matter. He often spoke of the Senate resolution expelling him, declaring that he had done nothing in thought, word, or act to justify it, and he had it in contemplation then to return to Washington and claim his seat in the Senate, which I frequently urged him to do, believing that it would have a great influence in Arkansas at that time, as the conscription in that State was then just commencing. We discussed the matter often, and I believe that he was only deterred from a feeling of doubt as to how he would be received by the Senate.

Subsequently he left Helena and went to Memphis to reside, and I found him there on assuming command of the district of West Tennessee, in April, 1864. And from that time he was a frequent visitor at my headquarters, until he was prostrated by the illness that resulted in his death. I called upon him often during his last illness, and saw him only a day or two before he died, and never heard him utter a word that was not of a loyal and friendly character toward the Government.

I state these facts for what they are worth, and request that you will place this before the committee to whom this memorial is referred.

I have the honor to be your obedient servant,

C. C. WASHBURN.

Hon. T. W. FERRY,
President of the Senate.

Mr. CLAYTON. I ask for the yeas and nays on the resolution.

Mr. WEST, and Mr. CAMERON of Wisconsin. There is no necessity for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HOWE. As the yeas and nays are to be called, I want to know one or two things about this matter that I do not know, and one is this: If a Senator from Massachusetts or Wisconsin—I believe the two most loyal States in the world—had been absent from the Senate, not by sickness of himself or his family, would he be entitled to pay as the law stood at the time of this absence?

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I will say to my colleague that I do not think the question is pertinent at all.

Mr. HOWE. Why not?

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I will tell you why not. My colleague will remember that early in July, 1861, Senator Sebastian was expelled. One reason for his absence afterward was the fact that he had been expelled. My colleague will remember that only the other day, two or three days ago, a bill was reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs the substance of which was to pay a man who had been improperly, and, as it turned out, illegally, dismissed from the naval service. He was out of the naval service eight or ten or twelve years, and it turned out upon final investigation that he was illegally dismissed, and we passed a bill paying him his salary during all those years that he was out, because he had been illegally dismissed. Senator Sebastian, we claim, was out because he had been illegally dismissed, and consequently was entitled to his pay; and if a Senator from Massachusetts or from Wisconsin had been illegally expelled from the Senate, and the Senate afterward became convinced that he had been so illegally expelled, I answer the question of my colleague by saying that he would be entitled to his pay.

Mr. HOWE. What was the illegality in the expulsion of Senator Sebastian?

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. He was expelled upon two grounds, first, that he was disloyal. The Committee on Privileges and Elections find as a fact that he was not disloyal. The Senate at that time took no evidence whatever upon the question. The other point was that he was not present in the Senate at that time. He was expelled at the called session of Congress in 1861. That called session convened on the 4th day of July, and he was expelled on the 11th day of July, only seven days after the commencement of the session. Now, although my colleague is generally here, I think it quite likely that he has sometimes not appeared in his seat within seven days from the commencement of a session of Congress. No one will claim that absence for seven days was a ground or reason for expulsion. So that the only reason for expulsion was that he was disloyal. Now, we find as a fact that he was not.

Mr. HOWE. Was Senator Sebastian in his seat during the executive session which commenced the 4th of March, 1861?

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I am not able to tell whether he was or not.

Mr. HOWE. Was not that a fact found in the case, one way or the other?

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. It is not, one way or the other.

Mr. HOWE. It would be very easy to determine whether he was or not.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I do not know whether he was or was not.

Mr. HOWE. Would it not be an important fact in the case?

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I do not think it would be of any importance whatever.

Mr. HOWE. But if he was absent during the five or six weeks, which I think was about the length of that session, and did not appear at the next session, then it would not be a mere absence of seven days.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. It is recited in the resolution that he had not appeared in his seat during the extra session in July. There is no reference whatever to any prior session.

Mr. HOWE. And there was no defense made of Mr. Sebastian's loyalty at the time of the expulsion?

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. He had no notice whatever of the charge that was made against him.

Mr. HOWE. It was not convenient to serve notice upon him, I suppose.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I understand as a fact, although I do not know that that appears in the testimony, that he had no notice whatever that the session had been called. It was not convenient for him to get here at that time; he was over three hundred miles within the confederate lines; and the testimony shows that it was an actual impossibility for him to get out of the confederate lines at that time.

Mr. HOWE. When did he go into those lines?

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. He lived there. He went there before the secession of the State of Arkansas.

Mr. HOWE. How long before?

Mr. CLAYTON. He was there opposing secession. That was part of his business there.

Mr. HOWE. How long before the secession of Arkansas?

Mr. DORSEY. I hope we shall have a vote on this question.

Mr. HOWE. Will you vote now?

Mr. DORSEY. Now, if we can.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Let us have it now.

Mr. HOWE. I think I will accept the advice of my friends; and besides I suspect that I have got all the information I can get.

Mr. INGALLS. Can the resolution be amended?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It can be.

Mr. INGALLS. I move to strike out the last eight lines.

Mr. HOWE. I think I have got information enough to warrant me in voting "no."

Mr. INGALLS. The evidence being undoubted that Sebastian remained in Arkansas and saved all his property, so far as his personal presence could contribute to that result, and that he performed no service whatever for the Government, it seems to me that we shall do enough if we remove what some Senators have been pleased to advert to as the stain upon his reputation, leaving the question of the compensation that is to be paid for the services he did not render to some subsequent time. I hope that inasmuch as the sole argument upon which this has been based has been the wrong that has been done to his reputation, to his fair name, and to the memory of one who has passed away from us, that the Senate will content itself to-night with simply removing that imputation and not burden the Treasury by compelling the payment of a large sum of money for services which he could not have rendered, and for which he certainly would not have received pay if he had died, and that would have been no worse than being expelled.

Mr. BLAINE. If I do not interrupt the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. INGALLS. Not at all, for I have got through.

Mr. BLAINE. I was going to call attention when the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. HOWE] was on the floor to the fact that this very session, so far as I know without contradiction by any one here, Congress has voted $10,000 to JOHN YOUNG BROWN, of Kentucky, in full pay for the Fortieth Congress in which he was not allowed to serve, but in which in the judgment of the House now he ought to have been allowed to serve.

Mr. INGALLS. Did the Senate vote that?

Mr. BLAINE. The Senate did that. This session, I think, that bill went through.

Mr. INGALLS. I have no recollection of it.

Mr. BLAINE. If I am wrong some Senator here will know it.

Mr. INGALLS. He was personally seeking his seat all the time.

Mr. BLAINE. But the House refused to seat him because he was considered disloyal. The analogy is very striking.

Mr. INGALLS. He always demanded admission.

Mr. BLAINE. The House refused to seat JOHN YOUNG BROWN in the Fortieth Congress because of disloyalty. Now, the House ten years afterward says on a review of the case that he was not disloyal. It was the action of the House that prevented him serving. They have put in one of the bills—I am looking for the chairman of the Appropriation Committee to tell me on what bill——

Mr. STEVENSON. The legislative bill.

Mr. BLAINE. In the legislative bill they put in full pay for that Congress. I think the analogy is very striking. Mr. Sebastian was prevented serving. When he was expelled he could not serve afterward. Of course, after that he would not serve here, surely.

Mr. INGALLS. The extra session of Congress that assembled on the 4th of July, if I remember correctly, was called in April.

Mr. BLAINE. He could not have served after he was expelled, could he?

Mr. INGALLS. He could have served before.

Mr. BLAINE. That is not the point in dispute. JOHN BROWN YOUNG tried to serve before he was by the vote of the House deprived of the right to serve, and now, ten years afterward, we have voted him pay for that Congress.

Mr. INGALLS. I doubt the fact.

Mr. BLAINE. I think the fact will appear by reference to the legislative appropriation bill, and you voted for it.

Mr. INGALLS. I doubt it.

Mr. McCREERY. Twenty-five hundred dollars were deducted.

Mr. BLAINE. Twenty-five hundred dollars was deducted because it had been paid before, and he got $7,500; so that he got the full $10,000 that was adjudicated to be due him, and every member of this Senate voted for or at least was consenting thereunto. I am not making any criticism against it. I am only indorsing the justice of this claim of Mr. Sebastian by this analogy.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I had intended to say something about the merits of this proposition. I had occasion some year or two ago to examine this claim, and I became fully satisfied that it was an act of justice demanded at the hand of the Senate of the United States that had expelled this gentleman without a hearing, without notice, and had left in the minds of some at least of his countrymen a stain upon his reputation. After the remarks of the Senator from Maine [Mr. BLAINE] this evening I had hoped that this act of justice would have been done with that unanimity which I think would have been honorable to the Senate. I hope now that the amendment of the Senator from Kansas will not prevail. I shall be glad to see him withdraw it. It will be a slight tribute to the memory of the gentleman whose memory has been tarnished by the act of the Senate to pass this resolution as it has been reported by the Senator from Wisconsin. I hope that therefore, without further delay and without further debate, the amendment of the Senator from Kansas will be voted down and this resolution passed.

Mr. HOWE. Mr. President, I do not mean to detain the Senate a moment, but I must say to my distinguished friend from Maine that the analogies between the case now before the Senate and that to which he has called the attention of the Senate are not so very striking to my mind as they seem to be to his own.

The claim of JOHN YOUNG BROWN rested upon the fact that he was here trying to serve the United States and giving his time in the vain endeavor to be permitted to serve the United States as a Representative, and was refused the right which the law devolved upon him. But Mr. Sebastian was not here in any such character. He did not ask to serve. I shrewdly suspect, although my colleague does not seem to be informed upon that point, that he not only did not put in an appearance at the special session called in July, 1861, but that he was not here during the executive session which succeeded the 4th of March, 1861, and it appears that he never afterward put in an appearance here during his life-time for any purpose, either claiming the right or assenting to the duty of serving the United States as a Senator or complaining of that act which is pleaded here as the reason why he did not serve—the act of expulsion. It does not appear that he ever complained of that to the Senate. There is a distinction, in my mind, very broad between the case of Mr. Sebastian and the case of Mr. BROWN.

Mr. BLAINE. I think probably the Senator from Wisconsin does not know yet all the facts in the JOHN YOUNG BROWN case. JOHN YOUNG BROWN was elected to the Fortieth Congress and appeared to take his seat. He was refused, on the ground, that he was a disloyal man and had never had his disabilities removed, and the House refused to remove them in order to qualify him. Before he ran for Congress again, by application from him and by interposition of his friends, his alleged disabilities were removed, and after becoming thereby qualified he finally took his seat. Now, at this very session of Congress, in a bill which is now undergoing enrollment, the Senator from Wisconsin consented to go back and pay JOHN YOUNG BROWN $10,000 for that Congress, and I think there is a little more analogy there than he is disposed to admit. He was refused because he was disloyal. Mr. Sebastian was expelled because he was disloyal. The House said afterward that it was a mistake; that he was not disloyal, and ought not to have been deprived of his seat, and now vote him his money. The Senate is called upon, on the report of its committee, to say now that Mr. Sebastian was not disloyal, and therefore his money should be given to his heirs. It seems to me there is a good deal more analogy than my friend admits.

Mr. HOWE. I confess that on this second statement of the JOHN YOUNG BROWN case there is more analogy than I discovered upon the Senator's first statement of it. I think very likely, if my friend should state it the third time, I could see still more.

Mr. BLAINE. If you keep prodding I will get the facts of it all out.

Mr. HOWE. I propose to get the whole of them before I let my friend alone. I cannot venture at this moment to plead not guilty of having assented to the payment of Mr. BROWN upon the statement last made. I doubt if I should have assented consciously to the payment of such a claim as that, but still as the case is presented there is a Sabbath day's journey between the principle involved in that case and the principle involved in this. That difference is, I say again, that in BROWN'S case he wanted to serve and tried to serve, and was obstinately refused permission to serve. Mr. Sebastian discovered no such disposition; he neither tried to serve nor offered to serve. He had his time to himself. BROWN spent his time in trying to get permission to work for the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kansas, [Mr. INGALLS,] which will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. The amendment is to strike out—

And that, without detriment on account of duties or rights of the Senator obstructed or prevented by said act of expulsion, the Secretary, or other proper officer of the Senate, be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to settle the unpaid accounts of the said Senator at the rates provided by the laws existing at the time, (the same to be certified by the President of the Senate,) and to be paid to the heirs of said Senator, or to their legal representatives, out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

Mr. DORSEY. I hope the amendment will be voted down.

Mr. HOWE. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CONKLING. The Senator from Maine [Mr. HAMLIN] not feeling well was obliged to leave the Chamber early in the evening and asked me to announce that he and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. WHYTE] are paired upon political questions. Whether this be a political question or not, I do not know, but I announce his absence because of his indisposition.

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 10, nays 34; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Booth, Conkling, Howe, Ingalls, Kernan, McMillan, Oglesby, Teller, Wadleigh, and Wright—10.

NAYS—Messrs. Alcorn, Anthony, Bailey, Barnum, Blaine, Bogy, Burnside, Cameron of Wisconsin, Clayton, Conover, Cooper, Davis, Dennis, Dorsey, Eaton, Ferry, Gordon, Hereford, Johnston, Jones of Florida, Jones of Nevada, Kelly, McCreery, Maxey, Norwood, Paddock, Patterson, Ransom, Robertson, Saulsbury, Spencer, Stevenson, West, and Windom—34.

ABSENT—Messrs. Allison, Bayard, Boutwell, Bruce, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Chaffee, Christiancy, Cockrell, Cragin, Dawes, Edmunds, Frelinghuysen, Goldthwaite, Hamilton, Hamlin, Harvey, Hitchcock, Logan, McDonald, Merrimon, Mitchell, Morrill, Morton, Randolph, Sargent, Sharon, Sherman, Thurman, Wallace, Whyte, and Withers—31.

So the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

NATHANIEL P. HARBIN.

Mr. GORDON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 844) for the relief of Nathaniel P. Harbin, of Georgia.

Mr. LOGAN. I ask the Senator if he will not yield for an executive session that will not last over ten or fifteen minutes.

Mr. GORDON. We can pass the bill in a moment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Georgia.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill (H. R. No. 844) for the relief of Nathaniel P. Harbin, of Georgia, was read the second time and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It appropriates $8,733 to Nathaniel P. Harbin, of Whitfield County, Georgia, in full for all claims which he has against the Government of the United States on account of the seizure and use of three hundred and forty-two boxes of chewing tobacco by the Army of the United States at Covington and Oxford, Georgia, in the month of July, 1864.

The bill was reported to the Senate, and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading.

Mr. HOWE. Is there a report in that case?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is.

Mr. GORDON. The bill was reported by the Senator from New Hampshire, [Mr. WADLEIGH.] It is all right.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. GEORGE M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 4433) making appropriations for the payment of claims reported allowed by the commissioners of claims, under the act of Congress of March 3, 1871.

The message also announced that the House receded from its disagreement to the seventy-sixth and seventy-seventh amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. The message further announced that the House further insisted upon its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 4691) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes, agreed to the further conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. J. D. C. ATKINS of Tennessee, Mr. J. G. ABBOTT of Massachusetts, and Mr. CHARLES FOSTER of Ohio managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

COURTS IN WEST VIRGINIA.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. HEREFORD to fill the vacancy upon the committee of conference on the bill (S. No. 472) changing the times of holding terms of the district court for the district of West Virginia occasioned by the death of Allen T. Caperton.

EXECUTIVE BUSINESS.

Mr. LOGAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to.

GEORGE R. HORTON'S SURETIES.

Mr. DORSEY. I ask the consideration, while the galleries are being cleared, of the bill (H. R. No. 545) for the relief of James A. Jackson, and others, securities of G. R. Horton, late postmaster at Monticello, Arkansas.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It releases James A. Jackson, John Hussy, Eli Rogers, Iverson L. Brooks, and William F. Slemons, securities of George R. Horton, late postmaster at Monticello, Arkansas, from all liability as such securities on account of post-office money, stamps, and money-order funds stolen from the office on the 6th of June, 1874, amounting to the sum of $1,078.48, without any fault of the securities or the postmaster.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

E. N. HORSFORD.

Mr. CONKLING. The Senator from Illinois is good enough to yield to me for a moment, that I may ask to take up the bill (S. No. 1289) for the relief of E. N. Horsford, a very brief bill, which will take but a moment, I think.

The bill was read. It authorizes the Commissioner of Patents to hear and grant the application of E. N. Horsford for the extension of his re-issued patent, No. 14722, for the term of seven years, if it shall appear to the satisfaction of the Commissioner that Horsford has not been adequately remunerated for the time, ingenuity, and expense bestowed by him in originating, perfecting, and introducing his invention to public use.

Mr. COCKRELL. Has that case been taken up? I thought the bill was read for information.

Mr. CONKLING. Consider it as so read, if there is any objection to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill has not been taken up. The question is on proceeding to its consideration.

Mr. CONKLING. This is a bill reported from the Committee on Patents; and my colleague who is here made the report. It is a bill to allow Professor Horsford to apply for an extension of his patent, which covers a chemical production that I believe he thinks, if he can introduce it, will take the place of yeast and be an improvement on yeast. So far he has had little or nothing out of it, and he wants an opportunity, if he can, to see whether he can make anything out of his patent. That is all of it.

Mr. LOGAN. All right; if he can improve bread, very well.

The bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole, reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

The Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After seven minutes spent in executive session, the doors were reopened.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (H. R. No. 3321) to amend the act entitled "An act granting pensions to the widows, children, dependent mothers and fathers or orphan brothers and sisters of those soldiers who were murdered by guerrillas at Centralia, Missouri, in 1864;"

A bill (H. R. No. 4340) granting a pension to Isabella Cassidy;

A bill (H. R. No. 4703) granting a pension to Harriet E. Edwards;

A bill (H. R. No. 4704) granting a pension to George McCay;

A bill (H. R. No. 4705) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Louisa Merrill; and

A bill (H. R. No. 4706) to increase the pension of Mrs. Maria B. Craig.

HISTORY OF SURVEYS AND SCIENTIFIC EXPEDITIONS.

Mr. HOWE. I move to take up House joint resolution No. 161.

The motion was agreed to; and the joint resolution (H. R. No. 161) authorizing the Secretary of State to publish a history of the several surveys and scientific expeditions by the United States during the present century was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of State to cause to be prepared and published a brief history of the several surveys and scientific expeditions ordered and prosecuted by the United States during the century just closed, including the various foreign and oceanic expeditions, the surveys of the coast and of the lakes, and the several topographical, scientific, and military surveys of the interior. It is to be reported to Congress as soon as practicable, and not to exceed eight hundred pages octavo. To enable the Secretary to carry into effect the resolution the sum of $7,500 is appropriated.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN RAY.

Mr. WEST. I call up the resolution I offered a few minutes ago, and ask to have it read.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That John Ray, claimant for the seat in the Senate vacated by the resignation of William P. Kellogg, late Senator of Louisiana, be paid the sum of $1,329.14 out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move that that go on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution is before the Senate.

Mr. COCKRELL. How is it before the Senate?

Mr. INGALLS. It must lie over one day.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is reported to-day.

Mr. WEST. It is not reported at all.

Mr. COCKRELL. Then it cannot be considered.

Mr. WEST. I suppose the Senator can make a parliamentary objection to it.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is what I do now.

Mr. WEST. I thank him for his courtesy at the close of my term. This is the only personal favor I have asked of the Senate in six years. I thank the Senator from Missouri for the courtesy he shows me.

Mr. COCKRELL. You are entitled to it, sir.

FRANCIS M. STRONG AND THOMAS ROSS.

Mr. WADLEIGH. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 4397) for the relief of Francis M. Strong and Thomas Ross.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It grants leave to Francis M. Strong, of Vergennes, in the county of Addison and State of Vermont, and Thomas Ross, of Rutland, in the county of Rutland and State of Vermont, to make application to the Commissioner of Patents for an extension of the letters-patent granted to them for an improvement in weighing-scales, of date the 24th day of May, 1859, for the term of seven years; but no person shall be held liable for the infringement of the patent, if extended, for making use of said invention since the expiration of the original term of the patent, and prior to the date of its extension.

Mr. SARGENT. I do not know that it is, but it seems to me somewhat strange that many of these patent cases are coming up to-night. Extensions of patents are very suspicious, very questionable, except in extremely exceptional cases. The general tendency of my mind is against the renewal of patents.

Mr. WADLEIGH. This is an extremely exceptional case. I ask for the reading of the House report, which I indorsed after an examination of the facts in the case.

The Secretary read the following report submitted from the Committee on Patents of the House of Representatives:

The Committee on Patents, to whom was referred the petition of Francis M. Strong and Thomas Ross, for an extension of letters-patent for improvements in weighing-scales, submit the following report:

The evidence submitted in this case shows that Francis M. Strong, of Vergennes, and Thomas Ross, of Rutland, Vermont, are the joint inventors of certain improvements in weighing-scales, for which letters-patent were granted them May 24, 1859. Within ample time, as prescribed by law, these inventors placed in the hands of the Brandon Manufacturing Company a signed petition for the extension of said letters-patent, that it might be forwarded and filed with the Commissioner of Patents. Fearing, however, that some mistake might occur they forwarded to their attorney at Washington a duplicate petition, with instructions that he should file it in case it was not filed in time by other parties. This attorney made frequent inquiries at the Patent Office, and was at length assured that the petition had been filed. The event proved, however, that the clerk in charge was in error and that the petition was not filed as stated. The mistake occurred through the filing of another application by the same parties for the extension of another patent of the same date. But the error was not discovered until too late to rectify it under the statute, and for this reason the petitioners pray for the passage of an act to enable them to make application, as they certainly would have done if not misled by the information given their attorney at the Patent Office. In view of these facts the omission to act having arisen by no fault of the patentees, but by the inadvertence of a Government employé, this committee recommend the granting of the prayer and the passage of the accompanying bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. PATTERSON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 4699.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that the Clerk has not a copy of the bill at his desk.

Mr. INGALLS. While the Clerk is hunting for that bill, I ask leave to call up several bills reported from the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. SPENCER. If the Senator from South Carolina asks to take up the general amnesty bill, I shall object to it.

PENSION BILLS.

Mr. INGALLS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 1288) granting a pension to Jonathan Roberts, of Marietta, Iowa.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. DAVIS. Has that bill been considered by the Committee on Pensions?

Mr. INGALLS. It has been reported from the Pension Committee.

Mr. DAVIS. I suppose it will go over to-day.

Mr. INGALLS. It has been on the Calendar for some time.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. INGALLS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 1245) granting a pension to James W. Thompson, late of Company H, Forty-seventh Illinois Volunteers.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. INGALLS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 1566) granting a pension to Elizabeth D. Stone.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Elizabeth D. Stone, widow of Brinton Stone, late an acting assistant surgeon in the United States Navy.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, and read the third time.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I think it is very improper legislation for us to be voting upon what we really do not understand. We are placing persons upon the pension-list without any Senators except the members of the committee knowing anything about the case. I believe in voting for all proper pensions, but I am not willing to vote blindly to place pensioners on the rolls without knowing anything about the case.

Mr. INGALLS. If the Senator from Delaware will ask me any question, I shall be glad to enlighten him.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I do not know anything about the case.

The bill was passed.

Mr. INGALLS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 183) granting an increase of pension to John E. Wunderlin, late a private in the Thirty-third Regiment of New York Volunteer Infantry.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-rolls the name of John E. Wunderlin, late a private in the Thirty-third Regiment of New York Volunteer Infantry, at the rate of $24 per month, in lieu of that now drawn by him.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I should like to have an explanation as to the merits of this bill.

Mr. INGALLS. This man Wunderlin had a leg shot off below the knee, and his pension is $18 a month. Had his leg been shot off above the knee, his pension would have been $24 a month. On account of the condition of the stump he is entirely unable to wear a wooden leg, and the committee, after examining all the evidence, believe that he ought to have the same pension as if his leg had been shot off above the knee; and if it had been shot off above the knee he would have been entitled to $24 a month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. INGALLS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 3277) granting a pension to Kate Louise Roy.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension-laws, the name of Kate Louise Roy, widow of James P. Roy, late lieutenant-colonel Fifteenth Regiment United States Infantry, and to pay her a pension for the rank held at the date of his death, in lieu of the pension now received.

Mr. DAVIS. I should like to know the date of that pension, how far back it goes.

Mr. INGALLS. It dates from the passage of the act.

Mr. DAVIS. I thought I heard something about the date of the husband's death. I ask the Clerk to read the bill again.

The Chief Clerk read the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. PATTERSON. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 4699) to remove the disabilities imposed by the third section of the fourteenth article of amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. SPENCER. I object to that bill.

Mr. PATTERSON. Then I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. SPENCER. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. One objection carries the bill over.

Mr. PATTERSON. Allow me to state that this bill has been read the first and second times, and one objection cannot carry it over; it can be taken up by a vote of the Senate. I ask the Clerk to look at the record of the bill. One objection will not carry it over.

Mr. SPENCER. If one objection will not carry it over, I will send up the report on the Mississippi case and have it read.

Mr. PATTERSON. I appeal to the Senator to let the bill be considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. One objection rules the bill out. It came over to-day, and was read the first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. WEST. I suggest to the Senator from South Carolina to move that the committee be discharged.

Mr. PATTERSON. I move that the Committee on the Judiciary be discharged from the further consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That makes no difference, because the rule says that a bill cannot be acted upon on the same day on which it is reported except by unanimous consent.

Mr. PATTERSON. There is no objection to the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Carolina states that there is no objection to the bill.

Mr. SPENCER. I do object.

Mr. PATTERSON. The Senator from Alabama is only in fun; he is not in earnest.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is before the Senate, if there is no objection. The bill will be read.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. SPENCER. I object to the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks the Senator's objection is too late.

Mr. PATTERSON. I know it is too late. The Senator from Alabame was only objecting in fun.

Mr. SARGENT. I rise to a point of order. This is not legislation. I understood the Senator from Alabama to object to the bill.

Mr. SPENCER. I do object to it.

Mr. MORRILL. And he has not withdrawn his objection.

Mr. SARGENT. I am in favor of the bill and I should like to have it passed; but I do not admire this kind of action. A Senator rises in his place and objects; and because another Senator says he is only in fun and insists that he is not in earnest, the bill is to be taken up.

Mr. PATTERSON. When I said the Senator from Alabama was in fun he said nothing and I thought he withdrew his objection.

Mr. SPENCER. I did not withdraw the objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Alabama object?

Mr. SPENCER. I do object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Then the bill is ruled out.

REPORT OF A COMMITTEE.

Mr. WADLEIGH, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1110) for the relief of Captain Edwin R. Clarke, reported it with an amendment.

RECESS.

Mr. WINDOM. We had expected to have the conference report on the sundry civil bill ready, and have kept the Senate waiting for it. It is, we learn, impossible to get the report signed to-night, as several members of the committee of conference seem to have gone home, and if the Senate will meet promptly to-morrow morning at nine o'clock, I think the business can be completed.

Mr. OGLESBY. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 1545, declaring lands heretofore granted to certain railroad companies subject to State taxation.

Mr. WINDOM. I move, if I have the floor, that the Senate take a recess until nine o'clock to-morrow morning.

Mr. HARVEY. I hope the motion will not prevail. Let us act on the bill referred to by the Senator from Illinois.

The motion was agreed to; and (at three o'clock and forty-seven minutes a. m., Sunday, March 4) the Senate took a recess until nine o'clock a. m.

MORNING SESSION, (SUNDAY.)

The recess having expired, the Senate resumed its session at nine o'clock a. m., (Sunday, March 4.)

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. BARNUM presented the petition of Chester N. Case and the widow and heirs of John N. Bull, deceased, praying compensation for the destruction of their property at Orangeburgh, South Carolina; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. HARVEY presented a resolution of the Legislature of Kansas, in favor of donating to the Kansas State Agricultural College a full set of the self-registering instruments for giving data for the meteorological reports required to be made by that institution; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a resolution of the Legislature of Kansas in favor of the passage of a law allowing arrears of pension; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a resolution of the Legislature of Kansas, in favor of an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, providing for the election of United States Senators by the people; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a resolution of the Legislature of Kansas, remonstrating against the removal of the Sioux Indians to the Indian Territory; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a resolution of the Legislature of Kansas, in favor of the passage of a law allowing settlers on the Osage trust lands to pay for their lands in four annual installments; which was ordered to lie on the table.

LOUISIANA ELECTION.

Mr. WADLEIGH. I present the memorial of Hugh J. Campbell and others, citizens of Louisiana, with reference to the late election in that State, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The memorial is as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 27, 1877.

To the honorable the Senate of the United States:

Your memorialists with respect represent the following facts in regard to the late election in Louisiana:

After the arguments before the electoral commission on the Louisiana case had begun, the counsel for the democrats, without notice to the republicans, interpolated in the midst of the discussion a statement of alleged facts, which they asserted they were prepared to prove. This procedure, although rather closely resembling sharp practice in a jury case, was calculated to affect public opinion. To counteract this effect we have drawn up the following statement. There is this difference between it and the democratic statement. The democratic counsel have stated what they proposed to prove and alleged they could prove. We have stated what has already been proven, and refer to the testimony.

HISTORY OF FORMER ELECTIONS IN LOUISIANA.

For ten years violence, bloodshed, and murder have been habitually resorted to in Louisiana by the democrats as a means of influencing elections.

In that time there have been ten great butcheries or massacres for political reasons. We will enumerate them and give the proof:

First. In 1866, the massacre at Mechanics' Institute, in which over two hundred republicans were killed in the streets and in that building. (See the Shellabarger report to the House.)

Second. In 1868, the Saint Landry Parish massacre, during which from two to three hundred colored people were killed.

Third. The Bossier Parish massacre, during which over two hundred colored people were killed.

Fourth. The Caddo Parish massacre, in which over forty colored people were killed.

Fifth. The Saint Bernard Parish massacre, in which over one hundred colored people were killed.

Sixth. The Orleans Parish massacres, in which over sixty persons were killed

Seventh. The Saint Mary Parish massacre, in which the sheriff and parish judge, both republicans, were publicly assassinated. (See the Stevenson report to the House.)

Eighth. In 1873, the Grant Parish massacre, in which over one hundred colored persons were killed. (See the Hoar report to the House.)

Ninth. In 1874, the Coushatta massacre, in which four persons were killed. (See the Hoar report to the House.)

IN 1876.

Tenth. In 1876, the Mount Pleasant massacre, in which over twenty persons were killed and wounded. (See testimony before Senator HOWE's committee.)

Besides these massacres the following prominent and active republicans were assassinated during the same year and immediately prior to it:

In East Feliciana, John Gair, ex-member of the house of representatives, shot to death.

In Ouachita, Dr. B. H. Dinkgrave, Eaton Logwood, and Henry Pinkston, shot to death.

In Baton Rouge, William Y. Payne, dragged by horses and shot to death.

In West Feliciana, Gilbert Carter and Isaac Mitchell, shot to death.

In Red River, Senator Twitchell shot and mutilated, and his brother-in-law, Mr. King, shot to death.

These murders have invariably been perpetrated immediately or almost immediately before a political campaign, or in the midst of it. Their result has also invariably been, by the fear, insecurity, and terror occasioned thereby among republicans, to largely decrease the republican vote, and as largely increase the democratic vote. In 1868 the result was to drive from the polls about 50,000 republican voters.

This systematic resort to violence and murder for political ends by the democrats was the occasion of the enactment of the election law of 1870.

ELECTION LAW.

The object of that law was to create a tribunal which should have the authority, whenever an election in any precincts or parishes of the State had been rendered null by such violence and intimidation, to ascertain and declare that nullity, and to reject and refuse to count the so-called votes polled under the reign of such terror.

By this law five persons are made the returning officers for all elections in the State, a majority of whom constitute a quorum with power to act. There are no returns and can be none of any election in Louisiana but the returns which these officers make. The statements made by the commissioners of election who preside at the polls are not returns, nor are the statements of the parish supervisor, who consolidates the statements of the commissioner, returns. These statements are simply the official and sworn evidence of the officers conducting the elections, which are sent up to the returning officers. These returning officers receive them, count them, compile them, and canvass them, and make the final and only official count of the vote, and the final and only certificate of the result of that vote, which is called the return. In cases where violence and intimidation have rendered the election null, these returning officers are empowered by the law to inquire into and determine the results of such violence and intimidation, and if the same have nullified the election at any poll or precinct, to ascertain and declare that nullity; and when such nullity has been ascertained, the law commands them to reject and refuse to count the votes so made null and void.

THE CONSPIRACY.

It is true, and it is proven, that at the last election there was, in the seventeen parishes hereinafter named, a conspiracy to suppress by force and violence the republican vote; that the means used for that end were night-riding, patrolings, whippings, shootings, hangings, burnings, mutilations, assassinations, murder, and massacre.

That by this conspiracy from twelve to fifteen thousand republican voters, who were desirous of voting, and who made earnest efforts to vote the republican ticket, were put in fear of their lives and driven from the polls and prevented from voting; and that by the same means from three to five thousand Republican voters were forced, against their will and from fear, to vote the democratic ticket.

This conspiracy was carried out by armed bodies of men, known by the name given them by themselves, as bull-dozers.

The proofs of this conspiracy, as in evidence before the Senate committee, are:

First. The secret Patton letter.

Second. The result of the vote, as shown by the tables of registration and election.

Third. The fact that the persons composing the bull-dozers were all democrats and white men, and the parties bull-dozed were all black men and republicans.

Fourth. The sudden and simultaneous outbreaks of this violence and murder before and near the election.

Fifth. The conduct of the white communities where they occurred, in this:

These outrages were connived at and concealed by them.

They were secretly encouraged.

They made no attempt to discover and punish the criminals.

There has been no condemnation of these outrages by the press, by public meetings, or by the clergy, and the citizens who have ventured to denounce them have been menaced with proscription and persecution, and thus silenced.

The democratic managers have falsely pretended that these outrages were not perpetrated, or when they have been compelled to admit them they have falsely attributed them to the laxity of the local governments, although well knowing that the same terrorism which rendered these outrages possible rendered the local governments powerless.

Sixth. The fact that the effects of these outrages in intimidating the colored people were not confined to the parishes in which they were perpetrated, but spread to great distances in surrounding and neighboring parishes.

Seventh. The fact that in the parish of East Feliciana, John Gair, an ex-representative, and the ablest and most influential leader of the colored people, was kidnapped at night in the town of Baton Rouge, forty miles from his home, by a sheriff's posse, upon a false charge, wrung by torture from a poor and defenseless colored woman, of complicity in the poisoning of a man who was not poisoned, but is now alive and well, and who, while on his way in the custody of his captors, was forcibly taken from them by an armed company of bull-dozers, under the command of one Joe Norwood and Dr. Saunders, and tied to a tree by the road-side and shot to death. And that this horrible and dastardly crime was committed by the democrats from political animosities and to achieve political ends. And that all investigation into and inquiry after the perpetrators of this crime have been continuously and systematically discouraged and prevented by the white community of East Feliciana; and the only investigation made has been that made by the Senate committee, and the Hon. CHARLES H. JOYCE, Representative, upon the House committee. (See testimony before Senator HOWE'S committee, and minority report of House committee, and speech of Hon. CHARLES H. JOYCE.)

Eighth. The fact that in the parish of Ouachita, shortly before the election, Dr. D. H. Dinkgrave, a white gentleman of high standing, irreproachable character, and great ability and influence among republicans, who was the leader of the republicans in that parish and their main dependence, was deliberately shot and killed in open daylight in the town of Monroe by an assassin, who then rode deliberately away. The assassin has never been discovered, and it is in evidence before the Senate committee that this assassination was a political crime, committed for political reasons, and by democrats, and was connived at and investigation stifled by the democrats of that parish. And that the effect produced was to cause a thorough and wide-spread feeling of terror among all the republicans of that parish, and to completely break up all political organizations among them.

Ninth. The fact that in the parish of Red River the shooting of Senator Twitchell and the murder of his brother-in-law, Mr. King, were crimes committed with like objects, by the connivance of the democrats, and followed by like results among republicans as the assassination of Dr. Dinkgrave.

Tenth. The fact that in the parish of Ouachita the horrible murders of Eaton Logwood, James Jackson, Primus Johnson, Merrimon Rhodes, and Henry Pinkston were political assassinations of a like character with that of Dr. Dinkgrave, and followed by like political results, and were also accompanied by atrocities such as were calculated to and did spread a terrible fear and feeling of danger and insecurity among all republicans in that and neighboring parishes, which lasts to this day.

Eleventh. The fact that in the parish of East Baton Rouge the horrible murder of William Y. Payne, who had a rope placed around his neck and was dragged with horses until he was dead, and that of Jerry and Samuel Myers, were also political assassinations of leading colored people of a like character and with like effects to those above enumerated.

Twelfth. The fact that in the parish of West Feliciana the murder of Gilbert Carter, Isaac Mitchell, and Edward Armstrong were also political murders of the same character and with like political results.

Thirteenth. The fact that in the parish of East Baton Rouge, the massacre at Mount Pleasant, and the dispersal of a colored colony of industrious, sober, and honest farmers, who were working the Triplett place, who were accumulating property, and who formed a social and political center for the colored people of that part of the parish, was a hideous and dastardly crime, committed by white democrats for political purposes. One revolting and hideous feature of this massacre, which distinguishes it from all others, is the fact in evidence before the Howe committee, that the sanguinary perpetrators of the crime pursued their victims even after death, and concocted and published a malicious lie, charging the negroes with having organized for the purpose of killing whites. (For proof of all the above-enumerated facts see testimony before Senator Howe's committee.)

LIST OF POLITICAL MURDERS AND OUTRAGES BEFORE THE RECENT ELECTION.

The following is a partial list of the murders and outrages, and the names of the parties by whom committed, in four parishes only, as taken from the testimony before the Howe committee. Similar crimes were perpetrated in fourteen parishes. Want of time prevented the committee from taking testimony in more than six parishes, we believe. In these it was not possible to obtain proof of all the murders and outrages, and out of this testimony we have only had the time to collate the facts relating to four parishes.

Ouachita Parish.—Samuel McEnery, William Theobalds, Dr. Cosby, James Logan, Robert Logan, Walter Logan, Dr. Young, Frank Durham, Thomas Lyons, (colored,) George C. Phillips, Thomas T. Aby, Buck Boker, Joseph T. Sevan, John Collins, Dave Tidwell, Bill Rhodes, Joe Mitchell, Bob Endom, John Mills, Jerry Mills, Alex. Hamilton, George Russell, Bill Collins, Robert Wilson, Joe Turner, Bill Barr, Mr. Steele, Dr. Kennedy, Wyatt Brandon, Joe Herron, Isaiah Garrett, P. Miller, Captain McLeod, Captain Cuffington, Mr. McLane, Bill Scriber, F. Dunn, D. T. Head, Captain Fred Cann, Harry Wilson, John Scarborough, Fennel McEnery, James Mitchell, Henry McEnery, Will Howard, H. M. Ball, Jim Tombs, Steve Grayson, Frank Bryham, Colonel Brown, Millard Parker, Dan Whitfield, —— Fitzgerald, Captain Renwick, John Falk, Pink Faust, John Harvey, Billy Pace, Captain Murphy.

These outrages were proved before the Sherman committee, and afterward fully corroborated before the congressional committees, with cross-examination. Democrats charged with these crimes failed to appear in any case before the Senate committee and deny them. Democratic Senators and Representatives in Congress have not pretended to deny these outrages nor their effect. The law of Louisiana allows proof, not only of violence on the day of election or during registration, but also of intimidation on those days resulting from previous violence.

Extent of the conspiracy.

It is true, and is proved by testimony taken before the Sherman committee and Howe committee, that the following are the bull-dozed parishes, in which all or most of the republican voters were by violence, outrage, murder, and massacre either driven from the polls and prevented from voting at all or forced to vote the democratic ticket: East Baton Rouge, East Feliciana, West Feliciana, Ouachita, Morehouse, Richland, Grant, Livingston, Franklin, Caldwell, La Fayette, Claiborne, De Soto, and Natchitoches.

It is true, and it is proved by the official records in evidence before the HOWE committee, that the foregoing parishes had the following registration and cast the following vote in 1876:

	Registration.		Vote.
	Colored.	White.	Rep.	Dem.
East Baton Rouge	3,400	1,867	1,476	1,102
East Feliciana	2,127	1,004	.....	1,736
West Feliciana	2,213	399	778	1,248
Ouachita	2,392	992	793	1,869
Morehouse	1,830	938	782	1,379
Richland	852	812	277	963
Grant	608	603	395	518
Livingston	197	800	121	769
Franklin	439	587	129	789
Caldwell	489	589	285	631
La Fayette	928	1,351	658	721
Claiborne	1,314	1,602	432	1,577
De Soto	1,694	1,253	898	1,304
Natchitoches	2,955	1,782	2,099	1,761
	21,438	14,579	9,122	16,367

These same parishes in the election of 1872 gave the following vote:

	Rep.	Dem.
East Baton Rouge	2,459	917
East Feliciana	1,690	653
West Feliciana	1,309	273
Ouachita	1,441	606
Morehouse	1,262	625
Richland	218	646
Grant	779	165
Livingston	146	553
Franklin	268	535
Caldwell	369	486
La Fayette	482	884
Claiborne	942	1,357
De Soto	1,022	790
Natchitoches	1,256	828
	13,593	9,318

These same parishes in the election held in them in 1870 gave the following vote:

Paaishes.	Republican.	Democratic.
East Baton Rouge	2,440	958
East Feliciana	1,273	803
West Feliciana	1,174	303
Ouachita	1,299	501
Morehouse	516	493
Richland, thrown out for violence	556	296
Grant	55	452
Livingston	226	381
Franklin	340	370
Caldwell	145	754
La Fayette	523	1,407
Claiborne	1,032	713
De Soto	2,075	828
Natchitoches	11,654	8,259

In forty parishes where no crimes are alleged the registration of 1876 was as follows:

Colored	87,999
White	72,034
Colored majority	15,965

In the same parishes the vote of 1876 was:

Republican	65,747
Democratic	59,392
Republican majority	6,355

So that in the comparatively peaceful parishes a registered colored majority of 15,965 yielded a republican majority of 6,355.

Now, in fourteen bull-dozed parishes in the same year the registration was:

Colored	21,638
White	14,579
Colored majority	7,059

While the vote as cast and counted by the bull-dozers was:

Democratic	16,367
Republican	9,123
Democratic majority	7,244

That is, in the parishes where there were no murders or massacres, the republican majority was nearly one-half of the registered colored majority, but in the bull-dozed parishes, whose record of whippings, shootings, hangings, burnings, murders, and massacres we have given above, a colored registered majority of 7,059 is converted into a democratic voting majority of 7,244, making a total of over 14,000 votes converted by these means from the republicans to the democrats in these parishes.

NATIVITY OF STATE, PARISH, AND OTHER OFFICERS, AND MEMBERS OF THE LEGISLATURE SINCE 1868.

It is untrue that carpet-baggers have governed Louisiana

In the State government of 1868 there were three men of northern birth and three native southerners—two white and one colored. In the State government of 1872 there was one northern man and five southern men. In the present State government, of which Governor Packard is the head, there is one northern man and five southern men.

In all the Legislatures since reconstruction the proportion of northern men to southern men has never been more than one to six, and for the last four years has not been more than one to twenty. In the parochial and municipal offices throughout the State the disproportion is still greater. It will not average more than one in one hundred.

PROPOSED COMMITTEE ON POLITICAL CONDITION OF LOUISIANA.

A committee of Congress, that should examine carefully the condition of affairs in Louisiana, not after an election, and in haste, and during the heat and excitement of a political contest, but during an interval of quiet, carefully and deliberately, and thoroughly going over the State from point to point, would be of great service to Louisiana and to the country.

Such an investigation is indeed a necessity precedent to a wise and just settlement of the Louisiana difficulties. Nothing but mischief will follow the adoption of any new policy toward Louisiana, based upon crude and hap-hazard conclusions, without the aid of such an investigation.

LIST OF ACCESSIONS TO THE REPUBLICAN PARTY FROM THE WHITE CONFEDERATE RANKS SINCE 1872.

There have been accessions to the republican party in large numbers since 1872 of the best people of Louisiana, including lawyers, planters, and merchants of the highest reputation and character. If left to peaceful influences these gentlemen are in a fair way of solving the Louisiana problem, by bringing to the leadership of the party a large and influential white element. This once accomplished, both races will divide in political matters peacefully and without wrong or injustice; should these men be abandoned by the National Administration and delivered over to the tender mercies of a State government, put in power not by votes but by murder and massacre, the result will be personal ruin to these people, who have put themselves in the breach, and a solid and terrible reign of caste and of terror which will for an indefinite period virtually prohibit the existence of any but political party in that State.

TAXATION, ASSESSMENTS, AND EXPENSES UNDER REPUBLICAN RULE.

State taxes are not high in Louisiana. The State tax is fourteen and a half mills on the dollar. The assessment of farming lands is lower than the average in other States, being for the valuable tillable lands not over 25 per cent. of the actual cash value of the lands. The parish taxes are, except in half a dozen parishes, reasonable.

Ordinarily, improvements are not assessed in the country; when assessed, they are not assessed high or uniformly. The taxes in the city of New Orleans are high, and the management of its finances has been bad. It has been under democratic government since 1868, with the exception of two years.

JUDICIAL CONSTRUCTION OF ARTICLE 117, CONSTITUTION OF LOUISIANA.

This article prohibits any person from holding more than one office of profit or trust at one time.

The supreme court of Louisiana in the case of State ex rel. Gorham, 25 Annual, 138, held that, "The inhibition of the constitution applied to constitutional officers only. It did not prevent a constitutional officer from holding a municipal office."

Revised Statutes, section 2826, quoted by democrats, is no longer law, but was repealed by the act of 1870, and was omitted from the digest of statutes published in 1870.

FALSE STATEMENTS IN DEMOCRATIC BRIEF.

There is no evidence, and it is untrue, that the returning officers willfully and fraudulently counted, as votes in favor of Kellogg, any votes not shown to have been given for him at any poll or voting-place of said State.

There is no evidence, and it is untrue, that the returning officers did not receive from any poll, voting-place, or parish, or have before them any statement of any supervisor of registration or commissioner of election, as required by law.

There is no evidence, and it is untrue, that any returns of election show that William P. Kellogg received less votes than the democratic electors.

There is no evidence, and it is untrue, that the returning officers failed to compile or canvass the statements of votes from the commissioners of election at any poll or voting-place. It is true that, as commanded by law, they rejected and refused to count the statements of votes from certain polls and precincts at which violence, riot, and tumult made the election invalid in law.

The assertion that William P. Kellogg, when he made certificate for the duly appointed electors, knew that said certificate was untrue, is simple vituperation and abuse, and false in law and in fact.

The assertion that Kellogg, Burch, Joseph, and others entered into an unlawful and criminal combination and conspiracy to and with each other to procure the certificate and return of the duly appointed electors, is untrue and silly; and the charge, so far as there are any facts to support it, might as well have included every republican voter in the State.

There is no evidence, and it is untrue, that the statements and affidavits with regard to violence and intimidation were fabricated and forged, and it is true that the same were corroborated by testimony taken under cross-examination before the Senate subcommittee of Privileges and Elections, composed of Senators HOWE, WADLEIGH, OGLESBY, MCMILLAN, SAULSBURY, and MCDONALD.

There is no evidence, and it is untrue, that any of the returning officers offered to receive a bribe from the friends of Mr. Tilden, but it is true that such a bribe was offered by Duncan F. Kenner and other prominent democrats, friends of Mr. Tilden.

There is no evidence, and it is untrue, that the returning officers counted any votes which had not been returned and certified to them according to law.

There is no evidence, and it is untrue, that the returning officers altered, changed, and forged, or caused to be altered, changed, and forged, any statements of votes from the parish of Vernon. The alteration made in the returns of Vernon Parish were made by a clerk of the returning officers, who first stole the return and then altered it for the purpose of selling it to prominent democrats to aid Mr. Tilden.

There is no evidence, and it is untrue, that the returning officers, contrary to law, knowingly, will fully, and fraudulently refused to compile and canvass any votes.

It is untrue that ex parte evidence was received by the returning officers. All testimony taken before the returning officers was taken contradictorily upon interrogatories and cross-interrogatories. The ex parte affidavits received by the returning officers were not received as testimony, but as sworn statements, corroborating and connected with the statements of the supervisors and commissioners.

The charge that the returning officers refused to fill the vacancy with a democrat is untrue, the facts being that they formally offered to fill the vacancy with a democrat, but could not obtain the consent of any democrat to fill the vacancy, for the reason that the democrats demanded two appointments or none.

The returning officers held no secret meetings except for final consultation and determination, but their regular sessions for opening and considering the returns, and the protests against the same, were held openly and in presence of witnesses from all parties.

There is no evidence and it is untrue that J. H. Burch was ineligible as an elector under the constitution of Louisiana.

There is no evidence and it is untrue that Morris Marks was ineligible as an elector under the constitution of Louisiana.

There is no evidence and it is untrue that O. H. Brewster was a United States officer at the time of his election to fill a vacancy in the electoral college and at the time that he cast his vote for Hayes and Wheeler.

There is no evidence and it is untrue that A. B. Levissee was a court commissioner of the United States at the time of his election to fill a vacancy in the electoral college and at the time that he cast his vote for Hayes and Wheeler.

There is no evidence and it is untrue that Oscar Joffrion was ineligible as an elector under the constitution of Louisiana.

There is no evidence and it is untrue that Judge Davis is a man of notoriously bad character.

There is no evidence and it is untrue that Jewett is under indictment in one of the courts for obtaining money under false pretenses.

There is no evidence and it is untrue that Isadore McCormick was under indictment for murder.

In justice to Mr. McCormick I insert his reply to the very unjust and unfair assault upon his reputation in the democratic brief:

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 19, 1877.

To the Editor of the National Republican:

SIR: During the joint session of Congress to-day a protest was read and signed by a number of democratic Senators and Representatives giving reasons why the decision of the electoral commission on Louisiana should not stand, among others, that the returning board employed "Isadore McCormick, who was then under indictment in a criminal court of said State charged with murder." I now charge that every Senator and member of Congress who subscribed to that document placed his name either maliciously or ignorantly to an unmitigated falsehood. There is not now, nor has there ever been, in Louisiana or any other State, for that or any other offense, an indictment against me. Meeting this evening at Willard's Hon. Mr. MORRISON, chairman of the House investigating committee on Louisiana affairs, he stated to myself and a friend that no such evidence came before his committee; that he did not know when signing it that such a statement was embodied in the protest; that Hon. RANDALL L. GIBSON was probably the member who had it inserted, and advised me to see him. I called, but did not find General GIBSON at home. I cannot believe that either General GIBSON, or Mr. MORRISON, or Senator MCDONALD, or any other honest man, will adhere, even for political effect, to a charge so unjust and serious in its nature, and so far-reaching in its effect, in a document of such import, when they learn that there is no evidence before any of their committees to sustain it, that the court records of Orleans Parish will refute it, and that there are journalists and public men now in Washington who can prove the utter falsity of the charge.

Trusting that these gentlemen will undo as far as possible this injustice to me, I remain, &c.

ISADORE MCCORMICK.

It is true that the fabricators of the democratic charges well knew that every one of those charges which we have herein above traversed were false, and their allegation of the same has been made willfully, knowingly, and maliciously.

It is also true that the same men who have not hesitated to destroy lives by the hundreds as a means of democratic electioneering have also systematically used slander and lies for the destruction of private character for the same purpose.

It is also true that the democratic candidates for State officers and for electors, and the democratic State central committee, were knowing of, consenting to, and partaking in the guilt of all the whippings, shootings, hangings, burnings, mutilations, assassinations, murders, and massacres hereinbefore enumerated.

It is also true that the democratic people of Louisiana knew of them, connived at and concealed them, secretly encouraged them, made no attempts to discover and punish the perpetrators, and by the denials and sneers of their representative men and newspapers have condoned and approved them.

From 1866 to 1876 no democratic press, no democratic public meeting, no democratic clergy have ever discountenanced or condemned these outrages.

I ask especial attention to the testimony of General John R. Brooke, a United States officer of distinction and high standing, and of Captain Clayton Hale, whose statements will carry great and deserved weight with all classes and parties.

It is true and in evidence before Senator HOWE'S committee that the usual republican majority in Louisiana is in fair and peaceable elections from 15,000 to 20,000 votes, and that the true and lawful returns of the last election, as honestly canvassed and compiled, and lawfully and truly counted and returned by the returning officers, show that Hayes and Wheeler and Packard received a majority of all the votes lawfully cast and counted.

It is also true and in evidence before the same committee that the pretended majorities claimed by the democrats in the seventeen bull-dozed parishes, upon which their claim to have carried the State alone depended, was falsely, fraudulently, wickedly, and criminally procured, by robbery, violence, and murder.

The election law which rendered pretended votes thus obtained null and void is righteous, just, and necessary.

The returning officers honestly, justly, and lawfully executed that law, and excluded the pretended votes procured by murder and massacre.

PERSONAL CHARACTER OF GOVERNOR PACKARD AND THE STATE OFFICERS.

The personal character of republicans has been traduced in wholesale. To show how falsely, we give this account of the personnel of the present Packard administration:

Governor Packard has lived in Louisiana fourteen years. He has been United States marshal for eight years. His character, public and private, is above reproach. His official record is unassailable, even by the democrats. In every respect, as to integrity, ability, and moral and social standing, he is the peer of either of the democratic candidates at the last election.

Colonel George Johnson, State auditor, is of southern birth, and was a confederate soldier. In honesty, competency, and fitness for his office he is fully equal to any of the gentlemen who have ever filled that office.

Hon. William H. Hunt, attorney-general, is a native southerner, a gentleman of fortune, of fine scholarship, and of the highest social and moral standing. He has stood at the head of the bar in his State for years, and his occupancy of this position will be both an honor and an ornament to his State.

Mr. Dubuclet, treasurer, is a colored creole gentleman of good family. His honesty and ability have never been questioned.

Mr. Honoré, secretary of state, is also a colored creole gentleman, fully qualified for his office.

Mr. Brown, superintendent of public education, is a colored gentleman against whose honesty and capacity no charges have been brought.

To the reckless and wholesale charges of fraud, forgery, and bribery which have been made by the democrats against the republican officers of election in Louisiana, I oppose the sworn confessions of Duncan F. Kenner, of John M. Palmer, of Maddox and Littlefield, and the testimony of Ira N. Gifford.

That the peculiar ferocity and bloodthirstiness which have characterized the democratic campaign of 1876 in Louisiana have not ceased, I adduce "as proof" the late attempt to assassinate Governor Packard, and the following extract from the New Orleans Democrat, February 3, 1877:

"If Mr. Packard forces this conflict we appeal to our friends to spare, as much and as far as final and complete victory will permit, the lives of the metropolitan and negro dupes. We advise them to let the full weight of their vengeance fall upon the leaders of this iniquitous, murderous, and most damnable scheme, and to follow Packard into the hotel, and, if need be, into the custom-house itself, and hang him from its highest window."

Your memorialists respectfully pray that this, their memorial, may be printed, and that, the premises considered, your honorable body may take such steps as to you may seem proper to insure to the people of Louisiana, and to Governor Packard and the lawful State government, as speedily as possible, such support from the General Government as the Constitution provides and as will enforce the laws, restore order, put down insurrection, and bring relief to all the interests of the State; and your memorialists will ever pray, &c.

HUGH J. CAMPBELL,
Of Counsel for Louisiana before the Electoral Commission.

JOHN RAY,
J. R. G. PITKIN,
FRANK MOREY,
Of Counsel before the Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. COOPER, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1214) to amend an act amending section 5457 of the Revised Statutes, relating to counterfeiting, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1209) for the relief of Walter N. Haldeman, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. COCKRELL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1183) for the relief of David W. Stockstill, of Sidney, Ohio, reported adversely thereon.

Mr. WRIGHT, from the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Susan Sampson, praying for the passage of a special act to pay to her all sums of money due to her as the only heir of Simon Randall for amount due to him for services in the revolutionary war, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. WRIGHT. While I have the floor I wish to make one remark. It will be remembered that a few days since a bill being before the Senate touching the Klamath reservation, I had read at the desk an article from an Oregon paper making some strictures upon the House report touching that measure and setting forth what was claimed to be a history of the entire transaction. At the time I vouched for the article as having been forwarded to me by a gentleman in whom I had confidence. It has been brought to my attention that there are some things in the article which reflect improperly and unjustly upon the member of the House from Oregon. My relations with that gentleman are such that I certainly would not have done a thing of that kind, having known him for some time, and also his father, and I know his reputation. I therefore take this occasion to say that it was not in my mind at all to reflect upon the person referred to as having made that report. I would be the last person to do a thing of that kind, and especially upon a newspaper article of which I knew nothing more than that it was sent to me as I have stated.

I deem it proper to myself and to that gentleman to make this explanation at this time.

COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC BUILDINGS AND GROUNDS.

Mr. MORRILL. As is usual for the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, I ask unanimous consent that the committee have leave to sit during any recess that may take place, although I must say they have not much expectation of any heavy business during a recess.

The motion was agreed to.

COMMITTEE ON PATENTS.

Mr. WADLEIGH. The Commissioner of Patents and also the United States Patent Association have signified a wish for considerable changes and revision to be made of the patent laws, and inasmuch as experience has proved that it is impossible during the session to devote to the subject the time that is absolutely necessary, I am requested to move that the Committee on Patents have leave to sit during the recess of Congress. I therefore offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Patents or a subcommittee thereof have leave to sit during the recess of the Senate, for the purpose of revising the patent laws, and that the necessary expenses be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

The Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. DAVIS. I hope the Senator will be kind enough to explain the necessity for this resolution.

Mr. WADLEIGH. As I have just said, it is absolutely impossible for the Committee on Patents during the session of Congress to consider this subject, and consequently we shall be obliged to devote our time during the recess to it. The intention is to thoroughly examine and revise the patent laws in order to obviate some objections which are generally made to them, and to report at the opening of the next fession of Congress such changes as the committee may deem proper.

The resolution was agreed to.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WINDOM submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 4380) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 2, 5, 8, 9, 19, 13, 17, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 28, 36, 41, 43, 46, 47, 48, 49, 51, 53, 56, 59, 68, 73, 75, 79, 84, 85, 96, 110, and 118.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments numbered 3, 4, 6, 12, 14, 15, 16, 24, 25, 26, 27, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 37, 40, 44, 57, 65, 69, 70, 71, 76, 78, 80, 81, 82, 83, 86, 87, 89, 90, 91, 93, 94, 95, 97, 99, 100, 104, 113, 114, 116, 120, 124, 125, 127, 128, and 129; and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 1, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$1,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 7, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: in lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment insert "$2,650,000;" and in line 22, page 4 of the bill, after the word "engineers" insert "cadets;" and in line 1, page 5, after the word "department" insert "instruction of cadets;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 11, and agree to the same, with an amendment as follows: Strike out all of the paragraph proposed to be inserted and insert in lieu thereof:

For the general purposes of the District of Columbia, to be expended by the commissioners of said District, $250,000.

And the Senate agree to the same.

WM. WINDOM,
WILLIAM A. WALLACE,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
WM. S. HOLMAN,
JOHN R. EDEN,
HENRY WALDRON,
Managers on the part of the House.

The Chief Clerk having commenced the reading of the report,

Mr. WINDOM. If entirely agreeable to Senators to dispense with the reading, which would save time, I will answer any question that any Senator may desire to put to me in reference to the bill.

Mr. DAVIS. I hope the request of the Senator from Minnesota will be granted, as time is very important. A messenger from the House is here who says that it is important that we should get through with this bill at once.

Mr. SARGENT. I move to dispense with the reading of the report.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. In as thin a Senate as this I must object until more Senators are present.

Mr. HARVEY. I should like to have some information in regard to this report.

Mr. WINDOM. I should be glad to give the Senator any information on any point which he desires, so far as I can, if he will call my attention to any particular item.

Mr. DAVIS. I submit to the Senator from Kansas that the whole object is for the committee to agree and unless the report gets to the House soon the danger is that the bill cannot be enrolled.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to dispensing with the reading?

Mr. HARVEY. There is objection. I want some information concerning at least one provision.

Mr. WINDOM. I can give the information the Senator desires as well without the report as with it.

Mr. HARVEY. I do not object to dispensing with the reading, but I want information.

Mr. WINDOM. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading of the report will be dispensed with, if there be no objection.

Mr. HARVEY. I want to know why the provision made by the Senate commencing in line 621, page 26, is not still a part of the bill according to the recommendation of the committee of conference?

Mr. WINDOM. I ask the Senator to please state what it is?

Mr. HARVEY. The clause inserted in the bill by the Senate is as follows:

For a suitable building, with fire-proof vault extending to each story, at the city of Topeka, Kansas, for the accommodation of the United States circuit and district courts, post-office, pension agency, land offices, and other Government offices, in said city, to be erected upon the site purchased by the United States under the act of March 3, 1875, the sum of $50,000; to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall cause proper plans and estimates to made, so that no expenditure shall be made or authorized for the full completion of said building beyond the amount of $225,000.

Mr. WINDOM. I will state that the committee of conference on the part of the Senate did everything in their power to retain the provision to which the Senator refers, because they believed it to be a proper thing to do, and a public necessity, but they were unable to retain it; and I will also say to the Senator that one reason was that their own delegation were not entirely united upon that subject, and it furnished an answer to any argument that we could make to insist upon it.

Mr. HARVEY. As to that I do not know any member of the delegation who openly avows any opposition to this provision. I do know there is a great necessity for this building. I do know that its erection has been recommended by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, by the Committee on Appropriations, and by the Senate, and I can see no reason why, if there should be a number of the delegation who might not be in favor of it, that for that reason it should be rejected.

Mr. DAVIS. I ask the Senator if he has any objection to letting the report be concurred in and go to the House. There is danger of not being able to enroll the bill before twelve o'clock unless it gets there soon, and the Senator can afterward discuss this item as long as he thinks proper.

Mr. HARVEY. I can say something about it now, and I understand something about it.

Mr. DAVIS. Let the report be concurred in, and then the Senator can talk as long as he chooses. I ask the Senator whether he objects to letting the conference report go to the House?

Mr. HARVEY. I do object, until I understand something more about it.

Mr. SARGENT. If the Senator will allow me a moment, I suppose he is entirely aware that this report is not amendable, and that he cannot accomplish his object by getting the appropriation into this conference report. Of course he can defeat the bill by occupying the floor, as he has a perfect right to do, and compel us to have an extra session, which he will not have the trouble of attending. Certainly the Senator cannot get the provision restored to the bill now unless it should be sent back to another committee of conference for a new report to be brought in, in which case the bill is lost.

Mr. HARVEY. So far as that is concerned, I am not very clear whether it is not my duty to occupy the floor for the remainder of the session; I will, at any rate, long enough to show that we understand how these things are done. I think I understand it myself, but I do not know whether I should not let the public and the people of my State understand it. I want to say that the State of Kansas has never had one dollar applied to the construction of any public building within her borders. I want to say further, that the circuit and district courts of the United States are held in the State-house, a building constructed by the people of the State for their own use at great expense to themselves. The court at times is enabled to have the use of the county court-house, except when the State district courts are in session. Then it becomes necessary to apply to the State authorities, and the use of the State-house has been conceded to the United States courts, though the State officers have no authority to do so properly. I think it is a great tax upon the generosity of the people that under the circumstances such should be the case.

There are appropriations in this bill having no better ground in right, as will be conceded by the members of this conference committee and by the Committee on Appropriations and the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and the Senate, and yet we are told that the reason why this appropriation is stricken out is because it is understood that the delegation from Kansas were not entirely unanimous. I think the committee was furnished with proof that there was at least substantial unanimity on the part of the delegation, both in the present Congress and in the House and Senate of the next Congress.

In seeking for the reasons of the loss of this appropriation I further learn that there was a lack on our part of democratic leverage. I understand what this means. At other places where appropriations of the same kind were sought under the same circumstances they had democratic influences at work for them, and in that way they were enabled to conciliate the democratic member of the House who seems to dominate action in such matters; while the State of Kansas being constantly and reliably republican, and having no democratic influence at work in their behalf, must suffer for it.

It seems to be the fate of those States taking such position to have but little effort made to conciliate them or to do them simple justice. I shall not attempt to conceal the fact that I feel very much the manner in which my State has been treated in the matter of public buildings not only at this time but from the very beginning.

As I said early in my remarks, the State of Kansas has never been given a single dollar for the purposes of construction of any public building within its boundaries; and so long as concessions are made of the rights of that State, and bills that have been passed in derogation of such rights are permitted to pass without protest, it will probably continue to be the case.

While I do not feel justified in consuming the whole of the time that is left of this session in talking upon this matter—though if I gave way to my feelings and impulses, I would do so—yet I do feel entirely justified in saying what I have said upon this matter, and under other circumstances would say much more.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the report.

The report was concurred in.

WILLIS L. FOULK.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 1250) for the relief of Willis L. Foulk. It will take but a moment or two to pass the bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It suspends the provisions of law regulating appointments in the Army by promotion in the line so far as they affect Willis L. Foulk; and the President can, if he so desire, in the exercise of his own discretion and judgment, nominate and by and with the advice and consent of the Senate appoint him to the same grade and rank of captain held by him on January 4, 1874, in any vacancy occurring.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. GEORGE M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. No. 473) for the relief of Henry S. French, of Nashville, Tennessee; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills:

A bill (S. No. 917) to enable Erastus T. Bussell, of Indianapolis, Indiana, to make application to the Commissioner of Patents for extension of letters-patent for a combined rubber and spiral steel spring;

A bill (S. No. 1010) for the relief of Julius S. Bohrer, master in the United States Navy; and

A bill (S. No. 709) for the relief of Hans C. Peterson.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. No. 4472) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CLAYTON. I have a couple of joint resolutions here to relieve several soldiers who had some clothing lost in the destruction of barracks, amounting to $1,900 I think in all, reported from the Committee on Military Affairs, which I should like to have passed. I do not think there can be any objection to them at all. They are House resolutions and have passed that body upon the recommendation of the Secretary of War. The resolutions are verbatim et literatim the resolutions recommended by the Secretary of War.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the first joint resolution sent to the desk will be read.

Mr. COCKRELL. There are a number of cases of equal merit, and if we take up one we must take up all. There are two or three bills which I have reported now on the Calendar, and I never heard in my life of cases more meritorious than they are. If we are to go to the Calendar for one bill, we must go there for others. I appreciate the kindness of the Senator in desiring to get his measures through, but he places others in an awkward position, and I must insist that particularly on this holy Sabbath day we shall have a constitutional quorum here to transact business before we act on bills.

Mr. CLAYTON. I will make no further effort. These joint resolutions passed the House, and I merely wanted to get them off the Calendar.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business for a few minutes for the purpose of making a report.

Mr. MORRILL. Had we not better wait and go into executive session later?

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. It will take but a minute now. I make that motion.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were re-opened.

ALMONT BARNES.

Mr. WADLEIGH. I ask the Senate to take up a bill which has passed the House for relief in a case which I have examined and in which I have drawn up a report. It is simply to pay to Almont Barnes the sum of $150 for money advanced by him for the benefit of his battery in the service of the United States, and which could have been paid from the company's savings if it had been attendedto at the proper time, but it was too late for that and the amount could not be drawn from the Treasury. I ask that the bill be taken up and passed.

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. No. 1200) for the relief of Almont Barnes was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for the payment to Almont Barnes, late captain of Battery C, First New York Light Artillery, of $150, the amount of his claim for money advanced for the benefit of members of his battery while in the service of the United States, upon the security of vouchers for company savings, now unpaid and on file in the office of the Commissary-General of the Army, such vouchers having been presented at too late a date for their payment from any fund authorized for such purposes.

Mr. MORRILL. I believe that little claim is all right.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DALTON HINCHMAN.

Mr. INGALLS. I ask the present consideration of two small meritorious pension bills which have been passed by the House of Representatives. One is House bill No. 1479.

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. No. 1479) granting a pension to Dalton Hinchman was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for placing on the pension-roll Dalton Hinchman, late a private in Company G, Second Michigan Cavalry.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SARAH M'COOEY.

Mr. INGALLS. I now ask for the consideration of House bill No. 3282.

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. No. 3282) granting a pension to Sarah McCooey was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Sarah McCooey, mother of John McCooey, late private in Company F, Fourteenth Regiment United States Infantry.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN PULFORD.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I move to take up House bill No. 3483.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 3481) to restore John Pulford, lieutenant-colonel United States Army, (retired,) to his former rank on the retired list, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Committee on Military Affairs reported the bill with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause, and in lieu thereof to insert:

That John Pulford, who was, on December 15, 1870, duly retired from the active service and placed upon the list of retired officers of the United States Army, with the full rank of colonel, on account of wounds received in battle while performing the duties of colonel in command of his regiment, be, and hereby is, excepted and relieved from the operation of the act of Congress entitled "An act for the relief of General Samuel W. Crawford, and to fix the rank and pay of retired officers of the Army," approved March 3, 1875, solely because the injuries received by him in battle are more severe, dangerous, and disabling, and more fully incapacitate and disqualify him for any service, than the loss of an arm or leg, or the permanent disability of an arm or leg by resection, and is hereby restored upon the list of retired officers of the Army to the full rank of colonel, held by him from the date of his retirement up to March 3, 1875, with the pay of such rank from the date of the passage of this act, and shall hereafter hold and receive the rank and pay of colonel upon the list of retired officers of the Army.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed. Its title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of John Pulford."

CATHERINE AND SOPHIA GERMAIN.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask to have passed House bill No. 3989, to which, I am sure, there will be no objection.

By unanimous consent, the bill (H. R. No. 3989) for the relief of Catherine and Sophia Germain was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It is a direction to the Secretary of the Interior to reserve from that portion of annuities due or to become due, to the Cheyenne Indians, $2,500 for Catherine Germain, aged eighteen years, and $2,500 for Sophia Germain, aged thirteen years, two white children who were captured in Kansas by the Cheyennes while en route from Georgia to Colorado, and cause the same to be placed to their credit on the books of the Treasury, to bear interest at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum, and use from time to time the income from the same in such manner as he may deem expedient for their maintenance, education, and support until they attain the age of twenty-one years, when the principal and all unexpended interest shall be paid to them.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SOUTHERN MARYLAND RAILROAD.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask unanimous consent to call up House bill No. 3012. I will state the purpose of it. It is to authorize the Southern Maryland Railroad Company to extend a railroad into and within the District of Columbia. When the bill was before called up, it was objected to by me. Since then an agreement has been made with the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia in relation to an amendment. The chairman of the District Committee is not present, but I think it right for me to offer the amendment and ask for the passage of the bill. There can be no objection to the main purpose and I think what was intended to be the whole purpose of the bill; and that was to allow the road to connect on the Eastern Branch of the Potomac River with the Baltimore and Potomac road, between Anacostia bridge and Benning's bridge; but as the bill came here it not only authorized the road to connect, but to come into the District, and to have all the powers of all the other roads that come into the District. It is proposed in the amendment to strike that out and leave only power to connect, to which I think there will be no objection on the part of any Senator.

By unanimous consent the bill (H. R. No. 3012) to authorize the Southern Maryland Railroad Company to extend a railroad into and within the District of Columbia was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to amend by striking out, beginning in line 9, after the word "railroad" to the end of the bill, in the following words:

And the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, within the District of Columbia, as may be determined on by said companies; and the said Southern Maryland Railroad Company is hereby authorized to exercise the same powers, rights, and privileges, and be subject to the same restrictions in the extension, construction, and operation of their said railroad into and within said District, as are extended to like corporations under the existing laws of the District of Columbia.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

Within the District of Columbia, but not within the limits of the city of Washington, as may be determined on by said companies, and for this purpose only.

Mr. DAVIS. I was not in when the bill was read. I understand it is a bill relating to railroads. I would ask for information where the bill comes from.

Mr. DORSEY. I wanted to ask that question myself. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Vermont where this bill comes from.

Mr. MORRILL. I understand it was reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia, and in the absence of the chairman of that committee I called it up. It was reported by the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, and he has tried several times to get it up. He is not here this morning. The amendment was agreed to between him and myself and by the parties interested in the railroad. As the bill came here, it allowed connection with both roads, and it would allow a road to be run across in front of the Capitol.

Mr. DORSEY. That bill as originally introduced provided for permitting a railway to be constructed across the front of this city from end to end.

Mr. MORRILL. If the Senator had listened to the amendment, he would have seen that the bill as proposed to be amended by me only permits them to have connection here at one single point between the Anacostia bridge and Benning's bridge.

Mr. DORSEY. I should like to have the Senator explain through what streets they get here.

Mr. MORRILL. They do not come into the city at all under my amendment.

Mr. DAVIS. I ask that the bill be read as now proposed to be amended. This is a very unusual time to call up such an important bill, and I should like to have some information about it.

Mr. MORRILL. I will say that I have no interest in the bill, but I am endeavoring to protect this city from the further introduction of these railroads, that would interfere with the streets, and especially with the Capitol grounds. With the amendment proposed by me, the bill will only permit a connection outside of the limits of the city of Washington.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read as proposed to be amended.

The Chief Clerk read the bill as it would read if amended as proposed.

Mr. DAVIS. I am not familiar with the bill. I would inquire when the bill was reported, and from what committee?

Mr. MORRILL. From the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. DAVIS. When?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It seems to have been reported on the 7th of June last.

Mr. DAVIS. Last session. It may be proper; I know not; but this is not, in my judgment, the time to take up a bill of so much importance, if it be of importance. As it has been here since June last, and there has been ample opportunity to take it up when there would have been full time for the Senate to have considered it, I ask the Senator from Vermont if he thinks in his judgment this is a proper time to take up a railroad bill and pass it. Would it not be better for all interested not at this time to press its consideration?

Mr. MORRILL. I have no interest in this bill. All I can say is, that it is not a very important railroad bill; it is a very little one; it merely allows this road to build a short branch to connect, so as to have some connection with the business of this District. I discharge my whole duty when I bring the bill forward, because I obstructed it three or four weeks ago on one or two occasions when the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia tried to bring it before the Senate. I objected to it that it was too comprehensive altogether, and I said if that was the sole purpose that they wanted they had obtained much too large grants. The amendment proposed by me and adopted this morning will limit the bill to the minimum amount. I cannot think there is much objection to it, but if there is, it is for the Senate to dispose of it.

Mr. WADLEIGH. Will my friend the Senator from Vermont yield to me a moment while I call up a pension bill?

Mr. MORRILL. Let this be disposed of.

Mr. WADLEIGH. It is for a Vermont volunteer.

Mr. MORRILL. Well, I will informally give way.

CHARLES H. BUGBEE.

Mr. WADLEIGH. I ask leave to call up the bill (H. R. No. 1995) granting a pension to Charles H. Bugbee, late private in Company A, Third Vermont Volunteers.

Mr. DAVIS. Is that bill recommended by the Pension Committee?

Mr. WADLEIGH. Yes, sir; and reported by the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. McDONALD. It is all right; the case has been examined.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ANSON K. YOUNG.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Senate to take up House bill No. 2237.

By unanimous consent, the bill (H. R. No. 2237) granting a pension to Anson K. Young was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place upon the pension-roll the name of Anson K. Young, of Grant County, Wisconsin, late a private in Company I, Forty-third Regiment of Wisconsin Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HENRY M. MEADE.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I ask for the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 1082) for the relief of Henry M. Meade, late paymaster in the United States Navy. I move that the Committee on Naval Affairs be discharged from its consideration, and that the bill be put on its passage.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for adjusting the accounts of Henry M. Meade, late a paymaster in the United States Navy, and crediting him with the sum of $2,545.22 for unavoidable losses sustained by him in the legitimate performance of his duties as paymaster in the United States Navy, from 1862 to 1872, which sum stands charged against him at the Treasury Department.

Mr. DAVIS. Of course the bill is subject to objection; but I do not wish to object unless after explanation I find that I ought to do so. I ask the Senator to explain what the reason for the bill is.

Mr. BURNSIDE. This man was a paymaster in the Navy and rendered ten years' continuous and excellent service. He was unfortunate in the latter portion of his service, ran behind in the settlement of his accounts. He became so beside himself that he had to be placed in an insane asylum, where he remained six months and died. He had more than vouchers enough to cover this loss, as is stated by Judge Tabor, the Fourth Auditor, but they were in an irregular shape, and could not be allowed by the accounting officers. There is a report from the House committee. The Fourth Auditor says:

> In view of the good record as paymaster of Mr. Meade prior, * * * and the fact that he has numerous vouchers showing expenditures and losses amounting to a little more than he is charged with as a deficit, and for which the accounting officers have no authority to credit him, I have to state that I see no impropriety in passing the bill in his favor.

That is the statement of the Fourth Auditor.

Mr. DAVIS. Does the bill come from a committee?

Mr. BURNSIDE. The Committee on Naval Affairs had it in charge, and I understand that the members of the committee have no objection to its passage, but for some reason or other it was not reported upon.

Mr. CRAGIN. This matter was before the Committee on Naval Affairs and attention was given to it; but the papers were somewhat voluminous, and the member of the committee to whom the subject was referred delayed making any report. This is a House bill. From the examination I have given the matter, I am satisfied there is much in the claim of Paymaster Meade that ought to be considered. The letter just read from the Fourth Auditor, who has examined it thoroughly and fully recommends the passage of this bill, satisfies me that it clearly ought to pass.

Mr. HEREFORD. I will say to my colleague with regard to this bill that a similar bill was introduced into the Senate and referred to the Committee on Claims, and by that committee referred to myself as a subcommittee. I examined the papers pretty carefully, read the report of the Naval Committee of the Senate and the report of the House committee. While all the testimony that is referred to in the report made by the House committee was not before our committee, for the reason that it had to be withdrawn to be taken before the United States court, in which the trial was pending, from the papers that were in my hands as a subcommittee I believe there is merit in the bill. I think that it ought to pass, and that Mr. Meade ought to be relieved; that the losses which may have occurred were through no negligence or culpability on his part whatever. An officer occupying his position through so many years and on different vessels, and performing his duty in the manner that he did, should not be held to a strict accountability for losses such as these.

The shortness of the time left before this measure will be brought to a close admonishes me that it will be improper for me to go into any lengthy explanation of the merits of the bill. I simply content myself with saying that from the examination I gave the Senate bill which was before me as a subcommittee of the committee to which it was referred, I think there is merit in the bill, and that the relief ought to be granted.

The bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. GEORGE M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House further insisted on its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives further disagreeing to the amendment of the Senate insisted on by the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 4691) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes, and asking a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. BLAINE. I move that the Senate further insist on its amendments, and agree to the new conference asked by the House.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the committee on the part of the Senate; and Mr. BLAINE, Mr. ALLISON, and Mr. WALLACE were appointed.

THE SIGNAL SERVICE.

Mr. SPENCER submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. No. 731) to limit and fix the signal service, having met after full and free conference, have been unable so agree.

GEO. E. SPENCER,
POWELL CLAYTON,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
OTHO R. SINGLETON,
JAMES WILSON,
Managers on the part of the House.

MOSES F. CARLETON.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY. I move to take up for present consideration House bill No. 2386.

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. No. 2386) for the relief of Moses F. Carleton, late second lieutenant of Company I, Fourth Michigan Infantry Volunteers, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for the payment to Moses F. Carleton, late second lieutenant of Company I, Fourth Michigan Infantry Volunteers, the regular pay of second lieutenant of volunteers in the war of the rebellion, from the 20th of October, 1865, until June 12, 1866, after deducting therefrom the pay he received as sergeant of the company.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PRACTICE OF PHARMACY IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. SPENCER. I move to proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 1398) to regulate the practice of pharmacy in the District of Columbia.

Mr. DORSEY. I object to the consideration of that bill. It is a long bill, and cannot possibly pass.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arkansas objects.

Mr. SPENCER. I hope the Senator will withdraw the objection.

Mr. DORSEY. I cannot withdraw the objection to that bill. I think it is a very vicious measure, and ought not to be considered at all.

Mr. SPENCER. I am very sorry. I thought the Senator from Arkansas had consented to it in the Committee on the District of Columbia. I withdraw my motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is withdrawn.

CITIZENS' RAILROAD.

Mr. SPENCER. I ask that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 1652) giving the approval and sanction of Congress to the route and termini of the Citizens' Railroad, and to regulate its construction and operation.

Mr. MORRILL. I most emphatically object to that bill. If the Senator desires me to use time in giving my reasons I will do so, but if he will not press it I will not do so at the present time.

Mr. SPENCER. If the Senator is going to insist on objecting I shall not press the bill at this late hour of the session.

Mr. MORRILL. Most assuredly I shall object. We have already more railroads in the city than are required if they were properly located, and now to have all the streets given up I for one shall object to.

Mr. SPENCER. I am very sorry that the Senator from Vermont objects.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama withdraws his motion.

JOHN GOWERS.

Mr. SPENCER. I ask consent to proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 1581) for the relief of John Gowers, late of Company C, One hundred and eleventh Regiment New York Volunteers.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. Has that been acted upon by the Committee?

Mr. SPENCER. The bill was acted upon by the Committee, and passed both Houses at the last session of Congress. It is now passed again, because it passed too late then to receive the President's signature. I will send up the RECORD to be read, that the fact may appear.

Mr. COCKRELL. Unless it has come from the committee, I move that it be postponed.

Mr. SPENCER. This bill has come from the Committee on Military Affairs and been favorably acted upon by the committee. I ask that the extract from the RECORD of August 16, 1876, which I send to the desk, be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Mr. SPENCER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 1581) for the relief of John Gowers, late of Company C, One hundred and eleventh Regiment New York Volunteers.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It authorizes the Secretary of War to so correct the record of John Gowers, late of Company C, One hundred and eleventh Regiment of New York Volunteer Infantry, as to remove the charge of desertion now standing against his name.

Mr. SPENCER. There is a printed report upon which the bill passed the House. There can be no objection to it.

Mr. DAVIS. I should like to hear the report read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. BANNING, from the Committee on Military Affairs of the House of Representatives, March 17:

"The Committee on Military Affairs, having had under consideration House bill No. 1581, submit the following report:

"John Gowers, late of Company C, One hundred and eleventh Regiment New York Volunteers, enlisted at Auburn, New York, and served faithfully until he was captured, with his regiment, at Harper's Ferry, Virginia, September 14, 1862. He, with others, seems to have held the idea that, being paroled, they had a right to go to their homes and remain until exchanged. Gowers went to his home, at Montezuma, New York, and remained there until he was arrested. It appears from the evidence that his wife was very ill, being near her confinement; that he did not attempt to go beyond his home, and returned willingly to his regiment; was there tried by an illegal court, and sentenced to pay expense of arrest, to wear what was called by the sentence of the court the wooden overcoat, and to be confined in the guard-house. He served out his sentence, and afterward did good service until he was captured, in 1864, and died at Andersonville prison. The evidence also shows that his wife was confined, and gave birth to a child, two days after his arrest. The committee think the case one of peculiar hardship, and one in which great injustice has been done to the heirs of the soldier, who did good service, and had no intention of deserting, and would, therefore, recommend that the bill be passed."

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. COCKRELL. I understand this bill passed this Congress and not last Congress.

Mr. SPENCER. This Congress.

Mr. COCKRELL. The first session of the Forty-fourth Congress, after having been considered by the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. SPENCER. Yes, sir.

Mr. COCKRELL. I misunderstood the Senator. I thought he said the last Congress instead of the present Congress.

Mr. SPENCER. There is no objection to the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARBLE BLOCKS IN BOND.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I move that the Senate take up House bill No. 2867.

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. No. 2867) to amend section 2958 of the Revised Statutes was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to amend section 2958 of the Revised Statutes by adding in the sixth line, after the words "other merchandise," the words "and marble in blocks may, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury, be bonded in open yards, under the care of an officer of customs, at the expense of the owner or importer."

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SOUTHERN MARYLAND RAILROAD.

Mr. SPENCER. I move that the Senate adopt the amendment of the Senator from Vermont to House bill No. 3012, that was up for discussion a few moments ago.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill (H. R. No. 3012) to authorize the Southern Maryland Railroad Company to extend a railroad into and within the District of Columbia is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, having been laid aside temporarily. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. MORRILL.]

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS. I have a very decided objection, unless I know more about the bill, to its passage, and I say to the Senator from Alabama and the Senator from Vermont that it cannot pass unless it is properly explained.

Mr. SPENCER. There is no explanation needed in this case. The bill is [illegible] allow the Southern Maryland Railroad to form a connection with the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad outside of the city limits. I cannot see any objection to it. It is a road that is in process of completion.

Mr. DAVIS. I ask that the latter part of the bill be read as it stands amended. It is a very short bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill as amended will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the bill as amended.

Mr. SPENCER. It should include connections with the Baltimore and Ohio as well as the Baltimore and Potomac road.

Mr. DAVIS. The Baltimore and Ohio was in the bill, but for some cause has been stricken out.

Mr. MORRILL. I have objection to saying "Baltimore and Ohio," because it cannot make the connection with the Baltimore and Ohio without coming right through the city, in front of the Capitol.

Mr. DAVIS. Then I would say to my friend with all due respect that the bill cannot pass.

Mr. DAWES. I should like to inquire of the chairman of the committee how near the Government buildings at the Insane Asylum this road goes.

Mr. SPENCER. This will not go within half a mile of the Government Insane Asylum.

Mr. DAWES. On which side of it?

Mr. SPENCER. North of it.

Mr. DAWES. That is, the Government property will be between the Potomac and this railroad?

Mr. SPENCER. Between the Potomac and this railroad.

Mr. DAWES. And not within half a mile of it?

Mr. SPENCER. Not within half a mile of it.

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not think the Senate ought to consider this bill at this time in view of the facts stated by the Senator from Vermont and the Senator from West Virginia. We are now in the last hour of the session. To take up and undertake to consider measures of the importance of this, and which may affect the rights and involve the interests that this bill may touch, is not proper. I therefore move that this bill be postponed until the first Wednesday in December, in the year of our Lord 1877.

Mr. SPENCER. I hope that will not be done.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Missouri.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. N. S. BROWN, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. No. 1111) for the relief of Thomas E. Maley.

The message also announced that the House had concurred in the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 4680) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes.

JOSEPH SEGAR.

Mr. WADLEIGH. I am authorized by the Committee on Privileges and Elections to report the following resolution, upon which I ask the action of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Joseph Segar compensation and mileage as a Senator of the United States from the date of the death of Hon. Lemuel J. Bowden to the end of the term for which said Segar was elected.

Mr. SARGENT. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution cannot be considered, objection being made.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BLAINE. I desire to make a statement to the Senate in regard to the Army appropriation bill, on which there has been a third conference without an agreement, and I want the Senate to correctly understand the points of difference, so that if there be any instructions the Senate may desire to give to the conference committee they may take action now. We reduced to writing the statement made by the House conferees, in order that the Senate might exactly apprehend it. It is this:

The conferees on the part of the House, while not insisting on the very letter of the fifth section of the Army bill, finally maintained that they would consent to the passage of no appropriation bill for the Army that shall not contain such restriction upon the President in regard to the use of United States troops in Louisiana as will prevent him from installing and maintaining the Packard government.

The Senate conferees have simply asked that the Army bill may pass as it was last year, or that there may be a modified form of that, merely giving enough money to carry on the Army on the basis of last year's appropriation, until Congress shall meet again in December; but the Senate conferees felt compelled, from a sense of their duty to the Constitution and the laws of the country, to risk the failure of the bill rather than consent to insert that provision in it. If they have misrepresented the Senate in taking that position it is for the Senate to say so.

There has been no ground whatever taken on the part of the Senate conferees—and I say that lest there should be some misunderstanding—that troops were expected to be used or desired to be used in Louisiana or elsewhere, but here is an invasion of the constitutional rights of the Executive which we were not ready to concede. There are not to-day between the Potomac and the borders of Texas a thousand Federal troops, and I make this statement on the authority of General Sherman. The whole idea of any liberty being endangered by them is a nightmare, a mere dream. But if there was not one soldier there, if there was a corporal there without his guard, and only that one there, I would not consent to this amendment for myself on behalf of the Senate. If I and the conferees with whom I have had the honor to be associated, have misrepresented the Senate on that point, we ask your instructions. If we receive no instruction, we may meet again with the conferees of the House, but we will not consent to pass the Army bill with that provision in it.

Several SENATORS. That is right. [Applause in the galleries.]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will remind the occupants of the galleries that if any demonstration is made again, he will order the galleries cleared.

Mr. DAWES. Does the Senator from Maine understand that it is competent for the Senate to instruct its conferees?

Mr. BLAINE. Competent for the Senate to instruct by receding only; not to instruct directly of course. You cannot properly instruct conferees; but I used the language simply to convey the idea that the Senate could if it chose reverse the position of its conferees.

Mr. DAWES. I have confidence in the conferees themselves without any instructions whatever.

Mr. BLAINE. We felt it our duty of course at so critical a time in the session as this not to keep the whole subject within the narrow limits of the conference room; and if the Senate desires to make expression in the shape of receding or modifying in any way we felt that the subject should be before them. If there is nothing done the Senate conferees propose to stand upon that as the point of honor, of constitutional right, and resist a most dangerous innovation on the part of Congress on the rights of the Executive.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President, the Senator from Maine has exactly expressed my own views. I did not make the inquiry with any idea of weakening the force of the Senator's remarks, but I have often read of conferees coming into one House and the other and asking instructions. I understand, according to the parliamentary rule, that the fundamental rule at the bottom of a conference is that the conferees shall be free from all instructions. So long as our conferees, as in this instance, have so exactly carried out the views of the majority of the Senate, it does seem to me not quite worth our while to trench upon established parliamentary law.

Mr. MORRILL. I hope that no further time will be consumed. If these conferees are to meet again, it is obviously proper that they should have every moment that is left. Therefore I hope no time will be consumed on this matter.

Mr. WALLACE. As one of the conferees on the part of the Senate on the Army bill I have to state that I was ready to agree in the bill under the instructions of the Senate as it passed this body, but we met difficulty from the conferees of the House, as is usual in these conferences. I thought it was our duty to concede on the one side and on the other.

With this view I submitted a proposition to my colleagues from the Senate, to which they did not agree, but which I thought would cover the ground, and to which I believed the House would agree. It is in these words:

That if armed collision, or such imminent danger of armed collision as shall require the President to change the present attitude of the troops of the United States now in the States of Louisiana and South Carolina shall occur during one year hereafter, that then, in the opinion of Congress, an extraordinary occasion has arisen, as provided for in the Constitution, under which the President is authorized to convene both Houses of Congress.

I submitted this and urged it, but it seemed as though it was impossible to get the two committees of conference together, but the special objection came from my colleagues. The statement of the Senator from Maine is what the committee separated upon.

Mr. BLAINE. The Senator from Pennsylvania undoubtedly made that proposition; and as long as that is spoken of, I may say that the Senate conferees on the republican side made the proposition in order to bring the two branches together upon the question of the reduction of the Army, that the President of the United States should be empowered, if in his discretion the public safety would permit it, to reduce the Army to 20,000 men within the next fiscal year, and if his discretion was against it, that he should report his reasons therefor at the ensuing session of Congress.

I state that because the honorable Senator from Pennsylvania has stated his position, and to show also that the other is the vital point on which we disagree.

Mr. ALLISON. I will state also that the Senate conferees proposed, as a settlement of this question, that an appropriation should be made upon the basis of last year's bill for one-half the ensuing year, without reference to any other question, so as to avoid the necessity for an extra session, which was not acceded to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. GEORGE M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. No. 4076) granting a pension to Apolime A. Blair; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. No. 1111) for the relief of Thomas E. Maley; and

A bill (H. R. No. 1200) for the relief of Almont Barnes.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN.

On motion of Mr. SPENCER, it was Ordered, That James Atkins have leave to withdraw his papers from the files of the Senate.

On motion of Mr. KERNAN, it was Ordered, That Mrs. A. P. Miles have leave to withdraw her papers from the files of the Senate.

APOLIME A. BLAIR.

Mr. SPENCER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill granting a pension to the widow of the late General Francis P. Blair, just received from the House of Representatives.

By unanimous consent, the bill (H. R. No. 4076) granting a pension to Apolime A. Blair was read three times, and passed. It proposes to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Apolime A. Blair, widow of Frank P. Blair, jr., a major-general during the war of the rebellion, who died July 9, 1875, of paralysis, superinduced by exposure and mental unrest during such service, and to pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month.

THANKS TO THE PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE.

Mr. McCREERY. Mr. President, it affords me pleasure to present the following brief testimonial to the distinguished merits of our presiding officer, who is about to retire from his high position, but he bears with him the respect and the personal esteem of each and every member of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. WRIGHT in the chair.)

The Senator from Kentucky offers a resolution, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the thanks of the Senate are due to Hon. THOMAS W. FERRY for the dignity, ability, and impartiality with which he has presided over its deliberations.

The resolution was adopted unanimously.

AWARDS OF MEXICAN CLAIMS COMMISSION.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. There is on our table a bill which has passed the House of Representatives unanimously, and passed the Judiciary Committee of this House, for the purpose of disposing of the funds under the commission with Mexico. It is very important to the interests of the country and these claimants especially that that bill should pass before Congress adjourns.

Mr. GORDON. I agree with the Senator from Pennsylvania. This matter ought to be called up at once. It has been acted on by the committee and is ready for action by the Senate.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. To fail to pass it would be doing great injustice to many individuals. I move to take up the bill (H. R. No. 4629) to provide for the distribution of the awards made under the convention between the United States of America and the Republic of Mexico, concluded on the 4th day of July, 1868.

Mr. COOPER. Is not that the bill that the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STEVENSON] called the attention of the Senate to frauds in connection with? I see that the Senator is absent. I know nothing about it; but in view of the statement that he made before the Senate the other day, I should rather not have the bill passed.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. The Senator from Georgia [Mr. GORDON] understands the bill.

Mr. WALLACE. This bill has been called up once or twice in the Senate and it has been objected to on each occasion, because it was alleged that there was one claim included in and to be paid under the bill that was an improper, unjust, and fraudulent claim. With the facts in regard to that claim, I believe the Judiciary Committee of this body have been made acquainted. The bill as a whole, with an amendment excepting that claim from present payment, it seems to me ought to pass the Senate; and surely when it has come to the notice of Senators that such a charge is made, we ought not to pass the bill until we examine into the truth of the facts alleged. I believe the Senator from Iowa knows something of the facts in his capacity as a member of the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. In regard to the alleged fraud I think it is only an assertion made by a claim agent here, in the hope that he may get some legislation on the subject. The truth is that the claim to which reference is made is a claim which the party has been notified will not be acted upon by the State Department, and no other will be acted upon by that Department to which objection is made. But the money has been paid under the treaty by the Mexican government, and we should treat them as a creditor which has long been looking for his reluctant debtor to be just. Let us take this money and hold it in the State Department until the proper claimants come there for it.

Mr. GORDON. The Senator from Pennsylvania is mistaken in reference to my having knowledge of the facts. I had a brief conversation with him in reference to this matter; and I requested him to call up the bill, thinking that it was the award, as I believed it was, of a proper court; but as to these charges I never heard of them before. I do not know anything about them. I had supposed this was a final award of the court, and that Congress ought to take action on the matter. I know nothing, however, with reference to the charges.

Mr. WRIGHT. I ask the attention of the Senate for a moment to this case. This bill was reported from the Committee on the Judiciary by the Senator from New York, [Mr. CONKLING.] At the time it was reported there was no suggestion to the committee that there was anything wrong in any matter connected with this award. Subsequent to that time information was brought to us making it reasonably clear that with reference to one claim of some $500,000 there was an unquestioned fraud. It will be remembered that the Senator from New York called up the bill at one time, and this fact being made known and objection made to the consideration of the bill, it was passed over. It was called up again, and again objection was made and this matter was made still, if possible, more apparent. It was passed over again. Subsequent to that time the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, who is detained at home by sickness now, called my attention to the bill and said that he was satisfied that we could not at this time afford to press the consideration of the bill, and that if its consideration was pressed it should be recommitted to the committee. I had a conference also with the Senator from New York who reported the bill, and he agrees that under all the circumstances there ought to be a recommittal. I think then that at this time in the session it would hardly be just or fair to press the consideration of the bill, and I therefore move that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa moves that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

HENRY S. FRENCH.

Mr. BAILEY. I ask the Senate to take up House bill No. 473, authorizing Henry S. French to bring an action in the Court of Claims.

French, of Nashville, Tennessee, against the United States, for re-imbursement for certain cotton alleged by him to have been taken by agents of the United States in the year 1864 at or near Jonesborough.

CLOSE OF THE SESSION.

Mr. SARGENT submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to;

Resolved, That a committee of two members be appointed to join such committee as may be appointed by the House of Representatives to wait upon the President of the United States, and inform him that, unless he may have some further communication to make, the two Houses of Congress having finished the business before them are ready to adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore was authorized to appoint the committee, and Mr. SARGENT and Mr. KERNAN were appointed.

ELECTORAL COMMISSION PROCEEDINGS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution from the House of Representatives:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring,) That there be printed 10,000 copies of the proceedings of the electoral commission, embracing all of the said proceedings and arguments and briefs of counsel, together with the proceedings of the joint convention regarding all States the returns from which were submitted to said commission, 7,500 copies for the use of the House of Representatives and 2,500 copies for the use of the Senate.

The resolution was concurred in.

THE PACIFIC RAILROAD ACTS.

Mr. STEVENSON. I am directed by the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1192) to construe section 12 of an act entitled "An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes," approved July 1, 1862, and the several amendments of said section, and to determine the relation of the main line and branches, to make a report thereon, and move that the report be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WRIGHT. That report having been made, and the order made for its printing, I now move that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

FINAL ADJOURNMENT.

The hour of twelve o'clock, noon, now having arrived,

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Before declaring the order of adjournment, I cannot forego the privilege of expressing my deep sense of obligation to this body for its formal and expressive terms just submitted of unimpaired confidence and support during a short but most trying session, now about to close. For the many individual expressions of trust tendered, I can only say my heart is full of appreciation.

The responsibilities which have rested, and perplexities attended, upon the Senate during this ending session have been unexampled in its annals. A presidential election relying for its ascertainment and declaration upon a single electoral vote has been the great solution taxing the wisdom, patience, and patriotism of Congress. Party spirit has been by doubt and hope intensified to such a degree that the whole country has been for three months in such a state of excitement that the life of the Republic has been despaired of. Every industrial interest was paralyzed by the painful pressure of uncertainty. Anarchy menaced the nation. To that dire peril and necessity you, Senators, with your coadjutors, addressed yourselves, and rising to the altitude of the occasion mastered the situation. The nation still lives, and upon this perilous divide, which will ever mark the centennial, you have held and saved the Republic with all its fortunes. The source of power is again proven, not by simple recognition, but by signal demonstration, illustrating the fact that the people do not exist for the state, but the state is framed for the people. It was a sublime spectacle of delegated will determining a perilous incident in national progress.

The crisis has not come without its great service. It has at least broadened the ideas of the country and exemplified the truth that in great crises American representatives are less subjects of party than citizens of the Republic. The nation has likewise undergone a new baptism of patriotism, and its representatives have illustrated the highest honor to be that of usefulness to country. The occasion not only assured the existence of the Government, but revealed the unpurchasable independence of the American citizen. The method of this solution of a threatening presidential event was the suggestion of no individual opinion, but the resultant concessions of many. In the storm of adjustment doubts and reflections were rife, but these have disappeared in the calm of declaration. Variant convictions of duty may have questioned the wisdom of respective opponents, but upon the integrity of all the tranquil result invokes national praise. That party ardor, intensified by the closeness of the election, and the doubt as to which presidential candidate was to be declared chosen, and this uncertainty alternating between candidates daily for months, should move individuals to partisan words, is less strange than wonderful that freedom from acrimony and renewal of cordiality should follow so soon such an exciting contest. Verily, the statesman in this Chamber rises above the politician. The country will gratefully note this illustrious example of patriotic devotion to its life and institutions.

During the exciting session it would be vain to hope that in the administration of this Chair some of you Senators have not had occasion to criticise and, it may be, to except to rulings. Your generosity, however, has only been equal to your cordiality of support. Of one thing be assured, that howsoever the Chair may have swerved, it has been solely the error of unripened judgment, upheld by a purity of motive and impartiality of purpose which it is hoped are not questioned. Senators, the closing moment brings me to the painful reflection of our separation.

The changes incident to political strife will make inroads upon our number. Though we gain new as we lose old associates, the breach comes not without a pang. Responsible, laborious, exciting, and conflicting as are the duties of this august body, cordiality, friendship, and attachment are the cords wound around our senatorial bond. With those who leave the Senate, our highest hopes and best wishes follow. To those who are here to join us, our salutations of welcome are tendered. Thus parting and thus bidding, while not omitting the officers of the Senate, whose fidelity words cannot adequately acknowledge, and commending all to the care of that Providence which has kindly kept our number unbroken during the session, I now pronounce the closing session of the Forty-fourth Congress adjourned without day.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, March 3, 1877.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. I. L. TOWNSEND.

READING OF JOURNAL DISPENSED WITH.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the reading of the Journal will be dispensed with.

There was no objection; and the reading was dispensed with.

Mr. DURHAM. I desire to make a statement to the House. I desire to have it go on the record that I was detained last night from the House by indisposition.

Mr. SAVAGE. I rise to correct the RECORD and the Journal. I am recorded as having voted "nay" on the motion of Mr. WADDELL to discharge the Louisiana returning board, whereas I was unavoidably absent, and should be recorded as not voting.

The SPEAKER. The correction will be made.

CHOCTAW CLAIMS.

Mr. HOOKER. I move the adoption of the resolution which I send to the desk. I desire to say that I make this motion simply to carry out the wish of the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the subject-matter of the bill to which the resolution relates. It is the wish of that committee that the bill shall now be considered by the House.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the rules be suspended so as to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 3798) for the relief of the Choctaw Nation of Indians and bring the same before the House for consideration at this time.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think, in justice to the House, on account of the great importance of this measure, it should be read at length.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read.

The bill was read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Choctaw Nation of Indians be, and hereby is, authorized to commence an action in the United States Court of Claims to recover whatever is due, if anything, to said nation from the United States under the eleventh and twelfth articles of the treaty between the United States and the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians, of the 22d day of June, A. D. 1855; and said court is hereby clothed with jurisdiction to hear and determine said action, and shall render judgment for the amount which may be found due, if anything, with interest thereon at the rate of five per centum per annum from the 9th day of March, 1859; and said court shall be authorized, in the determination of such action, to go behind the treaty of 1855, and inquire into the merits of the Choctaw claim, so far as the same may be affected by fraud or mistake in the making of any treaty with said tribe or ratifying the same, or in any negotiation or official correspondence relating to the same, or by any act of Congress or reports of Departments touching Indian affairs, or any previous settlements with or receipts executed by the duly constituted authorities of said tribe; and either party may prosecute an appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States from such judgment, if such appeal be prayed within thirty days from the rendition thereof; and in the hearing and determination of said suit the said courts, or either of them, shall give said action precedence over other cases.

SEC. 2. That said action shall be commenced by a petition stating the facts on which said nation claims to recover, and the amount of its claim; and said petition may be verified by either of the authorized delegates of said nation as to the existence of such facts; and no other statements need be contained in said petition or verification.

SEC. 3. That if final judgment be rendered in favor of said nation the Secretary of the Treasury, upon the same being certified to him under the seal of the court rendering the same, shall pay out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated to the proper authorities of said nation, upon their requisition, so much of said judgment as they shall ascertain and determine to be necessary for the payment of the just liabilities of the tribe to its individual members referred to in said treaty, such costs of suit and attorneys' fees as may be allowed by the court, and shall retain the balance, if any, in trust for said nation, as provided in the thirteenth article of said treaty; or said Secretary of the Treasury may, in his discretion, make such payment aforesaid to the proper authorities aforesaid, by delivering to them any bonds of the United States which have been or may be authorized by law, sufficient in amount at their market value to satisfy said judgment. And the payment of the judgment recovered under this act shall be held to be a full satisfaction of all claims arising under said eleventh and twelfth articles of said treaty; and in the event of a final decision in said courts against the Choctaws, such decision shall be a bar to the further prosecution of said claims.

Mr. HOLMAN. I rise to a question of order. Is there any rule of the House that prevents a second motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill where a motion for that purpose has already been defeated? The House declined some time since to pass this bill under a suspension of the rules.

Mr. HOOKER. I am not aware of that.

Mr. HOLMAN. The former proposition was to suspend the rules and pass the bill; the same bill.

Mr. FORT. It is exactly the same bill. This bill has been beaten here many times, and if it is proposed to pass it there ought to be at least an hour's debate on each side.

Mr. HOOKER. It will be time enough to arrange about the debate when the rules are suspended.

Mr. FORT. I want debate, in order to show what is the character of this bill. I hold in my hand a letter from the chief of the Choctaw Nation, which I desire to submit to the House, and I insist on debate if this thing is to be brought here again. It has been before Congress ever since I have been a member of this House, and has been defeated many times.

Mr. HOOKER. I object to debate at this point. If my resolution be adopted there will be an opportunity for debate. The proposition is to suspend the rules and bring the bill before the House for consideration.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will suggest that he listened to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER] himself for a moment.

Mr. HOOKER. Yes, sir; but I simply stated in one word what was the object of the resolution.

Mr. FORT. I insist that it is out of order to consider this bill a second time.

The SPEAKER. This bill has been before the House on a motion to suspend the rules once before during this session and the motion to suspend the rules was lost. But the Chair does not know of any rule which would prevent the repetition of the motion at this time.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. There is none.

The SPEAKER. If the resolution is not a proper one the remedy is in the House, not in the Chair.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. GORHAM, its Secretary, announced that the Senate insisted upon its amendment to the bill (H. R. No. 4680) making appropriations for the sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878, &c., disagreed to by the House of Representatives, agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. WINDOM, Mr. DORSEY, and Mr. WALLACE had been appointed as conferees on the part of the Senate.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask for the yeas and nays on this vote.

Mr. FORT. I suggest that by unanimous consent we have an hour's debate on this question prior to the submission of the motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. HOOKER. If the rules are suspended the bill will be before the House for consideration.

Mr. SPARKS. I ask that the letter which I hold in my hand may be read.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will, for the present, withdraw the call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. HOOKER. I renew the call for the yeas and nays.

REGULAR ORDER.

Mr. KNOTT. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I desire to know what would be the effect of the adoption of this resolution.

The SPEAKER. The effect of the adoption of this resolution would be to bring the bill before the House for consideration, so that a majority vote could pass it.

Mr. WALLING. But it does not cut off debate.

Mr. KNOTT. But leaves the bill open to unlimited debate until the previous question is called for.

Mr. FORT. There are millions in this bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi can call the previous question on it whenever he pleases.

The SPEAKER. The yeas and nays are called for, and the House can take the responsibility of bringing up the bill if they desire to do so; but they cannot put that responsibility upon the Chair.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 92, nays 107, not voting 95; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abbott, Adams, Ainsworth, Ashe, Bagby, George A. Bagley, John H. Bagley, jr., Ballou, Banks, Banning, Blackburn, Boone, William R. The message further announced that the Senate had passed a bill (S. MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, informed the House that the Senate disagreed to the amendments of the House to the bill (S. No. 731) to limit and fix the Signal-Service, asked a conference upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and had appointed Mr. SPENCER, Mr. CLAYTON, and Mr. RANDOLPH as managers of the conference on the part of the Senate.

LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to state, Mr. Speaker, that this report is the result of a conference on the legislative appropriation bill in which the House managers in their anxiety to get these bills through have made almost all the concessions. The House has yielded three hundred and sixty amendments made by the Senate. The Senate recedes from sixty-six of its amendments. The House has agreed to amendments with amendments to the number of one hundred and eighteen. While the salaries in the Territories and some of the salaries connected with the subtreasury system are diminished, the other salaries as fixed by the law of the last Congress remain about the same.

This report covers all the subject that went to the conference except the President's salary. The House having fixed that salary at $25,000, the Senate amended the House appropriation by fixing the salary at the present rate, $50,000. All other matters of disagreement are disposed of. I therefore move that the House concur in this report of the conference committee, that it insist on its disagreement to the two amendments connected with the President's salary, and ask for a further conference upon that point.

I ought to state that I would like to submit the motion to the House that the House adhere to its disagreement as to the salary of the President of the United States. But, inasmuch as there has been but one conference on this bill, I think it is only treating the Senate with proper courtesy to ask a further conference on the disagreement in regard to the President's salary; and I hope that when the vote shall be taken on insisting on our disagreement to the Senate amendment increasing the salary as fixed by the bill, the vote will be made a test of the judgment of the House and of what the House proposes to do.

I call for the previous question.

Mr. SAYLER. I hope the gentleman from Indiana will allow me to call his attention to one clause in the bill and to ask a question in regard to it. In the confusion during the reading of the report of the committee of conference, I was unable to understand what had been done with the Senate amendment No. 543, which provides for the payment of judgments of the Court of Claims, which have been confirmed by the Supreme Court of the United States. I desire to ask the gentleman from Indiana what was done with that amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. The judgments of the Court of Claims which are now unpaid amount in the aggregate to something over $1,100,000, embracing two judgments for very large amounts, one for $500,000, in favor of the Union Pacific Railroad Company. In view of the heavy indebtedness of that company to the United States, I believe that neither House desires that any payment of that claim shall be made this year. The next Congress will doubtless provide for the proper adjustment of the indebtedness of the Union Pacific Railroad Company to the United States, in which adjustment this judgment will be taken into account. There is another judgment, in favor of Marshall O. Roberts and Mr. Dickerson, for something over a million dollars. For reasons which I do not wish to enter upon at this time, the Committee on Appropriations of the House, having been informed of that judgment, which was rendered last June, and having no time during the remainder of this session to inquire into that judgment, and the political controversy in the country occupying so much of the time of all the members of the House during the present session, they have not been enabled to give that patient investigation to this case which the interests of the Government as well as the rights of the parties absolutely require. The claim now amounts to $600,000, the Treasury Department having during the last year paid $400,000, and that leaves a balance of $600,000. The legislative, &c., bill has not usually been the vehicle through which appropriations of this kind were made. The sundry civil bill is the proper one to embrace a proposition of that character, and the House having provided in the sundry civil bill for the payment of judgments of the Court of Claims which are not the subject of dispute, the conferees agree to strike out from this bill the provision in regard to the payment of these judgments, leaving the sundry civil bill to provide for such judgments as should be paid.

I trust the gentleman from Ohio will not, at this late moment of the session, ask me to give the reasons for an investigation into this judgment. I can assure him that it is a subject which Congress should carefully inquire into, not only as a proper construction of the resolution passed by the House, but as to the merrits of the claim based on that resolution. But the gentleman from Ohio can scarcely object to the action of the committee of conference as this amendment was improperly in the legislative, &c., bill anyhow, and should properly have been in the sundry civil bill, which has not yet finally passed the House. I do not wish to discuss the question at this time.

Mr. HOOKER. I would ask the gentleman whether the judgments of the Court of Claims have not been confirmed by the Supreme Court?

Mr. HOLMAN. They have been confirmed by a majority of the court. I must add further that the Court of Claims on the merits rejected the claim of the Union Pacific Railroad Company, and that the opinion of the Supreme Court, as I understand the matter, was based upon the resolution passed by this House, which was intended to be a mere restriction, and yet, as I understand the matter, it has received the construction that it was a concession on the part of the Government in favor of the claim.

Mr. SAYLER. I ask the gentleman to yield to me for a moment.

Mr. HOLMAN. I yield to the gentleman for five minutes.

Mr. SAYLER. As to the impropriety of putting this matter into the legislative, executive, and judicial bill, I confess that I cannot see it. It seems to me that it comes very properly under the head of "Court of Claims." The claim of the Union Pacific Railroad Company referred to by the gentleman from Indiana was not provided for or attempted to be provided for by either the Senate or the House in this bill upon the ground that we had claims against the road. But other claims were provided for by the Senate amendments, amounting to $635,410.59. For the payment of what? For the payment of claims against the Government of the United States on the part of its citizens which Congress authorized its citizens to prosecute in the Court of Claims, and which claims were appealed to the Supreme Court of the United States, where the judgments of the Court of Claims were solemnly and finally affirmed. That, Mr. Speaker, is the end of all litigation, and there is no attempt, no effort, no proposition, even, to impeach that judgment for fraud. Nothing of the kind has ever been done. Now I undertake to say that the Government of the United States should be as honest as it requires the citizen to be, and should pay its debts upon final judgment by a court of its own creation just as readily as it requires the citizen to pay his debts under like circumstances; else we might as well have no courts at all, and else the citizen has no remedy as against the Government.

I may not have as profound a respect for the judgment of the Supreme Court as I had a few days ago. Nevertheless it is the Supreme Court, the court of final adjudication in the United States, and we as a people must be bound by its decisions. I undertake to say that, that court having given its decision, neither the Congress of the United States in general nor the Committee on Appropriations of this House in particular, nor the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN,] the chairman of that committee, more especially, can sit as a returning board upon its final judgment. The gentleman says there has been no time to consider these claims.

Mr. HOLMAN. O, no, O, no; the gentleman misstates me.

Mr. SAYLER. I understood the gentleman to say——

Mr. HOLMAN. O, no.

Mr. SAYLER. Very well, I will take it back rather than be interrupted.

Mr. HOLMAN. I stated there had been no time to investigate this particular claim.

Mr. SAYLER. I am glad the gentleman makes the correction. There are several claims involved, and as to the particular claim to which I suppose the gentleman refers, I have here a transcript of the judgment. I know nothing of its merits or of the merits of any one of these claims. I only know they have been prosecuted to final judgment. The particular claim referred to is not in favor of Marshall O. Roberts and Mr. Dickerson, but is in favor of them as trustees of Mr. Sloo. The judgment was given in 1876, and should have gone before the Committee on Appropriations of the Forty-third Congress. There was some excuse for the committee in that Congress not taking up the matter, because the judgment had been so recently given; but there is no possible reason why this Congress should not pay these judgments.

Another word. The gentleman commented upon the manner in which this judgment was given. He says it was given upon a mere accidental wording of an act of Congress. Now I know nothing of the facts; but I cannot believe that the judges of either the Court of Claims or the Supreme Court of the United States are such miserable idiots or such outrageous rascals, as the charge necessarily would imply, as to have given a judgment for this large amount upon any such basis. More than one-half of this judgment has already been paid, and it seems to me that men who have received the judgment of the highest court of the country should have the benefit of it.

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, sir, part of this judgment has been paid; $400,000 of it has been paid without any precedent of the kind in our history to sustain it. In other words, the Treasury Department never before has paid such judgments unless they could be paid in full out of appropriations made by Congress. But in this instance, as the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SAYLER] must know, the gentleman who had been the counsel for these trustees, having close relations with the administration of the Government, was enabled by some influence to induce this extraordinary deviation from the uniform rule, and to secure the payment of a part of this judgment, when Congress had failed to appropriate the sum necessary for its entire payment.

I say this: from the investigation we have made and the fact that Congress has declined to make appropriations for the payment of all the judgments of the Court of Claims, reserving the right to inquire into those judgments, which it has a right to do, if that right is not reserved, then there is no need for the action of Congress. On the contrary, we appropriate for the payment of each specific judgment; and if the proper case arises Congress is expected to look into the circumstances connected with the rendering of the judgment.

Mr. SAYLER. Allow me a question.

Mr. HOLMAN. Permit me to finish my sentence. I say that Congress will come short of its duties, judging from the facts we have disclosed, if it fails to look into this judgment and to determine the question whether or not the judgment was procured through fraudulent influences.

Mr. SAYLER. I want to know from the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] if he claims that Congress has power at its will to inquire into a final judgment of the Supreme Court of the United States and to interfere with the execution of such judgment?

Mr. HOLMAN. Ah, the gentleman is now taking the ground that there is no going behind the judgment.

Mr. SAYLER. There is not, except upon impeachment for fraud, which is not proposed.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is what I do propose.

Mr. SAYLER. That can only be done in the court; not in Congress.

Mr. HOLMAN. I propose that the facts shall be inquired into.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] indicate the motion he desires to have submitted to the House?

Mr. HOLMAN. My motion is that the House agree to the report of the committee of conference, and further that it insist on its disagreement to the Senate amendment increasing the President's salary beyond the amount proposed in the bill as passed by the House, and to ask a further conference. I do not think it proper at this time to move that the House adhere to its disagreement, inasmuch as there has been but one conference on the bill. But I do think it proper that the House should insist on its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate in regard to the President's salary.

The SPEAKER. Would it not be better for the gentleman to frame his motion in this wise, that the House agree to the report of the committee of conference, and then that a vote of the House be taken whether it will recede from or insist upon its disagreement to the Senate amendment in relation to the salary of the President?

Mr. HOLMAN. I will accept the suggestion of the Chair and pursue that course.

Mr. HARRISON. It is proposed to have a further conference on this question.

The SPEAKER. On the question of the President's salary.

Mr. HARRISON. This is the second time that this House has determined that the salary of the President of the United States shall be but $25,000 a year. We have already, in answer to the demand of the country, fixed that salary at $25,000. Last session the Senate refused to concur with us and forced us to accede to its own idea. At this time we should stand up in the name of the people and show them that we are ready to carry out their wishes. I submit to the House that we should adhere to our action on this subject.

Mr. SAYLER. I want to move an amendment to the proposition of the gentleman from Indiana. He has already excepted from this report one section of the bill. Now I desire to except another section.

The SPEAKER. The conference committee has directed the chairman of the committee on the part of the House to permit an expression of the opinion of the House on the President's salary; but the conference committee has not allowed any other item to be reserved. The only course open to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SAYLER] is to induce the House to vote down the conference report.

The report of the committee of conference was adopted.

Mr. HOLMAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. I now move that the House now insist on its disagreement with the Senate as to the presidential salary.

Mr. GARFIELD. I ask the attention of the House upon this question for a single moment. This conference report is now adopted, and the bill passed except with regard to a single point.

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. GARFIELD. And on that point I understand the two Houses disagree.

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. GARFIELD. That single point is the proposition to reduce the salary of the President of the United States. The House will remember that not long ago a bill for this special object was passed by both Houses but was vetoed by the President. If we now insist upon the form of disagreement proposed by the gentleman from Indiana, we necessarily force this same issue upon the outgoing President at a moment when it would hardly be manly for him to sign a bill cutting down the salary of his successor. I do not believe that this House, whatever may be the political feeling of members, will think that a proper thing to do. I hope the House will not insist upon its disagreement on this subject.

Mr. HARRISON. This House voted $25,000 as the salary of the President. We did so at a time when we knew Mr. Tilden had been elected President, and when we believed that he would be inaugurated as the President of the people and before the returning boards had decided for Mr. Hayes, and before we thought it possible for them so to decide.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] will bear in mind that we fixed this salary at $25,000 when both parties in this House were equally confident of having control of the presidential office during the next four years.

Mr. GARFIELD. If this bill fails, we shall in the first place have an extra session, and in the second place, it will then be impossible to cut down this salary as regards the presidential term now about to commence. Thus the object of the gentleman's motion will fail.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not think it will fail.

Mr. GARFIELD. There can be no success in this movement. The only result of the vote proposed must be an extra session.

Mr. HARRISON. Will you take the responsibility of an extra session on account of this question? If so, we shall meet you squarely before the country on the issue.

Mr. GARFIELD. We are willing to take our proper share of every responsibility.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the motion of Mr. HOLMAN, that the House insist on its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate concerning the presidential salary, was agreed to, there being—ayes 118, noes 41.

Mr. HOLMAN moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

FORTIFICATION BILL.

Mr. HALE submitted a report; which was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 4188) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, and for the armament thereof, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878, having met, after a full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment striking out the words "machine-guns," in line 9 of the bill; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 2, and agree to an amendment as follows:

In line 12 of the bill, after the word "dollars," add the following: "and for Gatling or machine-guns, $25,000."

And the House agree to the same.

EUGENE HALE,
O. R. SINGLETON,
HIESTER CLYMER,
Managers on the part of the House.
WILLIAM WINDOM,
JOHN A. LOGAN,
N. G. DAVIS,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. HALE called for the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the report of the committee of conference was adopted.

Mr. HALE moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SIGNAL SERVICE.

Mr. SINGLETON. I ask unanimous consent that the bill (S. No. 731) to limit and fix the Signal Service be taken from the Speaker's table, and that the House insist on its amendments and ask a conference with the Senate.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

PENSIONS—WHEN TO BEGIN.

Mr. RICE. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. No. 2803) to provide that all pensions on account of death, wounds received, or disease contracted in the service of the United States since March 4, 1861, which have been granted, or which shall hereafter be granted, on application filed previous to January 1, 1880, shall commence from the date of death or discharge, and for the payment of the arrears of pensions.

The bill, which was read, provides that all pensions which have been, or may hereafter be, granted in consequence of death occurring from a cause which originated in the service of the United States since the 4th day of March, 1861, or in consequence of wounds or injuries received or disease contracted since said date, shall commence from the date of the death or discharge from the United States service of the person on whose account the claim has been, or shall hereafter be granted, or from the termination of the right of the party having prior title to such pension; provided that applications for pensions growing out of the war of 1861 have been, or shall hereafter be, filed with the Commissioner of Pensions on or before the 1st day of January, 1880. In all other cases, unless the application shall be filed within five years from the accruing of the right, the pension shall commence from the date of the filing of the application; provided further that the limitation herein prescribed shall not apply to claims by or in behalf of insane persons or minor children of deceased soldiers.

The second section provides that immediately upon the passage of this act the Commissioner of Pensions shall cause a copy of the same to be furnished each pension agent, whose duty it shall be to notify each pensioner upon his roll who shall be entitled to arrears of pension under this act, and it shall be the further duty of the Commissioner of Pensions to pay, or cause to be paid, to such pensioners, or if the pensioner shall have died to the person or persons entitled to the same, all such arrears of pension as the pensioner may be entitled to or if dead would have been entitled to under the provisions of the first section of this act had he or she survived.

Section 3 repeals all acts and parts of acts in conflict with these provisions.

The House divided and there were ayes 110, noes not counted.

So (two-thirds having voted in the affirmative) the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

Mr. RICE, by unanimous consent, was granted leave to print as part of the proceedings some remarks he had prepared on the foregoing bill.

BLACK BOB LANDS.

Mr. CROUNSE, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Public Lands, submitted a report on bills (H. R. No. 543 and H. R. No. 640) relating to certain Indian lands in the State of Kansas; which was ordered to be printed and recommitted.

T. A. M'LAUGHLIN.

On motion of Mr. ROSS, of Pennsylvania, by unanimous consent, leave was granted for the withdrawal from the files of the House of the papers in the claim of T. A. McLaughlin, (H. R. No. 1567,) no adverse report having been made thereon.

LAND-GRANT RAILROADS.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the matter of land-grant railroads; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

COLONEL J. G. HEALY.

Mr. BANNING. I move, by unanimous consent, that leave be granted for the withdrawal from the files of the House of the papers in the case of Colonel J. G. Healy.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. I object to that until I can ask the gentleman a question, whether there has been an adverse report in the case or not?

Mr. BANNING. The papers asked to be withdrawn are the discharge and pension papers of this officer.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. Has there been an adverse report in the case?

Mr. BANNING. I do not make any report, but merely ask for the withdrawal of those papers.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. If there is no adverse report I have no objection.

Mr. CONGER. The officer ought to have those papers whether there is an adverse report or not.

Mr. BANKS. The rule is to leave copies on file when such copies are withdrawn.

The SPEAKER. And that rule is uniformly adhered to by the clerks.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. I move those words be added.

The SPEAKER. There being no objection the leave will be granted on condition no adverse report has been made.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

JAMES ATKINS.

On motion of Mr. CANDLER, by unanimous consent, leave was granted for the withdrawal from the files of the House of the papers pertaining to the claim of James Atkins, no adverse report having been made thereon.

FRANK A. PAGE.

On motion of Mr. JOHN REILLY, by unanimous consent, leave was granted for the withdrawal from the files of the House of the papers in the case of Frank A. Page, no adverse report having been made thereon.

WOLFF & BROWN, ETC.

On motion of Mr. LAWRENCE, by unanimous consent, (on behalf of John B. Wolff,) leave was granted for the withdrawal from the files of the Committee on War Claims of the papers of Wolff & Brown and Mary Dezevalos.

ENROLLED BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION.

Mr. POPPLETON, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill and joint resolution of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 620) for the relief of Redick McKee.

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 194) to appoint a commission to examine into the matter of contracts made by and between the United States and the Moline Water-Power Company as to the water-power at Moline, Illinois, and to report to Congress as to the same.

MONTANA LAND GRANT.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a memorial of the Legislature of Montana, asking aid in the construction of a railroad; which was referred to the Committee on Railways and Canals, and ordered to be printed.

NORTHERN PACIFIC RAILROAD.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a memorial of the Legislature of Montana, asking Congress to aid the Northern Pacific Railroad by reducing the land grants and issuing United States bonds instead; which was referred to the Committee on the Pacific Railroad, and ordered to be printed.

FORT IN COLORADO.

Mr. BELFORD, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a memorial of the Legislature of the State of Colorado, praying for the establishment of a military fort between Forts Lyon and Union, and near the line between Colorado and New Mexico; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

GRASSHOPPER PLAGUE.

Mr. BELFORD also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a memorial of the State of Colorado praying Congress to appropriate the proceeds of the sales of public lands in the several States afflicted with grasshoppers to those States, to be used in the payment of bounties for the destruction of grasshoppers; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

POST-ROUTE BILL.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. I rise to a privileged question. I present the report of a committee of conference, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill of the House No. 3628, establishing post-roads, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses, as follows:

The House agree to recede from its disagreement to section 8 and agree to the same with an amendment that said section be amended by striking out the words "place and stead" and insert instead thereof "in the name;" and the Senate agree to the same.

The Senate recede from its disagreement to sections 5 and 7 of said amendments.

The House recede from its disagreement to sections 9, 10, 11, 12.

The House recede from its disagreement to section 13 and agree to the same with an amendment to strike out all of the section after the word "mail" in the third line, and insert: "all public documents printed by order of Congress, and the name of each Senator, Representative, Delegate, Secretary of the Senate, and Clerk of the House shall be written thereon with the proper designation of the office he holds; and the provisions of this section shall apply to each of the persons named therein until the 1st day of December following the expiration of their respective terms of office;" and the Senate agree to the same.

The House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate amending the title of the bill.

The conferees of the two Houses, being unable to agree to sections 2, 3, 4, and 6, disagree to the same and recommend to their respective Houses a separate vote upon the following proposition, to-wit:

To strike out said sections and insert the following:

"The sum of $75,000 be and the same is hereby appropriated out of any unexpended balances made for the support of the Post-Office Department for the current year, to enable the Postmaster-General to obtain proper facilities from the great trunk lines of railroad for railway postal service during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878."

The conferees further agree and recommend that the bill be amended by adding an additional section establishing certain new post-routes, according to schedule hereto attached marked "A."

JOHN B. CLARK, JR.,
JOSEPH G. CANNON,
Managers on the part of the House.
HANNIBAL HAMLIN,
H. G. DAVIS,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. I ask unanimous consent of the House that the Clerk shall omit the reading of the schedule attached to the report, being an amendment merely establishing the new post-routes that have been sent in by members of the House and Senators during the latter part of this session of Congress.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks that the reading of that portion of the report relating to the establishment of additional post-routes be omitted.

There was no objection.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. In the way of explanation to the House of the agreement come to by the conferees, I will state that a conclusion has been arrived at in regard to all the amendments which were offered by the Senate, with the exception of sections 2, 3, 4, and 6, which related to an appropriation for the purpose of re-establishing a fast mail. It was found impossible for the conferees to agree to a proposition on the amendments of the Senate to the bill relating to that subject; and they agreed to disagree so far as those sections were concerned, and report to the respective Houses the proposition in the report which has been read by the Clerk, and to appropriate $75,000 out of any unexpended balances made for the support of the Post-Office Department for the current year, to enable the Postmaster-General to obtain proper facilities from the great trunk lines of railroad for railway postal services. The House part of the conference committee disagreed to the proposition to appropriate $75,000 for this purpose, and the Senate part of the committee insisted upon it. The agreement between the conferees on the part of the House and the conferees on the part of the Senate is that the House shall act upon this proposition separately.

I deem it, however, a matter of justice to state on behalf of the Senate conferees that they desire this appropriation of $75,000 for the purpose, as they allege, of increasing the postal-car facilities of the great trunk lines of railroad leading West. It is asserted by them that the facilities as they exist at present, the large postal cars having been withdrawn from the service after the withdrawal of the fast-mail train, are insufficient for the requirements of the postal-railway service; and they insist that this $75,000 shall be appropriated for the purpose of increasing those facilities during this fiscal year.

On the other hand, Mr. Speaker, it is believed by myself, at least, as a member of the committee, that the appropriation made by the post-office appropriation bill for the purposes of railroad transportation, is sufficient. I do not agree in the view that we have not already made a sufficient appropriation for the purpose of having every facility that is necessary and required by the wants of the country.

Mr. Speaker, I will ask that the report of the conference committee be adopted, and that a separate vote be had by the House on the proposition submitted in the report making the appropriation $75,000 for postal-car facilities.

I am reminded by some gentlemen around me that some explanation is necessary in relation to the section of the bill in regard to the franking privilege. The original section as placed in the bill by the Senate revived the old franking privilege, giving each Senator and each member of the House, and the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House, the right to frank letters as well as documents. The committee of conference have agreed to an amendment giving them the right to frank all public documents printed by order of Congress. It gives that privilege to each Senator and member of Congress, and the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House, and it also gives to outgoing members this right until the December following the expiration of their term of office.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the bill (H. R. No. 4261) to provide for the sale of desert lands in certain States and Territories.

The message further announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the bill (H. R. No. 4472) making appropriations for the legislative, &c., departments of the Government, and further insisted on the amendments numbered 76 and 77, and asked a further conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. WINDOM, Mr. ALLISON, and Mr. DAVIS as managers of the conference on the part of the Senate.

POST-ROUTE BILL.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Perhaps I should state in the commencement of my remarks that the post-routes established by this bill embrace those contained in the bill that passed the House at the last session of this Congress, and also those contained in the bill that passed this House about a week ago.

The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] has already stated that this bill contains a provision to restore the franking privilege so far as relates to public documents. So far as he and I are concerned, we agree upon all the amendments embraced in the report of the committee of conference with the exception of one: the one upon which a separate vote is asked. And I may perhaps say that he and I substantially agree upon that.

The members of the committee of conference on the part of the Senate, however, strenuously contend that as this bill establishes a large number of post routes, service upon which will entail great expense to the Department and the Government—there are fifteen hundred of these new routes which will not yield any considerable revenue to the Post-Office Department—the Senate conferees contend that it would be eminently just and proper that the sum of $75,000 should be taken from the unexpended balances of appropriations for this year, not a new appropriation, and applied to obtaining additional mail service on the great trunk lines, but not to re-establish what is known as the fast trains.

It is proper that I should state to the House that when the fast mail train was taken off the great trunk lines the Department contended that there were not sufficient facilities afforded by these great trunk lines to carry and distribute the mails while the trains were in progress. It is true that a forty-five foot car, with less room for distribution, would carry as great a weight of mail as a sixty-foot car, and the running of a forty-five-foot car is less expensive to the railroad company than the running of a sixty-foot car; but the sixty-foot car affords greater facilities to the Government for the distribution of mails in transit. The Postmaster-General says that if this sum of $75,000 is appropriated he will be enabled to have these sixty-foot cars run and the mail distributed upon the trains without going to the distributing offices, thus saving the expense of clerks in the distributing offices, and gaining from twelve to twenty-four hours' time in the transportation of the mails between the seaboard and the cities of the great West.

The gentleman from Missouri was not inclined to agree to this proposition, I think it is well enough, and my judgment is that probably the amendment ought to pass. Still I thought that as this whole matter had been referred to a commission we could afford to wait until next session of Congress, when that commission will report, and then we can have full time to consider the proper legislation upon the subject. But the Senate conferees insist upon this appropriation, and I submit that when we establish these additional routes, and it is but a spirit of fair compromise and substantial justice and right that this proposition to take $75,000 from the unexpended balances of appropriation for this year, to be used for this purpose, should be agreed to by the House. And if it should turn out that the Senate conferees are right in their view of the matter, perhaps nearly that amount would be saved by enabling the Department to dispense with a large force of clerks in the distributing offices, because this mail matter could be distributed upon the cars as they run.

If this amendment is voted down, then of course this bill will go back to a conference committee, provided the House sees fit to ask for another conference, and will involve the question whether or not there shall be established these fifteen hundred additional post routes, in which almost every one of us on this floor is interested, as well as the other propositions which are contained in the bill.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. I will ask the gentleman to state as a part of his remarks that this appropriation of $75,000 which it is proposed to take out of the unexpended balances of appropriations for the Post-Office Department will in all probability come out of the appropriation already made for the star service, and not out of the appropriation for the railroad service.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I suppose that in fact it will come out of the appropriation for the star service; but the truth is that there was appropriated for that service nearly $500,000 more than has been required.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. The gentleman should bear in mind that there are fifteen hundred additional post-routes established by this bill.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. That is true, but I submit to the gentleman that it will be almost impossible between now and the 1st of July next to establish the service upon these fifteen hundred additional routes. I suppose the service could be established upon some of them, but certainly it could not be upon all of them in that time.

There is one strange thing about this $500,000 surplus to the star service. Most of us are interested in the star service. It is a service that does not yield much and is a very expensive service to the Government, while the revenues of the Department are principally yielded by those sections of the country through which the trunk lines run, and they are cut short in appropriations for the wotk done, yet the policy of the Government has been to reach out its arm everywhere and promote the growth of this star service.

Mr. GOODIN. Will the gentleman state what is the extent of the franking privilege which is provided for in this bill?

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. The franking privilege is extended to all public documents, and given to outgoing Members and Delegates until the 1st of December after their term of office expires.

Mr. KASSON. I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Illinois whether the effect of discontinuing the fast-mail service has not been to throw back the service where it existed some twelve or fifteen years ago. In other words, if I understand rightly, the first great step in our progress was to have the distribution made in mail-cars instead of in post-offices. That was determined upon about fifteen years ago and was a great advantage to us in the West. It diminished the force requisite for the distributing post-offices. When the fast mail was put on, that point was preserved in connection with the fast mail. In discontinuing the fast mail the distribution in cars was also discontinued; and thus we were thrown back to the old system of mail transit in bulk and to the old system of distributing offices. That at least is my understanding. The effect of the present proposition, as I understand, is to take only one step backward instead of two, to preserve to us the benefit of distribution in the cars, saving generally one day in the delivery of letters by obviating the necessity of sending the mails for distribution to the distributing offices. Am I correct?

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. The gentleman is only partially correct. That the mail service since the discontinuance of the fast-mail trains is not so thorough as it was is true; but at the same time this service is much superior to what it was fifteen years ago.

I wish to call attention to the fact that this is not a proposition to give $75,000 to restore the fast mail. It is a proposition to enable the Department upon the great trunk lines to get additional facilities in car lengths—sixty-foot cars instead of forty-five-foot cars for the distribution of the mails. The effect of this, as I am informed, with reference to a very large portion of the mails will be to expedite them from twelve to twenty-four hours between New York and Saint Louis and other cities.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana. I wish to inquire of the gentleman whether this $75,000 additional is required in consequence of the anticipated loading down of the mails with public documents by reason of the restoration of the franking privilege.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. If my friend from Indiana had as much knowledge about the amount of matter carried in the mails as he has about almost everything else, he never would have asked that question. He would have known that the abolition of the frank made no perceptible difference in the amount of mail matter carried or in the revenues of the Department. He would have known that Postmaster-General Jewell, when there was a restoration of the frank for nine months, about two years ago, reported that it made no perceptible difference. In the large amount of matter passing through the mails of the country, the quantity that would be franked and distributed to the people for their benefit would not amount in the general bulk of mail matter to more than a pin-head in a hay-stack.

Mr. JOHN REILLY. Is it not a fact that public documents printed for the use of the people are now, for want of the franking privilege, allowed to lie here in the document-room without being sent out?

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. A great many documents, I am informed, are lying in the document-room because many members feel that they cannot afford to pay the postage upon them. Some members, I understand, pay at the rate of hundreds of dollars a year to distribute these documents.

Mr. PAGE. The amendment in regard to the free distribution is agreed to, is it not?

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Yes, sir; there is no controversy about that.

The SPEAKER. What course does the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] propose in reference to this matter?

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. I desire, in the first place, that the House shall agree to the conference report, and that then the sense of the House be taken upon the matter excluded from the report—the appropriation of $75,000 for the postal-car service.

The report of the committee of conference was agreed to.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri, moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. I now ask a separate vote on the appropriation of $75,000 for postal-car facilities. I ask the Clerk to read that part of the report touching this subject.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read, after which the question will be on the motion that the House insist.

The Clerk read as follows:

The conferees of the two Houses, being unable to agree to sections 2, 3, 4, and 6, disagree to the same and recommend to their respective Houses a separate vote upon the following proposition, to wit: To strike out said sections and insert the following:

The sum of $75,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any unexpended balances made for the support of the Post-Office Department for the current year, to enable the Postmaster General to obtain proper facilities from the great trunk lines of railroads for railway post-office service during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. I move the House insist on its disagreement with the Senate on the amendment which has just been read, and afterward I shall ask for a committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

Mr. CONGER. As I understand it, the committee agreed to report this proposition to the House for a vote.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. And that is what we are voting on.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry, and that is, to ask the Chair the effect of the vote now to be taken; if the House insists, then will not the bill fail unless it go to another conference?

The SPEAKER. The Chair presumes the gentleman from Missouri would ask for another conference. If the motion to insist is voted down, then the bill is passed as the Senate desire to have it.

Mr. CONGER. Why may not we vote on the proposition recommended by the committee?

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. My motion is the same thing precisely.

The SPEAKER. If the motion of the gentleman from Missouri is voted down, the effect will be to pass the bill in the manner the Senate desire.

Mr. FORT. But if it is not voted down?

The SPEAKER. Then the Chair presumes the gentleman from Missouri will ask for another conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. That was the intention and understanding of the conference committee, that another conference would be asked on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs on the amendment which has just been read.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 80, noes 65.

So the House insisted on its amendment.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri, moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. I now ask for a further conference on the disagreement between the two Houses on that bill.

The motion was agreed to.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER announced as managers of the conference on the part of the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the legislative appropriation bill, Mr. HOLMAN, Mr. CLYMER, and Mr. WALDRON.

SIGNAL SERVICE.

The SPEAKER also announced as managers of the conference on the part of the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the Signal Service bill, Mr. SINGLETON, Mr. BLOUNT, and Mr. WILSON, of Iowa.

POST-ROUTE BILL.

The SPEAKER also announced as managers of the conference on the part of the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the post-route bill, Mr. CLARK of Missouri, Mr. WADDELL, and Mr. CANNON of Illinois.

DESERT LANDS.

Mr. LUTTRELL. I submit the following report from a conference committee, and on its adoption demand the previous question.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill entitled "An act to provide for the sale of desert lands in certain States and Territories," having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from the amendments numbered 1, 2, 5, 6, 9, 13, 14, and 16.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 3, 4, 7, 10, 15, and 17; and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 8, and agree to the same with an amendment to strike out all of said amendment after the word "however" and insert in lieu thereof the following:

That the right to the use of water by the person so conducting the same on or to any tract of desert land of six hundred and forty acres shall depend upon bona fide prior appropriation, and such rights shall not exceed the amount of water actually appropriated and necessarily used for the purpose of irrigation and reclamation, and all surplus water over and above such actual appropriation and use, together with the water of all lakes, rivers, and other sources of water supply upon the public lands, not navigable, shall remain and be held free for the appropriation and use of the public for irrigation, mining, and manufacturing purposes, subject to existing rights

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 11, and agree to the same with an amendment to insert before the word "sum," in line 13, on the first page of the bill, the word "additional;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 12, and agree to the same with an amendment striking out all after the word "provided," in said amendment, and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"That no person shall be permitted to enter more than one tract of land and not to exceed six hundred and forty acres, which shall be in compact form."

And the Senate agree to the same.

JOHN K. LUTTRELL,
LA FAYETTE LANE,
LORENZO CROUNSE,
Managers on the part of the House.

A. A. SARGENT,
R. J. OGLESBY,
J. K. KELLY,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the report of the conference committee was adopted.

Mr. LUTTRELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. KNOTT. I rise to make a privileged report.

Mr. McCRARY. I rise to make a report from a conference committee.

Mr. KNOTT. Am I not entitled to the floor?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa makes a report from a conference committee, which has a prior right over everything, even a motion to adjourn.

SHORT-HAND REPORTER FOR CALIFORNIA COURTS.

Mr. McCRARY. I send the report of the committee of conference to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

The conference committee on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 4476) to provide for the appointment of an official short-hand reporter for the United States courts in and for the district of California, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to said bill, and that the bill, as thus amended, be further amended by adding to the second section thereof the following:

"Provided, That it shall be competent for the circuit or district court justice or judge to appoint the same person to the office of reporter in their several courts."

And that the House agree to the same.

GEORGE W. McCRARY,
PETER D. WIGGINTON,
Managers on the part of the House.

GEORGE G. WRIGHT,
T. O. HOWE,
HENRY COOPER,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The conference report was adopted.

Mr. McCRARY moved to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ELECTION FRAUDS IN NEW YORK, ETC.

Mr. COX. On behalf of the committee as to election frauds in New York, Brooklyn, Jersey City, and Philadelphia, I ask leave to make their report and that the same, with the views of the minority, be printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, they will be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. MacDOUGALL. It is understood that the report of the majority will not be printed until the report of the minority is read.

Mr. COX. It is understood that the two reports shall be printed together. The views of the minority were included in my proposition.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, that order will be made, and the report of the committee, together with the views of the minority, will be printed in the RECORD.

[They will be printed hereafter.]

THE ELECTORAL VOTE.

Mr. KNOTT. I am directed by the committee on the privileges, powers, and duties of the House to submit the preamble and resolution which I send to the desk and to ask that they be adopted.

The Clerk proceeded to read the preamble and resolution.

Mr. SAMPSON. I desire to ask the Chair whether this comes in by unanimous consent or under a motion to suspend the rules.

The SPEAKER. It comes in by the right the committee have to report at any time.

The Clerk proceeded to read the preamble and resolution, as follows:

Whereas it is not disputed that the electoral votes of the following-named States, to wit, Alabama, Arkansas, Connecticut, Delaware, Georgia, Indiana, Kentucky, Maryland, Mississippi, Missouri, New Jersey, New York, North Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, Virginia, and West Virginia, amounting in all to 184, were in conformity to the Constitution and laws of the United States cast for Samuel J. Tilden, of the State of New York, for President, and for Thomas A. Hendricks, of the State of Indiana, for Vice-President of the United States, by legally qualified electors appointed by said States, and severally in the manner directed by the Legislatures of said States, lists of which said votes were duly signed, certified, and transmitted sealed by said electors respectively to the seat of Government, directed to the President of the Senate, and by him opened in the presence of the Senate and House of Representatives, as required by the Constitution of the United States;

And whereas the evidence taken and reported to this House in pursuance of the orders thereof shows conclusively that on the 7th day of November, in the year of our Lord 1876, the following-named persons, to wit, Wilkinson Call, J. E. Yonge, R. B. Hilton, and Robert Bullock, each of whom was in all respects legally eligible and qualified to be appointed elector for President and Vice-President of the United States, were duly appointed electors by the State of Florida in the manner directed by the Legislature of said State;

And whereas the said Wilkinson Call, J. E. Yonge, R. B. Hilton, and Robert Bullock, after having been so appointed electors for President and Vice-President of the United States by said State of Florida, in the manner directed by the Legislature thereof, did on the 6th day of December, in the year of our Lord 1876, meet in the City of Tallahassee, in the said State of Florida, that being the time and place fixed by the Constitution and laws of the United States and of the State of Florida, at which the electors appointed by said State should meet, and, having so met as the electors duly appointed by the State of Florida as aforesaid, did then and there, in pursuance of the Constitution and laws of the United States, cast by ballot 4 votes for Samuel J. Tilden, of the State of New York, for President of the United States, and in like manner 4 votes for said Thomas A. Hendricks, of the State of Indiana, for Vice-President of the United States, naming in separate and distinct ballots the person voted for by them for President and the person voted for by them for Vice-President, and then and there made distinct lists of the persons voted for by them for President and Vice-President of the United States and of the number of votes cast for each, which lists were by said electors signed, certified, and transmitted by them sealed to the seat of Government, directed to the President of the Senate and by him opened in the presence of the Senate and House of Representatives, as required by the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. CONGER, (interrupting.) I rise to a question of privilege. I move to suspend the rules and that the House proceed to consider the bills on the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman cannot make that motion now.

Mr. CONGER. Why not? I believe we are not acting under a suspension of the rules.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed that we are. The Chair will ascertain the fact.

Mr. CONGER. The privilege of the gentleman from Kentucky, as I understand, is a privilege under the rules, and I move to suspend the rules.

Mr. ATKINS. Is it in order, Mr. Speaker, to stop the reading of the report?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. KNOTT] made this report from a committee which had the right to report at any time under unanimous consent, which was equivalent to a suspension of the rules.

Mr. CONGER. That is a point which was never so decided before.

The SPEAKER. O, yes; it was never decided otherwise.

Mr. CONGER. Not that unanimous consent was equivalent to a suspension of the rules, for unanimous consent is given under the rules.

The SPEAKER. Special orders are made under a suspension of the rules, and, of course, if unanimous consent is given, it is equivalent to a suspension of the rules.

Mr. CONGER. I do not see that it covers that ground.

The SPEAKER. It covers it exactly.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, and read as follows:

And whereas the evidence taken and reported to this House in pursuance of the order thereof conclusively shows that on the 7th day of November, in the year of our Lord, 1876, the following-named persons, to wit, John McEnery, R. C. Wickliffe, L. St. Martin, E. P. Poché, A. De Blanc, W. Seay, R. G. Cobb, K. A. Cross, each of whom was in all respects legally eligible and qualified to be appointed electors for President and Vice-President of the United States, were duly appointed electors by the State of Louisiana in the manner provided by the Legislature of said State;

And whereas the said John McEnery, R. C. Wickliffe, L. St. Martin, E. P. Poché, A. De Blanc, W. A. Seay, R. G. Cobb, K. A. Cross, after having been so appointed electors for President and Vice-President of the United States by the State of Louisiana in the manner directed by the Legislature thereof, did, on the 6th day of December, in the year of our Lord 1876, meet in the city of New Orleans, in the said State of Louisiana, it being the time and place fixed by the Constitution and laws of the United States and of the said State of Louisiana, at which the electors appointed by the said State should meet, and having so met did then and there as the electors duly appointed for the State of Louisiana as aforesaid in pursuance of the laws and Constitution of the United States, cast by ballot 8 votes for Samuel J. Tilden of New York for President of the United States, and in like manner cast 8 votes for Thomas A. Hendricks of the State of Indiana for Vice-President of the United States, naming in separate and distinct ballots the person voted for by them for President, and the person voted for by them for Vice-President of the United States, and then and there made distinct lists of the persons voted for for President and Vice-President of the United States and the number of votes cast for each, which lists were by said electors signed, certified, and transmitted by said electors, sealed, to the seat of Government, directed to the President of the Senate, and by him opened in the presence of the Senate and House of Representatives, as required by the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. CONGER, (interrupting.) I desire to call the attention of the Chair to the record, which shows that this committee was appointed under a demand for the previous question, which was seconded, and by a vote of the House. The record shows that, and that it was not done, as the Speaker stated, by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. The force and effect of the previous question on that question was simply to cut off debate.

Mr. CONGER. It was under the operation of the previous question that the resolution, appointing this committee and authorizing them to report at any time, was passed. The Chair has stated to the House that it was done by unanimous consent. I denied it because I found on an examination of the Journal that it was done under the operation of the previous question, and was done by a vote of the House.

The SPEAKER. The original proposition was offered by unanimous consent, which was equivalent to a suspension of the rules, and so far as the operation of the previous question was concerned it was merely to cut off debate.

Mr. CONGER. But it was by a vote of the House that the resolution was adopted, and I desire to make that point.

The SPEAKER. Well, the Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. CONGER. I desired to make the point because the Chair had made an assertion different from my statement of what was the action of the House.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the report, as follows:

And whereas the evidence taken and reported to the House, in pursuance of the orders thereof, shows conclusively that certain persons who pretended to have been appointed electors by the State of Florida, and who pretended as such to cast 4 votes for Rutherford B. Hayes, of Ohio, for President of the United States, and 4 votes for William A. Wheeler, of New York, for Vice-President of the United States, to wit: F. C. Humphreys, C. H. Pearce, W. H. Holden, and T. W. Long, who were not appointed by the State of Florida, but were falsely and fraudulently declared to have been elected, when in truth they had each and every one of them been defeated by a clear majority, as was well known by the then governor of Florida and the other canvassing officers of that State, who falsely and fraudulently made such declaration;

And whereas the evidence taken and reported to this House in pursuance of its orders further shows conclusively that certain persons, namely, William Pitt Kellogg, J. H. Burch, Peter Joseph, Lionel A. Sheldon, Morris Marks, A. B. Levissee, O. H. Brewster, and Oscar Joffrion were falsely, fraudulently, and corruptly declared to have been appointed electors by the State of Louisiana, and did falsely, fraudulently, and corruptly pretend to cast 8 votes for Rutherford B. Hayes for President, and 8 votes for William A. Wheeler for Vice-President of the United States, when in truth and in fact they had never been appointed electors by the said State of Louisiana, but had been defeated by a majority of several thousand of the legally qualified voters of said State, at a fair, peaceful, and legally conducted election, held in pursuance of the law of said State, all of which was well known to the board of returning officers who made the false, fraudulent, and corrupt declaration of their pretended appointment as electors, and who under the constitution and laws of the said State of Louisiana had no jurisdiction or authority to make any such declaration or statement;

And whereas the pretended votes given by F. C. Humphreys, Charles H. Pearce, William H. Holden, T. W. Long, William Pitt Kellogg, J. H. Burch, Peter Joseph, Lionel A. Sheldon, Morris Marks, Aaron B. Levissee, O. H. Brewster, and Oscar Joffrion were cast without any authority of law and by persons who had not been appointed electors: Now, therefore, in view of the foregoing facts, the truth of which is attested by an overwhelming array of sworn testimony, as well as the intelligence of the American people,

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the United States of America, That it is the duty of the House to declare, and this House does hereby solemnly declare, that Samuel J. Tilden, of the State of New York, received 196 electoral votes for the office of President of the United States, all of which votes were cast and lists thereof signed, certified, and transmitted to the seat of Government, directed to the President of the Senate, in conformity with the Constitution and laws of the United States, by electors legally eligible and qualified as such an elector, each of whom had been duly appointed and elected, in the manner directed by the Legislature of the State in and for which he cast his vote as aforesaid; and that said Samuel J. Tilden, having thus received the votes of a majority of the electors appointed as aforesaid, he was thereby duly elected President of the United States of America for the term of four years, commencing on the 4th day of March, A. D., 1877; and this House further declare that Thomas A. Hendricks, having received the same number of the electoral votes for the office of Vice-President of the United States that were cast for Samuel J. Tilden for President, as aforesaid, the said votes having been cast for him by the same persons who voted for the said Tilden for President, as aforesaid, and at the same time and in the same manner, it is the opinion of this House that said Thomas A. Hendricks, of the State of Indiana, was duly elected Vice-President of the United States for a term of four years, commencing on the 4th day of March, A. D., 1877.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I rise to offer an amendment to this resolution.

Mr. KASSON. I raise the question of consideration under Rule 41.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. I raise the question of order at this time that the committee has no authority to report such a resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. KNOTT] is recognized as entitled to the floor.

Mr. KNOTT. According to agreement with my colleagues on the committee, I yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LAWRENCE] that he may ask that the views of the minority be printed; and thereupon I will demand the previous question upon the adoption of the preamble and resolution.

Mr. KASSON. I want to save all rights.

Mr. GARFIELD. All points of order are reserved.

The SPEAKER. Certainly.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I rose to offer an amendment before the previous question was called.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] asked consent, before the previous question is called, to submit an amendment.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Let it be read.

Mr. KNOTT. I will hear it read.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. The point of order is reserved, whether it is in order for this resolution to be acted upon by the House.

The SPEAKER. The reporting of a resolution or a bill from a committee carries with it the right of the House to consider it.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. I do not desire to raise the question as to the right of the committee to report to the House upon this matter.

The SPEAKER. If that is not disputed, the other right attaches.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. I raise the point of the right of the committee to report this particular proposition, a proposition to declare the number of votes cast for President and Vice-President after the count has been had in the presence of the two Houses, and the joint meeting which by law was required to make the count has been dissolved.

The SPEAKER. That is a question for the House to determine. The fact is that this House as a House has never said that the votes to which allusion is made in the preamble and resolution should be counted.

Mr. KASSON. I raise the question under Rule 41, will the House now consider this resolution?

The SPEAKER. It is in order to raise the question of consideration.

Mr. WHITE. On that question I call for the yeas and nays. This report is revolutionary, treasonable, and damnable.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 146, nays 82, not voting 62; as follows:

So the House agreed to consider the report.

During the roll-call the following announcements were made:

Mr. HUNTON. My colleague, Mr. CABELL, is detained from his seat by sickness. If present he would vote "ay."

Mr. COCHRANE. My colleague, Mr. MAISH, is absent from the House on account of sickness. If here he would vote "ay."

Mr. LAMAR. The gentleman from California, Mr. PIPER, is absent on account of sickness.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

Mr. GARFIELD. I desire to put a question to the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. KNOTT.] If this resolution is in terms the expression of the opinion of the House, it is one thing; if it is a declaration that becomes the legal finding of this body, it is another. One of the resolutions (for, as I understand, there are two) says that "in the opinion of the House" a certain thing is a fact. If the gentleman will put a similar clause in the other resolution——

Mr. KNOTT. I cannot yield. I have agreed to yield to the gentleman's colleague, [Mr. LAWRENCE,] one of the minority of the committee.

Mr. GARFIELD. Very well; then we cannot allow any action on this until the gentleman will hear what we have to say.

Mr. KNOTT. In pursuance of an agreement between the majority and the minority of the committee, I now yield to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. LAWRENCE,] that he may ask leave to have printed the views of the minority. I shall then move the previous question upon the resolution.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LAWRENCE] is not in his seat.

Mr. KNOTT. Then I will yield to the gentleman from Illinois to make the same request.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. On behalf of the minority of the committee I desire to present the report of Mr. LAWRENCE, and also to offer a resolution as a substitute for the resolution reported by the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. LAWRENCE, (having just entered the Hall.) I submit the views of the minority and ask that they may be printed. They do not propose any action by the House, so that there is nothing to be done except to order them to be printed.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection, and the order will be made.

Mr. KNOTT. I now move the previous question on the adoption of the report and resolution submitted by me.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. And the substitute?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LAWRENCE] presented no substitute. As the Chair understood, he presented the views of the minority, and asked that the same be printed, to which there was no objection.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Will the gentleman from Kentucky hear my amendment read?

Mr. KNOTT. I move the previous question.

Mr. LAWRENCE. My colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. BURCHARD,] offered a substitute on behalf of the minority.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to know from the gentleman from Kentucky whether he is willing to allow the proposition of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] to be read for information.

Mr. KNOTT. I have no objection to its being read for information.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the electoral votes of the States have been counted in accordance with law, and that Rutherford B. Hayes and William A. Wheeler have been legally declared elected President and Vice-President of the United States, and that it is the duty of all law-abiding citizens to obey the law of the land.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. The minority of the committee, as I understand, desire to submit that as a substitute.

Mr. KNOTT. I do not yield for that.

Mr. PAGE. How can the gentleman decline to yield when this comes up as a minority report?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not so understand.

Mr. PAGE. It was offered by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. BURCHARD.]

The SPEAKER. There was an arrangement between the majority and the minority of the committee as stated by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. KNOTT.]

Mr. OLIVER. I ask that the resolutions of the majority be read.

Several members objected.

The SPEAKER. They have been read at this stage, and there is objection to their being read again. The question is on the adoption of the report and accompanying resolutions.

Mr. PAGE. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 136, nays 88, not voting 66; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abbott, Ainsworth, Ashe, Atkins, Bagby, John H. Bagley, jr., Banning, Beebe, Blackburn, Bland, Bliss, Blount, Boone, Bradford, Bright, John Young Brown, Samuel D. B. Walker, Gilbert C. Walker, Warren, Watterson, Wheeler, Whitehouse, Alpheus S. Williams, William B. Williams, Fernando Wood, and Young—66.

So the resolution was adopted.

During the roll-call the following announcements were made:

Mr. COCHRANE. My colleague from Pennsylvania, Mr. MAISH, is absent on account of sickness. If present he would vote "ay."

Mr. NORTON. The gentleman from Ohio, Mr. VAN VORHES, is confined to his room by sickness.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. KNOTT moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its Clerks, informed the House that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 4476) to provide for the appointment of an official short-hand reporter for the United States courts in and for the district of California.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. LANDERS, of Indiana, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to withdraw from the files of the House the papers in the case of J. E. Robinson.

Mr. HOOKER, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to withdraw from the files of the Committee on Pensions the papers of Mrs. Nettie M. Voelain.

ORGANIZATION OF INDIAN TERRITORY.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to present to the House a report of the Committee on Indian Affairs on the organization of the Indian Territory. It is requested that the report be printed and recommitted.

There was no objection; and it was so ordered.

COUNTING OF THE ELECTORAL VOTE.

Mr. FIELD. I am directed by the committee on the privileges, powers, and duties of the House in counting the electoral vote to make a further report in part, and upon its adoption I demand the previous question.

The Clerk read the report of the committee, as follows:

The committee on the privileges, powers, and duties of the House of Representatives in counting the vote for President and Vice-President of the United States report in part, that since their partial report of certain resolutions, made to this House on the — day of January last, the passage of the act entitled "An act to provide for and regulate the counting of votes for President and Vice-President, and the decision of questions arising thereon, for the term commencing March 4, A. D. 1877," and the proceedings under it, have interrupted the discussion of the said resolutions and the action of the House thereon; but that the refusal of the electoral commission constituted by the said act to hear any evidence touching the frauds and want of jurisdiction of the canvassing and returning boards of Florida and Louisiana, has made it so much the more important to affirm the said resolutions and the authority of this House over the counting of the electoral votes, and especially the right of Congress and of the House to inquire whether any votes purporting to come from a State have been cast by persons duly appointed by that State electors of President and Vice-President in the manner directed by its Legislature, and for that purpose to receive evidence of the forgery, falsehood, or invalidity of any certificate of any governor or canvasser whomsoever. The committee therefore recommend the passage of the following additional resolution:

"Resolved, That in the counting of the electoral votes of any State it is the right and duty of Congress and of this House to inquire whether any votes purporting to come from a State have been cast by persons duly appointed by that State electors of President and Vice-President in the manner directed by its Legislature, and for that purpose to receive evidence of the forgery, falsehood, or invalidity of any certificate of any governor or canvasser whomsoever."

Mr. FIELD. The arrangement between the majority and the minority of the committee was that an amendment to be proposed by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. KNOTT] shall be received or accepted, and that the minority of the committee may propose a substitute or an amendment.

Mr. KNOTT. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the preamble by adding the following:

Whereas, on the 1st day of March instant, this House refused to pass the following resolution:

"Resolved, That this House requires that the package tendered by the member from New York [Mr. HEWITT] to the President of the United States Senate in the presence of the two Houses on yesterday, and purporting to be a certificate of electoral votes for President and Vice-President in the State of Vermont, shall be opened by the President of the Senate in the presence of the two Houses, and if found to be such a certificate, the same shall be submitted, together with the certificate read in the presence of the two Houses, to the electoral commission for its judgment and decision; and that the Senate be requested to make a like order requiring the President of the Senate to open such package in the presence of the two Houses, and that until such order be made the House will not be ready to meet the Senate and proceed with the count of the electoral vote."

And whereas the rejection of said resolution may hereafter be construed as a precedent recognizing the right of the President of the Senate, when presiding at the joint meeting of the two Houses assembled for counting the electoral vote, to decide what returns or certificates he will lay before the two Houses: Therefore,

Mr. KNOTT. I also offer the following as an additional resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to ask whether the proposition which has just been read is accepted as part of the original proposition of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. FIELD.]

Mr. FIELD. Yes, sir.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. As a member of the committee I desire to say that it is not. It has never been before the committee. It is merely offered by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. KNOTT.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FIELD] holds the floor and has the right——

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. The right merely to yield to the gentleman from Kentucky to allow him to offer his proposition.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York has the right to yield to allow it to be offered, but not to accept it as part of the committee's report.

Mr. KNOTT. I call for the reading of the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, (1) That the Constitution of the United States does not confer upon the President of the Senate the power to examine and ascertain the votes to be counted as the electoral votes for President and Vice-President of the United States; (2) that the only power which the Constitution of the United States confers upon the President of the Senate in respect to the electoral vote for President and Vice-President of the United States is to receive the sealed lists transmitted to him by the several electoral colleges, to keep the same safely, and to open all the certificates, or those purporting to be such, in the presence of the Senate and the House of Representatives; (3) that the Constitution of the United States does confer upon the Senate and the House of Representatives the power to examine and ascertain the votes to be counted as the electoral votes; (4) that, in the execution of their power in respect to the counting of the electoral votes, the House of Representatives is at least equal with the Senate; (5) that in the counting of the electoral votes no vote can be counted against the judgment and determination of the House of Representatives.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. On behalf of the minority of the committee, I offer an amendment to the resolution reported by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FIELD] from the committee.

The SPEAKER. Is it an amendment to the original text?

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. The amendment will be read.

The Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

Amend the resolution by adding:

"Affecting the genuineness or proper authentication of such certificates, but not for the purpose of questioning the number of votes by which, as shown from the certificates of duly authorized canvassing officers of the State, the electors may have been appointed."

Mr. FIELD. I now demand the previous question on the original resolution and the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois, and upon the proposition offered by the gentleman from Kentucky in the nature of a substitute.

Mr. KASSON. I wish to call for a division of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. If the gentleman from New York insists on the motion for the previous question before the original proposition, as it will read if amended as I propose, is read, I must modify it so as to make it a substitute for the entire proposition. I ask that the resolution as it will read if amended be read.

The SPEAKER. The Chair suggests to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FIELD] that he will expedite the matter by allowing the resolution, as it will read, if amended, to be read.

Mr. FIELD. I have no objection to that.

Mr. WALLING. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I do not understand that the proposition of the gentlemen from Kentucky [Mr. KNOTT] was offered as a substitute but as an addition to the proposition offered by the gentleman from New York, and that it was accepted by him.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York has no right as a member of the committee to accept the amendment; it comes in in the nature of an amendment.

Mr. WALLING. Then, that being the fact, I make a further inquiry whether or not the proposition of the gentleman from Kentucky is the first proposition before the House?

The SPEAKER. The first amendment to be voted on is the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BURCHARD] to the original proposition; after which the question will be upon the substitute of the gentleman from Kentucky. Then the House will be able to vote upon all three propositions. The Clerk will now read the resolution as it will stand if the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois be adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That in the counting of the electoral votes of any State it is the right and duty of Congress and of this House to inquire whether any votes purporting to come from a State have been cast by persons duly appointed by that State as electors for President and Vice-President, in the manner directed by its Legislature; and for that purpose to receive evidence of any forgery, falsehood, or invalidity of any certificate of any governor or canvasser whatever affecting the genuineness or proper authentication of such certificate, but not for the purpose of questioning the number of votes by which, as shown by the certificate of duly authorized canvassers of the State, the electors may have been appointed.

Mr. BANKS. I desire to state one of the reasons why this side of the House voted against the resolution of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. KNOTT.] The credit of the House requires that this statement should be made.

Mr. FIELD. I will yield, certainly, with the understanding that the same privilege shall not be asked by any other gentleman.

Mr. BANKS. I voted and other gentlemen on this side of the House voted against the resolution of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. KNOTT] because it made a demand and contained a threat which the Senate of the United States could not receive.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. Allow me to say one word in explanation of my amendment. I find that upon this side of the House gentlemen do not understand it, and I appeal to the gentleman from New York to allow me a moment to explain the effect of the amendment which I propose to this proposition, so that it may be intelligible to the House.

Mr. FIELD. I do not propose to say anything myself, and therefore I cannot yield. I must insist on the demand for the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered, being upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BURCHARD] to the resolution of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. FIELD.]

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. Upon that question I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 84, nays 122, not voting 84; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, George A. Bagley, William H. Baker, Ballou, Banks, Bell, Bradley, William R. Brown, Horatio C. Burchard, Burleigh, Buttz, Cannon, Caswell, Chittenden, Conger, Crapo, Crounse, Danford, Darrall, Denison, Dobbins, Eames, Evans, Flye, Foster, Freeman, Frye, Garfield, Hale, Haralson, Benjamin W. Vance, Waddell, Walling, Walsh, Warner, Erastus Wells, Whitthorne, Wigginton, Wike, James Williams, Jere N. Williams, Willis, Benjamin Wilson, and Yeates—122.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Abbott, Anderson, John H. Baker, Bass, Beebe, Bel-

ford, Blair, Buckner, Samuel D. Burchard, Cabell, Campbell, Candler, Carr, Cason, Cate, Caulfield, Chapin, Culberson, Cutler, Davy, Dibrell, Douglas, Dunnell, Durand, Eden, Egbert, Felton, Fort, Goodin, Hancock, Haymond, Abram S. Hewitt, Goldsmith W. Hewitt, Hill, Hoar, Hoge, Holman, Humphreys, Frank Jones, Kehr, Kimball, King, Lamar, Lane, Lewis, Lynch, Maish, Metcalfe, Miller, Milliken, Morgan, Morrison, O'Brien, Pierce, Piper, Potter, Powell, Pratt, Purman, Reagan, Miles Ross, Rusk, Schleicher, Schumaker, Singleton, Stephens, Stevenson, Martin I. Townsend, Washington Townsend, Van Vorhes, Waldron, Charles C. B. Walker, Gilbert C. Walker, Ward, Warren, Watterson, Wheeler, Whitehouse, Willard, Alpheus S. Williams, William B. Williams, Wilshire, Fernando Wood, and Young—84.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

During the call of the roll the following announcements were made:

Mr. COCHRANE. I desire to state that my colleague, Mr. MAISH, is absent from the House on account of sickness.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. My colleague, Mr. HOAR, is absent from the House on account of indisposition; if present he would vote "ay."

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, informed the House that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 4616) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes.

The message further announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 4188) making appropriations for fortifications and for other works of defense, and for the armament thereof, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House was requested, the bill (H. R. No. 4691) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. POPPLETON, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 3925) relating to the production of fruit brandy, and to punish frauds connected with the same.

COUNTING THE ELECTORAL VOTE.

The House resumed the consideration of the preamble and resolution reported by Mr. FIELD.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs upon the proposition of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. KNOTT,] to add to the original proposition what has been read.

Mr. KASSON. I would inquire whether, if the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. KNOTT] should be adopted, there would still remain the right, at the next stage of the proceedings, to call for separate votes upon the several propositions?

The SPEAKER. There would be that right.

Mr. YOUNG. I ask for a separate vote upon the first three propositions.

Mr. KEHR. I desire a separate vote on the original preamble and resolution.

The SPEAKER. That will be in order.

Mr. BLAND. Is it in order for me to ask for a separate vote on the original preamble and resolution?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. KNOTT. Is it in order now for me to withdraw the amendments I have offered?

The SPEAKER. It would not be in order, except by unanimous consent, as the previous question is now operating.

Mr. KNOTT. Then I ask unanimous consent to withdraw both the amendments I have offered.

Mr. CONGER. I believe I must object.

Many members on both sides of the House. "O, no!" "Let them be withdrawn."

Mr. CONGER. At the request of my democratic friends, I will withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has many such. [Laughter.]

Mr. CONGER. I think I must ask the Chair to withdraw his remark.

The SPEAKER. And the Chair declines to do so. [Laughter.]

Mr. CONGER. Then I shall have to appeal from the statement made by the Chair, which I understood to be that I had not "any such."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman misunderstood the Chair; the remark was that the gentleman had "many such."

Mr. CONGER. I still think the Chair is mistaken, [laughter,] but I will not appeal from his statement.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is certain as to one.

No objection being made, the amendments of Mr. KNOTT were withdrawn.

Mr. FIELD. I call for a vote on the original proposition.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. I ask that the resolution accompanying the report be read.

The resolution was read as follows:

Resolved, That in the count of the electoral votes of any State, it is the right and duty of Congress and of this House to inquire whether any votes purporting to come from a State have been cast by persons duly appointed by that State electors of President and Vice-President, in the manner directed by its Legislature; and for that purpose to receive evidence of the forgery, falsehood, or invalidity of any certificate of any governor or canvasser whomsoever.

The report and accompanying resolution were adopted.

Mr. FIELD moved to reconsider the vote last taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BLOUNT submitted a report; which was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 4616) making appropriations for the naval service for the year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 6 and 10.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 8, and 11, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment striking out the sum therein named, and inserting in lieu thereof "$6,600,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3, and agree to the same, with an amendment adding at the end of the paragraph the following:

Provided, That $100,000 of the above sum shall be available for and be expended by the Bureau of Provisions and Clothing for provisions; which sum shall be immediately available.

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 4, and agree to the same, with an amendment striking out the sum named therein and inserting in lieu thereof "$65,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5, and agree to the same, with an amendment striking out the sum named therein and inserting in lieu thereof "$20,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 7, and agree to the same, with an amendment striking out the sum named therein and inserting in lieu thereof "$1,750,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 9, and agree to the same, with an amendment striking out the sum therein named and inserting in lieu thereof "$942,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

JAMES H. BLOUNT,
JOHN T. HARRIS,
EUGENE HALE,
Managers on the part of the House.

A. A. SARGENT,
GEORGE S. BOUTWELL,
R. E. WITHERS,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. BLOUNT. I desire to say that this bill, as agreed upon by the conference committee, differs very little from the corresponding bill as agreed upon by the two Houses at the last session. As a matter of course there have been points of difference, and the conclusions reached have not been entirely in accordance with the views of the House as expressed in its bill; but the results approach very nearly to that bill. The chief difference is in reference to the pay of the Navy. The Secretary of the Navy, supported by the Senate and the Senate committee, insisted upon $7,250,000 for the pay of the Navy. The House and its committee thought $6,250,000 a proper sum. The conference committee has agreed upon $6,600,000.

Under the Bureau of Construction and Repair the House bill provided for an appropriation of $1,500,000. The Senate insisted upon $3,300,000. The conference committee has agreed upon $1,750,000, being exactly the sum appropriated in the bill of last year.

Under the Bureau of Steam Engineering the House appropriated $800,000. The Senate insisted upon $2,000,000. The conference committee has agreed upon $942,000.

These are the large items upon which differences arose. The others are minor items. The bill, I repeat, is, except as to the pay of the Navy, substantially the bill passed at the last session.

Unless some gentleman desires to say something on this report, I call for the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the report was adopted.

Mr. BLOUNT moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

COMMERCIAL RELATIONS.

Mr. BALLOU. The Committee on Printing have directed me to report back the annual report of the Secretary of State on the commercial relations of the United States with foreign nations during 1876, and to move that it be referred to the Committee on Commerce, and that the usual number of copies be ordered to be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

DIGEST OF INTERNATIONAL LAW.

Mr. BALLOU, from the Committee on Printing, reported back the following resolution, with a recommendation that it be concurred in:

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring,) That of a digest of the opinions of the Attorneys-General and of the decisions of the Federal courts with reference to international law and kindred subjects, prepared at the Department of State, there be printed, in addition to the usual number, 500 copies for the use of the Senate, 1,500 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 1,000 copies for the use of the Department of State.

The resolution was concurred in.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ATKINS. I move that the amendments of the Senate to the Army appropriation bill be taken from the Speaker's table and non-concurred in, and that a conference with the Senate be asked.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

The Speaker announced as the conferees on the part of the House Mr. ATKINS, Mr. WELLS of Missouri, and Mr. FOSTER.

RECESS.

Mr. HURD. I move that the House take a recess till nine o'clock this evening.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that in all human probability it will be necessary for the House to sit during the entire night; and the clerks desire time to have the bills enrolled.

The motion of Mr. HURD was agreed to; and accordingly (at five o'clock p. m.) the House took a recess till nine o'clock p. m.

AFTER THE RECESS.

The House resumed its session at nine o'clock p. m.

REAL-ESTATE POOL.

Mr. GLOVER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to introduce the testimony taken before the Committee on the Real-Estate Pool and the Jay Cooke & Co.'s Indebtedness and now ask that it be printed. I wish to say that I have omitted from the testimony that part of the investigation which has reference to Mr. GARFIELD. The order to print only applies to the investigation we took last year, finishing what we then had not time to complete.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I object.

Mr. GARFIELD. I wish to make a single remark if the House will indulge me. As I said yesterday, excepting a single deposition which I have seen, I do not know the contents of the testimony the gentleman desires to have printed; but I understand it relates to a subject five years old, and perfectly well known. I ask nothing—no exception as to myself; let nothing be suppressed which relates to me.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri states there is an omission of that testimony.

Mr. GARFIELD. I desire no exception or omission.

Mr. GLOVER. The omission of this testimony does not come from any application on the part of General GARFIELD, but inasmuch as there are other witnesses who think they have been implicated and have not had an opportunity to be heard, I have concluded to withdraw that testimony, and the order to print does not embrace it.

Mr. GARFIELD. I am glad to hear the gentleman say that, but I do not wish anything suppressed on my account.

Mr. GLOVER. Not at all. I wish to have printed testimony received on other matters, and there is no objection from the committee.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I do not think more of General GARFIELD than I do of other citizens. In my judgment we have had too much of this thing already, and I object.

Mr. GLOVER. I do not know what the gentleman means by that remark. I do not know why there is objection on his part, especially to the printing of this testimony—why there is any objection to printing this more than any other testimony which has been reported from committees.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I have done it repeatedly.

Mr. GLOVER. What is the ground of objection?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I will tell the gentleman the ground of my objection. I object to the system by which we have investigated citizens, in their absence taking hearsay evidence. I would just as readily agree to have a new sort of rattlesnake brought into this country as to have such a system further carried on.

Mr. GLOVER. Does the gentleman say there is any such thing contained in this testimony?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Will you say on your responsibility as a member that no hearsay testimony has been taken by your committee which is now asked to be printed?

Mr. GLOVER. This has been taken in open day. I do not know there is anything there which I can call to mind reflecting upon anybody who has not had opportunity to be heard.

Mr. BANKS. If there is anything affecting the reputation of any man in the House, and he has not had an opportunity to rebut it, I do not think any such hearsay testimony should be printed.

Mr. GLOVER. There is nothing, I think, in this testimony which relates to any member.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. If anything relates to any member he should have notice of it. Or anything relating to any ex-member of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires gentlemen to be seated, so the House may know what is going on.

Mr. BANKS. It is not the right of this House——.

The SPEAKER. Gentlemen must be seated or business will be suspended.

Mr. WELLS, of Mississippi. I rise to object to the printing of this testimony.

Mr. GLOVER. Do I understand there is any objection?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Yes; I must object.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced the passage of a bill (H. R. No. 4433) making appropriations for the payment of claims reported allowed by the commissioners of claims under the act of Congress of March 3, 1871, with an amendment in which concurrence was requested.

It further announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the bill (H. R. No. 3628) to establish post-roads, and had receded from sections 2, 3, 4, and 6, of the Senate amendment numbered 604, disagreed to by the House of Representatives.

It further announced the passage of the following bills without amendment:

An act (H. R. No. 4418) to pay William L. Scruggs, late minister to Bogota, from October 10 to November 21, 1876;

An act (H. R. No. 3833) for the relief of John W. Hall;

An act (H. R. No. 4276) to authorize the appointment of a sergeant in the Signal Corps as second lieutenant in the Army;

An act (H. R. No. 515) for the relief Samuel E. Garland and Frank M. Hoppin;

An act (H. R. No. 4475) to remove the political disabilities of Joel S. Kennard, of Savannah, Georgia; and

An act (H. R. No. 3892) to remove the political disabilities of George Watson Carr, a citizen of the State of Georgia.

It further announced the passage of the following bills; in which concurrence was requested:

An act (S. No. 1293) to remove the political disabilities of Theophilus H. Holmes, of North Carolina; and

An act (S. No. 1292) to remove the political disabilities of John M. Haden, of Galveston, Texas.

MRS. REBECCA MAXWELL.

Mr. BANNING. I ask that by unanimous consent the Committee of the Whole be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 3349) granting a pension to Mrs. Rebecca Maxwell, widow of the late Colonel O. C. Maxwell, One hundred and ninety-fourth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and that the same be now put upon its passage. This bill has been recommended by the Committee on Invalid Pensions. It has been in the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar for some time, and I ask unanimous consent that it be now passed.

The bill was read. It authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Rebecca Maxwell, widow of the late Colonel O. C. Maxwell, One hundred and ninety-fourth Ohio Volunteers.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. RUSK. Has that bill been before the Committee on Invalid Pensions?

Mr. BANNING. I stated a moment ago that the bill has been before the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and by that committee has been reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

MISSISSIPPI LEVEES.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ELLIS] is recognized for a motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. ELLIS. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the bill (H. R. No. 3430) to repair and rebuild the levees of the Mississippi River and to reclaim the alluvial lands thereof, to improve it navigation, and promote and protect its commerce, be passed.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HOLMAN. I rise to make a privileged report. I submit the report of the committee of conference on the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

The Clerk read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill of the House No. 4472, making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have been unable to agree.

WILLIAM S. HOLMAN,
HIESTER CLYMER,
HENRY WALDRON,
Managers on the part of the House.

WILLIAM WINDOM,
W. B. ALLISON,
H. G. DAVIS,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. HOLMAN. In the course of the proceedings between the two Houses this bill is now in the custody of the House, and the House will have occasion to act prior to the action of the Senate. The managers upon the part of the two Houses are not able to agree. The managers on the part of the Senate still insist upon their amendment to the pending bill fixing the salary of the President at $50,000 per annum, while the managers on the part of the House still adhere to the views which have been expressed by the House in favor of fixing the salary of the President at $25,000.

In this emergency, this being a report of inability on the part of the conference committee to agree, it is for the House to determine whether it will recede from its disagreement, or whether it will insist upon its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and ask a further conference, or whether the House will adhere. If the House recedes, that passes the bill. If the House insists upon its disagreement and asks a further conference, the probabilities are that the conferees on the part of the two bodies will be compelled to make the same report again, that they are not able to agree. If the House, on the other hand, shall adhere to its disagreement, that is the end of this bill. In the event of the House determining to adhere then the bill fails.

I think, sir, it is proper, inasmuch as there are but a few hours left in which legislative proceedings may take place, and inasmuch as it is not desirable that the House should at once put an end to all hopes of the passage of the bill by determining to adhere, and inasmuch as the House manifestly does not desire to recede from its disagreement, I think it is proper that a further effort be made to bring about a reconciliation between the two Houses on this question consistently with the views of the House.

I therefore think, sir, that I ought simply to make a motion that the House insist on its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and ask for a further conference on the bill. I submit that motion, but I shall not call the previous question on it at present, if any gentleman desires to move either that the House recede from its disagreement or that the House adhere to its disagreement.

Mr. LAWRENCE. We will do whatever you say is right.

Mr. DUNNELL. I move that the House recede.

Mr. HOLMAN. I now call the previous question on my proposition and that of the gentleman from Minnesota, [Mr. DUNNELL.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] moves that the House insist on its disagreement. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DUNNELL] moves that the House recede. The vote will be first taken on the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. DUNNELL. I will withdraw my amendment, so as to allow another committee of conference.

Mr. FOSTER. I wish to be heard only for a moment. Mr. Speaker, the statement of the gentleman from Indiana appears, I think, to convey the impression that the Senate has undertaken an innovation. The salary of the President is fixed now at $50,000; and this is the old question that we fought over last year whether or not we would legislate on the question of salaries in an appropriation bill. The House proposes to change existing legislation.

I understood the gentleman to say that the House had fixed one salary and the Senate another, as if this was a question simply of fixing the salary upon an appropriation bill between the two Houses.

Mr. HOLMAN. The House by this bill fixed the salary of the President at $25,000 a year, and they determined on that at an early day in the session when it was still uncertain who would be the President of the United States for the next four years.

Mr. CLYMER. I desire to suggest to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FOSTER] that he will remember, as the House and the country will remember, that the increase in the salary of the President from $25,000 to $50,000 was made on an appropriation bill just four years ago this night.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not dispute that.

Mr. CLYMER. I say further, when we are threatened with a veto, that the President of the United States did not hesitate to sign a bill reducing all the salaries which had been raised at the time his salary was raised, and I trust he will not so far forget himself and the record he has made as to attempt in this instance to defeat the wishes of the people as expressed through the House, their immediate repre-rerepresentatives.

Mr. FOSTER. The gentleman will not understand me as having made an argument one way or the other. All I wanted was that the statement of the gentleman from Indiana should be corrected.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman from Ohio is substantially correct in one respect. Four years ago, on this same appropriation bill, the salary of the President of the United States was increased from $25,000 to $50,000. The House now proposes to fix it at $25,000, in the same appropriation bill, while the Senate insists on making it $50,000, and the House early in the session passed a bill fixing it at $25,000, at a time when the presidential question and the question who would occupy the presidential chair was in suspense.

Mr. FOSTER. The gentleman from Indiana repeats the statement to which I objected, that the Senate insists on making the salary $50,000. He repeats that statement, when the statement he should make is that the Senate insists on maintaining the salary at the point where it now is.

Mr. HOLMAN. I now call the previous question unless some gentleman wishes to move either that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment or adhere to it.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I make the motion to adhere, because I do not wish this question postponed until members are absent and this thing to be stolen through the House.

Mr. DUNNELL. I withdrew the motion to recede because it was evident that there was a desire that another committee of conference should be appointed to endeavor to settle this question.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I will withdraw my motion to adhere if the motion made by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] was made in good faith.

Mr. HOLMAN. Of course the gentleman does not suppose that there is any bad faith about the matter.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I am afraid that, if the matter is postponed to a late hour in the session, this provision may be stolen through the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then let the gentleman make his motion if he desires to do it; otherwise I shall call the previous question.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Will the gentleman from Indiana allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Suppose that this bill fails, is it not true that the salary cannot be cut down for the next four years?

Mr. HOLMAN. O, yes; that is true. I call the previous question on my motion to insist on the disagreement to the amendments of the Senate, and ask a further conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I withdraw my motion to adhere for the purpose of letting the House vote on that question.

The question was taken on Mr. HOLMAN'S motion; and on a division there were—ayes 77, noes 72.

So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the motion was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to make a still further report from a committee of conference on the Post-Office appropriation bill.

The Clerk read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 4187) making appropriations for the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate, numbered 12, and agrees to the same, with an amendment making the sum $9,250,000; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 13, and agree to the same, with an amendment making the sum $150,000; and the Senate agree to the same.

The House recedes from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 33, and agrees to the same, with an amendment making the sum $2,939,725; and the Senate agrees to the same.

WM. S. HOLMAN,
CHARLES FOSTER,
HIESTER CLYMER,
Managers on the part of the House.

WM. B. ALLISON,
T. G. DAVIS,
HENRY L. DAWES,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. HOLMAN. The points of disagreement between the two Houses when the last conference report was made upon this bill involved three subjects; first, an increase of the appropriation for the transportation of the mails by railroads from $9,000,000 to $9,600,000, and the two subsidy appropriations of $500,000 each, one to the New Orleans and Brazilian mail steamship line, and the other to the steamship line from San Francisco to the ports of China and Japan. By the action of the Senate in receding from the two last amendments, providing for the subsidies of $500,000 each, those two subjects have been eliminated from the contest between the two Houses.

The House conferees were impressed with the belief that $9,000,000 was a sum amply sufficient to meet the demands of the Post-Office Department for the purpose of securing the transportation of the mails throughout the United States by railroads with the utmost facility. After long and patient effort to secure an agreement, the conferees on the part of the two Houses have agreed that instead of appropriating $9,600,000, as insisted upon by the Senate, the sum to be appropriated shall be $9,250,000. While believing that the sum of $9,250,000 is a larger sum than ought to be appropriated, yet for the purpose of coming to an adjustment which will secure the passage of this bill at this late hour of the session the House managers have agreed that the appropriation for this purpose shall be increased by the sum of $250,000.

I desire to say that if there was ample time in which to perfect this and other appropriation bills during this session I think that this concession should not be made. But for the purpose of avoiding the necessity—not desirable either on the score of public quiet, the interests of business, or the interest of economy—for a called session of Congress, in order to avoid that, the conferees on the part of the House have consented to this concession, making the appropriation for that purpose $9,250,000.

This makes a deficiency for the Post-Office Department for the coming year $2,939,725, the smallest deficiency in the revenues of the Post-Office Department that has occurred for many years. That is a better showing than has been presented to Congress for a number of years. I now call the previous question on agreeing to the report of the committee of conference.

Mr. BUCKNER. I desire to inquire of the gentleman from Indiana

[Mr. HOLMAN]—I did not hear distinctly his statement upon that part of the report—what has been done by the conference committee in regard to the subsidies for steamship lines?

Mr. HOLMAN. The Senate has receded from both its amendments granting subsidies, and so the committee have reported to the House. The only matter involved in this report is the amount paid to railroad companies, which is increased from $9,000,000 to $9,250,000. I now call the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the report of the committee of conference was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the report of the committee of conference was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CONDITION OF APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to say that there are two appropriation bills still remaining to be acted upon, the sundry civil appropriation bill and the Army appropriation bill. It is believed, at least the hope is indulged, that within two hours the conference committee of the two Houses may be able to agree on the sundry civil appropriation bill and will be able to report it to the two Houses. It, is, therefore very desirable that the House remain in session.

MISSISSIPPI LEVEES.

Mr. ELLIS. I move to suspend the rules and pass House bill No. 3430, to repair and rebuild the levees of the Mississippi River, and to reclaim the alluvial lands thereof, to improve its navigation, and promote and protect its commerce.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the sum of $4,202,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose of repairing and rebuilding the levees of the Mississippi River, thereby reclaiming from inundation by its waters the alluvial lands of its delta, deepening its channel for commercial purposes, closing its crevasses, and thereby protecting and promoting its commerce, as follows, to-wit:

Seventy-five thousand dollars in the State of Illinois.

Five hundred thousand dollars in the State of Missouri.

One hundred thousand dollars in the State of Tennessee.

One million two hundred and eighty thousand dollars in the State of Arkansas.

Four hundred and forty-seven thousand dollars in the State of Mississippi.

One million eight hundred thousand dollars in the State of Louisiana.

SEC. 2. That the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army, under the direction of the Secretary of War, shall have sole and exclusive direction of the work to be performed, and the expenditures to be made under the provisions of this act; that as soon as practicable after the passage of this act, and after proper advertisement by the Secretary of War, upon estimates to be furnished by the Chief of Engineers, the work herein provided for shall be let to the lowest bidder or bidders, in such sections and quantities as the Chief of Engineers may deem proper; that such contractors or bidders, before they enter upon their contracts, shall furnish bond, with good and solvent sureties, in favor of the United States, in an amount equal to one-third of their entire contract, for the faithful performance of the work contracted for; and in no case shall the full amount agreed upon be paid to any contractor; and until his entire contract is performed and the work done under it surveyed and accepted by the Chief Engineer, or some officer designated by him, 20 per cent. of said entire amount shall be retained; after which survey and acceptance the residue of 20 per cent. shall be paid to said contractor.

SEC. 3. That all estimates required, and all surveys, plans, and locations of said levees, and for their construction, shall be made by the Chief of Engineers, or under his direction by such engineers of the corps as he may designate, or by such citizen civil engineers as he may see fit to employ.

SEC. 4. That no portion of the moneys herein appropriated shall ever be applied to the payment of any debts or obligations incurred by any State or other local levee company or corporation or authority, nor for compensation for any work other than that performed under the provisions of this act, nor for any other purpose than that contemplated and provided for herein.

SEC. 5. That on or before the 1st day of January, 1877, the Secretary of War shall submit to Congress a full and complete report of the manner in which the work contemplated by this act has been performed, and in what manner the moneys herein appropriated have been expended.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move that the House take a recess for one hour.

Mr. SAYLER. I hope that will not be done.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of Mr. HOLMAN, Mr. CLYMER, and Mr. FOSTER as the conferees on the part of the House in the further conference between the two Houses on the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. HARRIS, of Georgia, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committeehad examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (S. No. 1128) to extend for two years the act establishing the board of commissioners of claims and the acts relating thereto.

Mr. BAKER, of Indiana, from the same committee, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 4476) to provide for the appointment of official short-hand reporters in and for the courts of the United States.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Leave for withdrawal of papers was granted in the following cases, no adverse reports having been made:

To Mr. WILLIAMS, of Michigan, in the case of W. A. Rease; and

To Mr. SAYLER, in the case of Dr. Tumbleby.

RECESS.

The question then recurring on the motion of Mr. HOLMAN that the House take a recess for one hour, it was not agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed a bill of the following title, with an amendment in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (H. R. No. 2952) authorizing the Commissioner of Patents to rehear the application of Stephen V. Benét for patent for cartridges.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. No. 1003) for the relief of Benjamin P. Runkle, late a major on the retired list of the United States Army; and

A bill (S. No. 1127) for the relief of J. B. McCullough.

LEVEES OF THE MISSISSIPPI.

The question then recurred on the motion of Mr. ELLIS to suspend the rules and pass the bill to repair and rebuild the levees of the Mississippi River, and to reclaim the alluvial lands thereon, to improve its navigation, and promote and protect its commerce.

Mr. HOLMAN called for the yeas and nays on agreeing to the motion; and they were ordered.

Mr. MILLS. I desire to know the question we are to vote upon.

The SPEAKER. It is a bill appropriating $4,200,000 to repair and improve the levees of the Mississippi River.

Mr. ELLIS. This appropriation is to be divided between six States.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 72, nays 113, not voting 105; as follows:

During the vote,

Mr. COCHRANE stated that his colleague, Mr. MAISH, was absent from the House on account of sickness.

Mr. WAITE stated that he was paired with Mr. CALDWELL, of Alabama, who would vote in the affirmative, while he would vote in the negative.

Mr. STONE said that his colleague, Mr. WELLS, was absent on a conference committee.

Mr. SAYLER. I move to dispense with the reading of the names.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

AMENDMENT OF THE RULES.

Mr. SAYLER. I desire at this time to call up the privileged report which I had the honor on yesterday to submit from the Committee on Rules. It is not necessary, I presume, the report should be read again at this time. It is simply an amendment to the twenty-second rule of the House, giving to the Clerk of the House, pending the election of a Speaker, the same power that is vested in the Speaker of the House.

I do not propose to-night to discuss with my colleague from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] the question of the independence of one Congress of another, nor do I propose to discuss with him the other question as to the right of each Congress to make its own rules. Certainly in the latter proposition I fully agree with him. I have only to say, however, that almost without exception, from the beginning of our Government until the present time, Congress has been organized by the Clerk presiding during the pendency of the election of a Speaker. There have been very few exceptions to this rule, and so far as the enforcement of the rules is concerned the one hundred and forty-seventh rule provides these rules shall be the rules of the House of Representatives of the present and succeeding Congresses unless otherwise ordered; and whatever may be the power of each Congress, the custom has been to consider the rules of the previous Congress the rules of the existing Congress, unless some action to the contrary is taken by that Congress.

And without discussing the matter any further, I will only direct to my colleague from Ohio the argumentum ad hominem; I will quote himself against himself. When the gentleman who now occupies the chair proposed at the beginning of the Forty-fourth Congress a resolution providing the rules of the Forty-third Congress should remain in force as the rules of the Forty-fourth Congress, the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD,] my colleague, rose to a point of order, and his point of order was, "I object to the resolution under the existing rules, which are our rules without a declaration of this sort."

Now, Mr. Speaker, the second rule of the House——

Mr. HALE rose.

Mr. SAYLER. I do not dispute the proposition. I am arguing the custom.

Mr. HALE. Let me ask the gentleman a question. If the custom is as he believes and as he says, what is the special need of legislation on this point?

Mr. SAYLER. I will explain to the gentleman; that is what I am coming to. I only wished to get rid of the other proposition with which the proposition of the committee was embarrassed yesterday. The second rule of the House refers to the powers and duties of the Speaker, that he shall preserve order and decorum; and in order that he might be enabled to carry out that rule, it was found necessary, in 1861, to amend the twenty-second rule by adding these words: "It shall be the duty of the Sergeant-at-Arms to attend the House during its sittings," adding to those words, in 1860, these words: "to aid in the enforcement of order under the direction of the Speaker."

The one hundred and forty-sixth rule provides that all elections of officers of the House, including the Speaker, shall be conducted in accordance with these rules, so far as the same are applicable; and pending the election of a Speaker the Clerk shall preserve order and decorum. Now, precisely the same necessity which existed to amend the twenty-second rule, by placing the Sergeant-at-Arms as an executive officer under the direction of the Speaker, in order to enable him to comply with the second rule, it seems to me, renders it important we should also place the Sergeant-at-Arms under the direction of the Clerk, in order that he may discharge during this time precisely the same duties which are imposed upon the Speaker.

Mr. HALE. The point I am getting at is this: the Clerk has always presided at the organization of the House, and what is the special need now of passing any law or resolution which gives to him any additional power? The organizatien of the next House will proceed as the organization heretofore. Why then pass any additional law?

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. The confusion is so great in this Hall that I cannot hear a word of what is going on.
